Resolved Waldron, constable at New Haerlem, has requested and received his discharge from office by the mayor's court of New York City. That bench now orders the inhabitants of New Harlem "to nominate by plurality of votes two persons" from that vil- lage before the next trade, to sit as constables for the ensuing year.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 4. From the nominations delivered to the court, on the 17th, Johannes Verweeen was elected to the vacancy and at once took the oath of fidelity.—Ibid., VI: 8. For the original Harlem patent, see Mar., supra.

Jacques Coerser, who was recently named by the mayor's court as "Collector of the weekly assessment for the behoof of the sol- diers" (see May 1), reports to the court that he "made the collection last week," but has fallen so far behind in the receipts, that the surplus is scarcely enough to cover his commission. He, like his predecessor, has been allowed five percent of the collections, but he now seeks an increased allowance of seven and one-half per cent, which the court allows, binding him "to make good" any shortage "in the money to be collected."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 4-5. See Oct. 9.

This date marks the anniversary of the appointment of the first board of mayorally called "the Old Bench," which held its last session and yielded to a new magistracy the next day (v.t.).—Rec. N. Am., VII: 15-18.

The deaconcy of the city appear in the mayor's court against Timothoes Gahry, the "Vender Master" (see Nov. 29, 1666), and is called "the wages of the old deacon or doctor," which they have delivered to him and paid.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 16. This seems to be the earliest reference in the New York records to a veterinarian.

Nicolaes Bayard, the secretary of the city, petitions the mayor's court "to confirm his allowance." As "the revenue of the City is at present very small," he is "allowed from the commencement of the service four hundred gilders zeawant yearly, with promise of increase as soon as the ships" arrive in port, when it is hoped the revenue of the city will show improvement.—Rec. N. Am., VII, 17.

16. The inhabitants of New Haerlem make return to the mayor's court of nominations for overseers of their village, and the court elects Joseph Olfp, Frie Post, William Ghin, Glade Lametre, and Niels Mattson; Jan Montague is named as secretary. They, together with Daniel Terneur, the under sheriff, or his deputy, and the constable of their village, are empowered "to judge and absolutely determine all questions and matters occurring between man and man in their town and brought before them, without regard to persons, up to the sum of 200 gld. in zeawant, according to the laws established in this country, and all inhabitants of the town of N. Haerlem" are "ordered and charged duly to respect the aforesaid persons as their Overseers."—Rec. N. Am., VII, 15. On June 19, the under sheriff and the overseers took their oath of fidelity.—Ibid., VII, 21. A new court was chosen annually; for the next one, see Aug. 6, 1667. For the first court at Harlem, see Aug. 16, 1666. For the original Harlem patent, see May, 1666.

17. A new mayor, Thomas Delavall, and a new board of aldermen, have come into office, presumably by the governor's appointment on the preceding day, May 23, 1666; into the official record appears however the services of Capt. Wittett are still retained as a member of the bench. —Rec. N. Am., VII, 18. For Delavall's term as mayor, see M. C. C., VIII: 149. For brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1843), 380; Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 49.

18. The new "Becker or Kirkmeasters" having expired, the mayor's court appoints Paulus Leendertzen vander Grift and Jeronimus Ebbingh "to be Kirkmeesters of this Towne one whole year" from this date; they are to receive from their predecessors "all the Books, accounts, & what Estate" belonged "to the Church yet under their Custodie."—Rec. N. Am., VII, 18.

19. Hendrick Hendricken Ob is reappointed by the city court bench as Constable of this Towne" for another year (see June 15, 1667), after which he takes "the oath of allegiance."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 21. A few days later, Ob was chosen to be collector of the Gospellers' and "to be the Collector for the use of all persons that are to be charged with the wheat for the use of the town within the same time named as controller thereof. Their salaries were stipulated to be "six of the hundred," four per cent, for the collector and two per cent, for the controller.—Ibid., VII: 24.

20. The labourers at the weigh-house are bound by oath "not to draw out or work at any wine or beer or other strong drink without a proper permit . . . first obtained from the Collector."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 27.

21. It is ordered by the magistrates of New Harlem that no inhabitant, under penalty, shall be permitted to let any of his hogs run at large without being yoked, nor "to fodder his Cattle within the general limits," nor to "fetter his horse in the street," nor "to retain any cattle or horses that are notorious for any kind of crime or mischief."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 21. This order was passed on Sept. 8, 1667. It was made because of complaints concerning the great damage done by the Cattle foddered on the land, and also by the uprooting by hogs daily among the fruit in the gardens. —Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 43. For the earliest ordinance in New Netherlands concerning swine, see March 15, 1649.

22. The city's secretary, Nicolaes Bayard, asks the mayor's court how much commission he is to receive for the receipt and expenditure of the money of the soldiers, as there is "great loss in zeawant and extraordinary trouble in the receipt and disbursement of the same." He is allowed five per cent. of the receipt and disbursements.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 29. See also May 8.

23. The secretary is authorized "to issue forth Executions upon all Judgements of [the mayor's]Court in 3 days after the date of the Judgement."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 29.

24. Complaints to the mayor's court about the violation of ordi- nances by the bakers of the city who sold "both brown and white bread" of inferior quality and under weight, leads the court to choose Christoffler Hoogland and Hendrick Willemesen as inspectors, who are to make the rounds and in the presence of the sheriff inspect the bread.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 50. See Jan. 21, 1668.

25. The bakers of the city petition the mayor's court "to forbid the transportation of bread from the city, except that all bucksters and forestellers of bread both within and without the City . . . be abolished." The court enjoins the peddling of "any sort of bread or cakes along the houses," and allows selling "at retail in their houses," provided the bread is "of due quantity and quality," and, whereas, it is "incommodious to transport any bread or cakes from this City to the Indian plantations, in order to expose for sale and sell the same there on commisone half of this Instant."—Rec. N. Am. VI: 53. The original order does not appear in the record. Karsten Seedling, servant, and Daniel Tournear, master, appear before Jan La Montagne, "Secretary of this Town admitted by the High and Honorable the Mayor’s Court residing at New Haerlem," and "acknowledge with one another to have agreed and bargained" concerning their respective rights and duties. According to the agreement consummated, the former "promises to serve his master with all diligence in all honest and lawful service" for one year; while the latter agrees "to command his said servant in no other than honest and lawful labors, and at the expiration of the term of service to pay to the aforesaid Karsten Three hundred guilders in Swent of money, and there was the establishing of a ferry. Early in 1667, Mayor Delavall, who owned land on Van Keulen’s Hook extending to Montagnes Kill (outlet of Harlem Creek into East River just below 108th St.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 966), made certain proposals to the magistrates of Harlem, which involved the development of his own property as well as the establishment of a ferry to be used instead of the fording-place at Spuyten Duyvil. Delavall’s project included building a grist-mill and stone house upon his lot; but before undertaking it he wished to assure of the establishment of such lines of travel as would make the mill easy of access from the surrounding country. On Jan. 3, he presents the following petition to the authorities:"

First. That they make one half of the road from this place to Manhattan or New York, and that to Statue drelue be stopped up [see Feb. 22 and 26, 1669]."

Secondly. That the same rate be taken for a suitable Ordinary [travel for the convenience of persons coming and going and also for the Village]: and he promises the nails and the making of a Schouw (Ferry-boat) provided that the Ferry-man shall remain holden upon occasion to again carry the Honorable La Val.

Johann Vervelen agrees to take the Ferry and the Ordinary for six years, giving his oath therupon that he will not tap lique to the Indians and promises accommodations for travellers, such as victuals & drink, lodgings &c.

Thirdly. That it be resolved that the Inhabitants of the Town shall make the Dam, since other Towns promise to make a dam if so be he please to build the mill near them.

Fourthly. Requests to have leave to build a stone house behind his land, near the Mill & to fortify the same, as a refuge for the Village in time of need.

Fifthly. Requests leave to draw a straight fence from the fence now standing to the stone-bridge upon Van Keulen’s Hook, and to use the land and meadows so enclosed.

Sixthly. Requests that the Inhabitants of the Town shall set off the meadow land on little Barent’s Island, in case they wish to hold it; as the said Island belongs to him; but being further willing to be bound to no inconvenience, he offers them the Island provided they will free the meadows.

Seventhly. Whereas the Bronx land has been sold to him for two thousand guilders in beavers, and he thinks that it had better fall to the Town, he therefore offers to let the Town have it for that sum. To which having given consideration, to advise & make known to him."

On the following day the proposals of Delavall were considered and resolutions adopted. On the first point they agreed to stop up the Spuyten Duyvil Road, and with regard to the road to the "Manhattanas," to "make a road as far as practicable." Johannes Vervelen was accepted as ferry-man and keeper of the ordinary. They agreed to build the dam, provided they might enjoy its benefits according to usage; they agreed to the erection of a house near the mill, and to giving the mill the use of the land and meadow mentioned in the fifth point. No definite action was taken by the authorities on the Dutchman’s Island or Bronx’s land.—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 32-54. The mill-dam was built across Harlem Creek a little west of the present Third Ave., and the mill was erected near the north end of the dam, but Delavall’s return to England interfered with the plans for building the stone house.—Bickers, Hist. of Harlem, 269-70. 1667 Stoffel Michielsen, the city crier, upon his petition to the mayor’s court, "is allowed henceforth to demand and collect twenty stivers a week for each cry" he makes.—Rec. N. Am. VI: 48.

1667 In this year, John Milton’s Paradise Lost, written during the years 1668-1665, was first published.

1667 A claim for a license at the ferry at Harlem was erected during this year.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (ed. 1851), 268. The location of this ferry tavern (on the modern plan) was on the north side of 123rd St., 500 ft. west of Pleasant Ave. Vide infra, Jan. 3.

Jan. 3, 1667 One of the requirements of the patent granted by Gov. Nicolls, in extending the city to Harlem, was this: "And the said place of the ferry to be established in due time, of the making thereof, to the use of the Indians, and to be used instead of the former places of fording at Spuyten Duyvil."—Rec. N. Am. VI: 57-58.

Hendrick Obe, the collector of the excise, asks the mayor’s court how much he shall "charge for excise on cider or apple-drink." The court decides, in view of the scarcity of wine and large consumption of cider at this time, that the collector shall thereafter "levy for each anker of cider, ten stivers for Burgers excise and three guilders for tappers excise on the same."—Rec. N. Am. VI: 55-56.

The city court decides that Paulus Leundertsen vander Grift Feb. shall "be paid for lodging the soldiers from the Burgers excise at the same rate as the others" (see April 19, 1666, for rate).—Rec. N. Am. VI: 57-58.

Mayor Delavall informs the city bench that it is Gov. Nicolls’s pleasure that "this Town shall maintain for one Yeare Longer one of the Minisrs of this place," and as several persons have departed the city or are designing to do so, being persons who have been described during the last year or two by the Governor and the maintenance of the city, the court orders some of the inhabitants summoned to court, to learn if they will raise by voluntary subscriptions "the sums wth they promised the Late Yeares to pay towards the Maintainance of the Minisrs." This results in voluntary subscriptions by 26 persons.—Rec. N. Am. VI: 58-59. See June 18.

Gov. Nicolls, writing again to Gov. Winthrop, says: "I may have forgotten in my former Letters to acquaint you that I am very proud of a well in the fort which I cause[d] to be made last summer beyond the Imagination of the Dutch, who would [not] believe it till they saw it built, which produces very good water."—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 11. This well within the fort is shown on PL 21, Vol. I. It is the earliest public well of which we have any record. For a later well in the State-House-Yard, see June 19, 1671. The town was dependent upon these two wells until Feb. 18, 1677, when the common council ordered that six be made "for the publique good."

1667 Elias Doughy deeds to John Archer "four Score Acres of Land, and Thirty Acres of Meadow lying & being betwixt Brothers River and the Watting Place at ye 8th End of the Island of Manhattan. This deed was not recorded until Sept. 24, 1671. On Sept. 18, 1669, Doughy made a similar deed to the town. It is to be understood that Mr. John Archer is to have the freshest Boggy Meadow that lyeth on ye 7th South side of Westchester Path."

1668, 1669, and 1670, the town of Harlem complained that Archer was encroaching on its land and succeeded in getting judgments against him.—Ibid., I: 197, 207-6. Archer had controversies, in 1669 and 1670, with William Betts and George Lipsett in regard to his land at Fordham and Spuyten Duyvil (see July 31, 1669).—Ibid., I: 210-15. On Oct. 18, 1671, his land was ordered to be laid out by Jacobus Cortelyou, and, after the surveyor’s report on Nov 3, Betts and Lipsett were warned against trespassing on Archer’s property.—Ibid., I: 216-19. On the suggestion of Archer, Love lace instructed, on April 10, 1673, a court at the manor of Fordham "for the Decision of all Differences of Debt or Trespass between the Landlord & Tenants, or one Tenant wth another."—Ibid., I: 219-26. On Jan. 26, 1671, Jan Pieter Van de Hoven bought Spuyten Duyvil to Mathijs Nicolls, "Reserving the Royalty of the Same, with the rest of the Mannor, from the which it is nott to be divided but on the Contrary as an acknowledgement the sd Mathijs Nicolls, his heirs and assigns, are to pay . . . A meeting is held at New Harlem and a petition prepared to the governor requesting the grant of a general ground-brief or patent in accordance with the new survey made by his Excellency’s land surveyor, Mr. Hubbard. Portions of the petition are as follows: "The Inhabitants of the Town of New Harlem, . . . represent, that they are informed that a placard has been issued, that each
The mayor's court resolves to enact an ordinance for "outfitting all persons, who have powers of attorney for real estate from persons, at present residing in Holland or elsewhere, not at peace with His Majesty, to present 9's powers to Mayor and Aldermen."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 68. See Sept. 26.

Jan. Janishard, Thomas Hall, and Kier Walters are elected by the mayor's court overseers of roads and fences for one year.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 69. The number of overseers is this year increased by one. See March 20, 1666.

The carters of the city petition the mayor's court to confirm them "in their actual number and no more, in form of a Guild like the Neighboar labourers, who have no need to be hidden to cart within the city. The court grants the request for the time being and until more carters are needed in the city. Eight men, named, are then "confirmed as City carters," on condition of binding themselves "to repair to the fire on the ringing of the fire bell and to render all possible assistance in extinguishing the Bames," on forfeiture of their privileges in case of dereliction.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 70. See June 8 and Nov. 29, 1670. Cf. Peterson and Edwards, N. Y., as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 65-64.

There is still preserved at Albany a document bearing this date, concerning "A List of Lands within this City and consequently confiscated to the use of his Royall Highness during the time of the late Warre" between the English and Dutch. Among such property mentioned as "within this City," is that of Peter Hartjens, Michiel Myuen, Johannes Gillissen Verbrugg, Arent Jansz Mooema, Jacob Janszoon Moesman, Pieter Rouine and Jannet, of length 160 rods. And also "Islands in the East River," the "two Barnes Islands hereforeto belonging to Woutier van Twiller," and "Verken's [Blackwell's] Island together with about fifty acres of land on Long Island lying over an 1/2 acres."—Hist. MSS., Eng., XXII: 16-20 (Albany). Sept. 26.

David Desmarest and Joost van Olbins, of New Harlem, make arrangements with the herdsman, Now Morisse, to herd the cattle of the village. Morisse agrees to herd the "Cattle from the middle of April till all Saints day, either fourteen days before or after, as the winter may set in, or the pasture fail, and promises to make good all the Cattle that may be lost through his neglect; for the sum of Five Hundred guilders in Seawant and one half pound of butter for each cow."—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 71.

William Abrahams receives a patent (Liber Patents, II: 37, Albacay) by way of confirmation of a transport made by Jan Jansen de Jongh, dated May 9, 1664, to Pieter Nyss, since sold and transported to Abrahams, of a parcel whose location on modern maps would be at the south-east corner of Broadway and Maiden Lane.

Haage Brüvensen receives a patent upon a transport made by Dirrck Volchertsen, dated Oct. 15, 1653, to Haage Brüvensen, of a certain lot lying in Smith's Valley, between land of Lambert Huybertsen Moed and the lowestrem remaining lot of the said Dirrick Volchertsen, containing in breadth towards the Strand or Highway, 21 Rhodein land ft. and, behind, 21 ft.; stretching next to the lot of Dirrick Volchertsen and also that of Lambert Huybertsen "as they do both stretch in length, being distant the space of a 1/4 ft. from each of their houses."—Liber Patents, II: 41 (Albany).

Andries Rees receives a "patent granted for a purchase made by Andries Jochensen in the yeare 1659 of the Burgomasters and Court of this city, for a certain house and lot in the Smith's Valley, without the Strand Gate, which he afterwards transported to Hendrick Bommell who since hath sold the same to Andries Rees, the said lot by the measurement of the Surveyor, contains on the west side, 29 feet; on the east side, 11, on the north side, 95, and on the south side, 98 feet, all wood measure."—Liber Patents, II: 40 (Albany).

The carters come into court and complain that Stoffel van Laer is "employing other workmen for carting his tapiers which he desired not to do; as it is in direct controvension to the privilege accorded..." to the carters on the 16th April past [p. 9]. The defence of Van Laer is, that he hired the wagon of Kier Woltersen June by the day to ride his tan from the bush to the town at the shore and return them there to his house.” Woltersen was one of the overseers of roads and fences, which may have been the reason why the court ruled that Van Laer might continue “for the present... with his work,” whilst agreeing to promulgate “an ample ordinance on this subject.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 73–74. Such an ordinance was provided for on June 11. It limited public carting, “whether for Burgers or merchants” in the city, to those alone who were “the appointed carmen;” but anyone was “free to convey his own goods as well as all goods from without or from the bush, by land,” to the city. The public carters were allowed for each load within the city’s gates, a fine of “ten stiver,” and no more under a penalty of 15 g. for the first, double as much for the second, and deprivation of license for the third offence.”—Ibid., VII: 76.

The members of the mayor’s court bench received from Gov. Nicolls “a Commission & order Whereby the present Mayor, Aldmns, & Sheriff” are “Empowered to Continue in their respective offices [see July 30] until the 14th of July next ensuing, as more at large appears by the 9th Commission, bearing date the 11th of June 1667.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 74. They are at this date: Capt. Thomas Delavall, mayor; Thomas Willett, Obli Stevenson van Cortlandt, John Laurence, Cornelis Steenwyck, and Johannes de Peyster, aldermen; and Allard Anthony, sheriff.

The mayor’s court “established the fees of the Sheriff, Secretary, Messenger, and Attorneys” of the city, “as more fully appears by the Acte made thereof.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 77.

The mayor of Manhattan was granted the use of a meadow lying along Montague’s Kill, west of the hills of the Rocky-hook till the end of the Creek on the North side of the said Kill, for the consideration that the Church erf behind shall extend out into his house lot (erf) four rods in length and five rods in breadth, it being well understood on the North side.

On this date Montague exchanged with the town for the meadows in the Bay of Hellgate at the Great Meadow, Sherman’s Creek.”—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 74. See Sept 17, 1666.

As “divers complaints” have been made to the mayor and aldermen “regarding the non payment of the promised and fixed salary of the Ministers” of the city (see Feb 7), the mayor’s court orders, “by and with the advise of Gov. Nicolls, that “all the inhabitants of Manhattan do “arrear” their fees promptly pay up, and that the deacons of the city, accompanied by Jacques Cossaert, the city’s collector, shall exercise “all possible means to promote the collection of said arrears.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 79. See Oct 29.

Secretary Bayard requests payment of his salary, according to account amounting to fl. 285.64, which the city court allows and orders Hendrick Obe, the city’s collector, or Willem Abrams, to pay on the city’s account.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 80.

The mayor’s court resolves, “at Johannes Verweeveen’s request,” to speak to Gov. Nicolls “about the Haarlem Ferry money.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 80. The terms of a lease were determined subsequently (see July 3). For the earliest suggestion of a ferry at Harlem, see March 4, 1668.

The city was “at a Very great Charge in Renewing & Repairinge” the bridge (see plate description, I: 244). Under the Dutch government, Stuyvesant and the council had provided by ordinance that all ships landing or transporting any goods to or from the city, were to pay a tax toward “the Upholding & Repaiyring of the Bridge.” The mayor’s court now restablishes this tax, requiring masters of ships to pay a landing fee of five st. in beaver per last, and the merchants were specified fees for certain commodities. The collection of this tax is entrusted to Thomas Carvet, to be by him turned over to the secretary of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 81. See also March 5, 1672.

As a result of previous negotiations (see June 18), the city agrees with Johannes Verweveen upon terms for the lease of the first public ferry at Harlem. He is to “have the ferry for five years. Provided he Keep a Convenient house and Lodging, for passengers at Harlem.” He is to “have a small piece of Land on Brookside, about an acre and a place to build a house on,” which he is obliged to “Clear and not spoyle the meadow,” which is to “bee laid out in a piece of a Mile.” The cost is 220 fl., and for the first five years it is “to be fermad out;” but for the first five years Verweveen is to have it without cost, and if let out “to another,” then “the house” provided by Verweveen is to “be Valued as itt stands” and Verweveen be paid for it. He is also to “have the proffitance of the hyring of itt att the tyme Exprim.” Regulations are made of the tolls to be charged by him for every man, passenger, or horse or cattle. Messengers from the governors of New York and Connecticut are to “bee ferried free.” Verweveen is to “bee att the Charge of building a house on each side of the ferry,” for which Gov. Nicolls grants him free excise on whatever wine or beer he shall retain in his house for one year.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 83–84. This lease was confirmed and “settled” at a court held on July 9.—Ibid. The site of the New York landing was near the intersection of the modern 12th St. and Pleasant Ave. Verweveen did not stay long in the term of his lease; another ferry was removed to Spuyten Duyvil in 1669 (see June 2, 1669). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: See A: 942; and PL 178, Vol. III.

Claus van Elandrit, Jr., who has been “town sergeant” to the mayor’s court since the introduction of the English form of municipal government in 1665 (see June 19), is dismissed from his office for absenting himself from court. His dismissal was by special order of Gov. Nicolls, who, on this day names Henry Newton (Herry Nuton) to the vacancy, and Newto was “Sworne as Marshall of this Court.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 84–85.

Johannes van Brugh receives a patent by way of confirmation of a transport to him dated May 5, 1661, by the trustees of the orphans’ estates, of a lot formerly belonging to Hendrick Peters van Hassel, lying without the land part of the city, and east of the highway (Broadway), having on the north the land of Gerritt Jans Roon; on the east the land at one time belonging to Adriaana Cuullie, deceased; on the south, that of Jacques Prym; and on the west the before-named highway; containing in breadth on the street, on the west side, 60 ft., 10 1/2, wood measure; east side, 62 ft.; in length on the north side, 11 rods, 8 ft.; and on the south side, 11 rods, 8 ft.—Liber Patentiae, VII: 71.

An Arntzine said salary contract for a “transport,” which was a way of confirmation of a transport to him by Dirck Jansen Vandevechter, as attorney for Mary Peecck, of Albany, dated June 27, 1667, for a lot without the water part on the north side of Smith’s Valley, having to the east the house where the “wildow Lithaco live” and to the south, the Strand; west and north, the house and lot of Cornelius Johns Clapper; containing in breadth on the south side, 7 rods, 4 ft.; north side, the same; east and west sides, 10 rods, 8 ft.—Liber Patentiae, VII: 78 (Albany).

At some time between this date and the last meeting of the 30 mayor’s court, on July 16, Gov. Nicolls must have appointed a new magistrate, although no official record of such appointments has been found. At the meeting of the new court on the 17th of July, Willett appears again as mayor; only one new name is seen on the bench, Isaac Bedloe, who succeeds Cornelis Steenwyck. Johannes de Peyster, who was “abt. upon the Last Election day,” is now sworn as alderman. Hendrick Obe, who was elected constable on June 15, 1665 (q. v.), was appointed for the next year “Commencing the 24th of the Instant Month.” Capt. John Manning displaces Allard Anthony as sheriff.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 88.

Teunis Cray is appointed by the mayor’s court as public measurer of all the apples and onions that are “brought in all Barks, Sins or other Vessels” to the port of New York.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 90. Cray had held a similar office under the Dutch regime.

John Manning, sheriff of New York, is ordered to notify certain persons to surrender their powers of attorney for the management of property confiscated during the time of the late war against the Dutch (see April 26).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 2. See April 9.

Nicolls confirms Jan Jansen Daman's patent to lands on both sides of Beekman Street, north of the fort. This confirmation is recited in deeds of lands along the north side of Wall St., conveyed to Gov. Dongan in 1685, recorded in Liber XIII: 124-26, register's office. See Dec. 14, 1685; For the original grant to Daman, see April 25, 1644. For Ramaker patent, see Adenda.

A patent, by way of confirmation, is granted to Pieter Stoutenburgh, on a transport of goods. The town is to be known as New Harlem, in contradistinction to the first patent (1666, q. v.), where Lancaster is given as its changed name. The conditions of the earlier charter with regard to the establishment of a ferry, payment of tribute, and restriction of building within two miles of the town bounds, are reiterat—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 271-73.

The site is now represented by 32 and 34 South William St.—See Castello Plan, II: 298; Abstracts of Wills, III: 462. On Nov. 8, 1819, in excavating for a new building on the site of the present No. 46 Beaver St. and Nos. 14 and 16 St. William St., two old mill-stones were uncovered near the rear fence line. Five more stones, which were subsequently removed, were described in 1843 as being seen by the author. They were about 3 ft. 6 in. in diameter, and the small stones of which they were composed were held together by heavy iron rods. There is no record of a mill on any of these lots.

By another order in council, 23 Oct., 1668, this trading privilege was revoked also. (See No. 177.)

In Stuyvesant’s petition he cited the sixth article of the terms of surrender between himself and Col. Nicolls as the basis for his plea for free trade with Holland: “It is consented to that any people may come from ye Netherslands and Plant in this Country and that Dutch Vessells may freely come hither and any of ye Dutch may freely returne home or send any Merchandize home in vessels of their owne Country.” He added that the free trade would be the means of furnishing “ye Planters . . . with some necessaries, not to bee had from other parts,” and also would be conducive to “a more amicable correspondence between and Joynt endeavour for ye Maltese (sic) commodities, by ye Maltese Subjects of both Nations.”—Ibid., III: 164-65.

Stuyvesant, in an appeal to the Duke of York, offered the following reasons why the sixth article should be confirmed:

1. That since the most considerable Inhabitants of those parts (being composed of the Dutch nation) always kept a Correspondence with their friends in their own native Countries, and having received constant supplies from them, at far easier rates than from any other parts, they will not only be deprived of soe great advantages, but even Comerce itselfe since at present they have not had an opportunity to fix their Correspondence elsewhere.

2. “Since their manner of agriculture is wholly different from that way practised by the English nation there, and therefore cannot possibly expect a supply from England of those utensills relating to the cultivating of their Land, but of necessity must expect them from their own Country.”

3. “Since the Trade of Beaver, (the most desirable commodity for Europe) hath allways been purchased from the Indians, by the Comodities brought from Holland as Camler, Duffles, Hatchets, and other Iron worke made at Ulrick &c much esteemed of by the Natives, It is to be feard that if those Comodities should fail them, the very Trade itself would fall, and the fretech of Canada, who are now incroach’d to be too noerce Neighbours unto us (as but halfe a days journey from the Mohawkes) making use of their Necessities and supplying them, they will in time totally divert the Beaver Trade, and then the miserable consequence that will ensue, wee shall not have one ship from England to Trade with us.

4. “That it being most certainly Evident noe shippes from England are resolv’d to visit those parts this season, soe that unless the Inhabitants be supply’d before spring with all necessaries from Holland, It will be not only impossible for them to subsist, but they must be constrained to forsake their Tillage and seek out a Livelihood elsewhere.”

“But if his Royall Highnesse out of his tender care and compassion to his distressed subjects there, will procure liberty for one or two small Dutch vessels . . . to goe from these to New York, He will underrite somewhat more westernly; thence along the land of Symon Conan to the land belonging to ‘Old Jan,’ west-south-westery; then along by the said Old Jan’s land south-south-easterly; further easterly and by north and a little more northerly, and then east-and-by-north, and north-east-and-by-west to beginning; being 6 acres, 549 rods.

The overseers of roads and fences complain in the mayor’s court against the ten public cartmen of the city for having defaulted “one days’ time in repairing the highway about the Fresh Water,” for which neglect the overseers request the court to fine each cartmen “six gilders a week.” The court, however, holds that the cartmen were not included in the instruction, which was meant only for “the householders and planters on this and the other side of the Fresh Water;” but if in the future the help of the cartmen may be necessary “in the makings of new or repairing of old roads,” their assistance must be ordered by the mayor, if so requested by the overseers.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 49.

The king, in response to a petition from Peter Stuyvesant, orders “that a temporary permission for seven years, with three ships onely, be given and hereby is granted unto the Dutch freely to trade with the Inhabitants of the Lands lately reduced from the Dutch by the obedience of his Malts.” The king orders the Duke of York to “grant his Pass and Lycence unto Heere Peter Stuyvesant, late Generall of the New Netherlands to returne to the place formerly called the New Netherlands . . . pursuant to the Passport he had and received from Colonel Nicolls for his safe going to Holland & returne into those Parts.”—N.Y. [such a law was enacted as early as Apr. 13, 1632—Laws & Ord. of N. Neth., 32] are come to dwell within this Towne.” Hanna Ackleton replies, that when she first came, she had obtained a license from Thomas Delavall, former mayor, but could show no proof thereof; whilst Elisabeth Juel states, “she did not know of any such order.” The court then orders these women to leave the city within eight days' time, “upon penalty of 5 l. 6d. & Corporal punishment” for dereliction.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 101. Elisabeth Juel had not left the city by Jan. 28, 1668, when the court summoned her again and demanded to know why she had not departed, to which she answered she could not on account of her accouchement, “but promised to depart in ye 7th month of March.”—Ibid., VII: 114.

By referring to No. 8, Block M, and No. 11, Block Q, of the Map of Dutch Grants (C. P. 87), and to the Map of Manhattan Island in 1698, Pl. I, Vol. II, it will be seen that the New York Cotton Exchange is built upon Burger Joris's land. See also Innes, N. Am. and its People, 233.

Col. Nicollis's departure being imminent, Mr. Maverick writes for him the following testimonial in a letter to Lord Arlington, principal secretary of state: "After his abode here four yeares (where hee hath lived with great reputation and honour) hee is now returning home. I must needs accompany him with this character; that hee hath done his Maat & his Royal Highnes very considerable service in these parts having by his prudent management of affairs kept persons of different judgments and of diverse nations in peace and quietness, during a time when a great part of the world was in wars. And as to the several Nations of the Indians they were never brought into such a peaceable posture & faire correspondence, as by his means they now are."—N. T., Col. Docs., III: 174.

Gov. Francis Lovelace writes to Arlington as follows: "I have since happily accomplish my voyage and am now invested in the charge of this Royal Highness territories, and resolved the middle position of the two distinct factions, the Papist and Puritan. I should esteem it as most singular favour, if your Lp would vouchsafe to send mee some instructions how I might steer my course, as would most advance the interest of His Maat & service of His Royal Highness my most gracious master. Preparatory to which, I have received from my worthy predecessor Colonel Nicholls [sic] the character that was first writt you, and if you please but to command one of your Ls Secretaries to correspond with mee, I shall not fail to give your Lp an exacte account (so farre as I can reach) of these parts of the world."—N. T., Col. Docs., III: 174–75.

Record of his presence in New York as early as 28 March (q. v.) is found in the Winthrop Papers. In a letter to his friend Lord Arlington, dated Aug. 28 (q. v.), he wrote that he was then "invested in the charge of his Royal Highness territories," although no definite date for his change in control from that of Nicolls to Lovelace is given.—N. T., Col. Docs., III: 174–75. See also Ex. Coun. Min., II: 31.

The mayor's court received from the new governor, "a Warrant ... for the Publishing of a day of humiliation to be held in this City on Tuesday Next ensuing being the 8th of this Instant month of Septb, and was Published and fixed up at the usual places and corners. Signed by Capt. T.: I. Sr." The warrant recites that a great and unusual sickness prevails, not only throughout the land in general but in New York in particular, whereby "Some are daily swept away & many more lying on their languishing beds, expecting each hour their dissolution."

It must be acknowledged "that of manifold impieties have beene the sole cause of it not only by of great ingratitude for former blessings receiv'd but by an obstinate turn to a more divisible manner of wickedness more particularly in that inordinate & intemperate way of drinking & all manner of Impieties that attend it in those most frequent oaths, execrations & cursings to which some are lead."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 191–93. As to his disease, see Sept. 7.

Paulus Leendertsen, chamber-griff, Johannes van Brugh, and Johannes de Peyster are elected by the mayor's court as overseers of orphans or "sweetmasters" for one year.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 144. For the earliest "Guardians of Orphans," see Oct. 18, 1667.

Rev. Samuel Megapolensis writes to a friend asking aid in secur- ing from his workhouse and Hospital, a small salary..."may be paid, if necessary..." May be paid, not over 500 guilders at most, which amount is irregularly paid, "little by little... in the uncorrected money of this country... The manner also in which the above mentioned sum is collected is unpleasant and degrading, and altogether unusual in our Dutch nation. They go around from house to house to collect the salary, and you may imagine the sights and mormurings occasioned thereby concerning the ministry and the ministers. Moreover over the first year I was here, I did not receive a cent of salary, Abominations and scandalous sins are daily committed here, and remained unappeased..." I have supposed such modifications in the condition of the church that I shall no longer be required in. The labors of the ministry are now much more burdensome than they ever were before under the Dutch government; for there are now five separate places in which we must render services.

In reference to the church, and ecclesiastical matters generally in this country... little that is good can be said... I may say that the Lord begins to deal in judgement with his people. He has visited us with dysentery, which is even now increasing in virulence. Many have died of it, and many are lying sick [see also Sept. 4]. We are also threatened by the Indians... It appears as if God were punishing this land for its sins. Some years ago there appeared a meteor in the air. Last year we saw a terrible comet in the west, a little above the horizon, with the tail upward, and hanging over this place. It showed itself for about eight days, and then disappeared."—Eccles. Rec., I: 597–97. For other unusual displays of nature, see Feb. 17, 1666; Vir. Daniel Terneur, deputy sheriff; Pieter Roelofs, constable; Johannes Verweelen, David de Maret, Robert Waldron, and Kier Woutereyn, overseers.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 150.

His Majy approving the advice and Desires of the Council of Trade... for securing the Trade of the Plantations, orders that the edict of Oct. 23, 1667 (q. v.), granting permission for three Dutch ships to trade with New York for seven years, be revoked, and all pastes granted by virtue thereof be annulled. Fearing, however, that his New York subjects "may be brought to some distresse for want of necessaries which probably may not be supplied them out of England this year," and out of consideration for those who under the promise of the said passes may have been put to charge in making ready their ships, the king further orders that one ship from Holland may make one voyage this year. Other than this no foreign ship is to be allowed to trade with New York. In urging such revocation the British board of trade claimed that the three Dutch ships might carry so much "linen, Shooes, Stockins, Cloathes and other Commodities, comodily carried out of England with great advantage to this nation," as will not only supply New York but in great measure Virginia, Barbadoes, and New England as well, which would result in a great loss of customs and danger to the plantation trade and to English and Irish manufactures. Leave was later granted to one other Dutch ship and one French in, make one trip to and from New York.—N. T., Col. Docs., III: 175–83.

The governor issues certain customs regulations:

1. Home products, such as all sorts of "Prouisions, horses, Catle, Sheep, & all manner of wooden trade," for Jamaica, Barbadoes, or any of the "Caribby Islands," shall pay no customs.

Daniel Tourneur requests that the inhabitants of New Harlem shall allow him, as a companion for his services to the town, "Fifty Morgens of land lying upon Horn's Hook [see March 15], or to confirm the bargain which is made by the purchaser and the possession of the same." Eight of the inhabitants express their willingness to pay their proportion of it and six refuse.—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation). I: 108.

21. The governor's council issues an order to George Tippett against the "unlawfull Marke hee useath about cutting the Eares of Cattle soe clee, that any other Marks may be cutt off by it."—Ex. Counc. Min., I: 26.

24. About this time, while in England [see Aug. 25, 1668], answering queries regarding the planters in the Duke of York's territories in America, ex-Gov. Nicolls states, among other things, that "The Governour and Council with the High Sheriff and the Justices of the Peace in the Court of the Generall assize have the Supreame Power of making, altering, and abolishing any Laws in this COUNTRY and that none should be under the Bench, Particular Towns by a Constable and Eight Overseers. The City Court of N. Yorke by a Mayor and Aldermen. . . . Liberty of Conscience is granted and assured. . . . All Causes are tried by Justices, no Laws contrary to the Laws of England."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (470 ed.), I: 59, citing "Lond. Doc., II."

25. Commissions are granted to Isaac Bedlow to be captain of a foot company; to Christopher Hoogeland to be Lieutenant; and to Nicholas Bayard to be Ensign.—Ex. Counc. Min., II: 804-5.

In this year, Nathaniel Morton's New Englands Memorial was published at Cambridge. Based largely on Bradford's history, it was the first strictly historical work issued by the New England press.—Church Catalogue, No. 606.

The mayor's court orders "that all Persons that are Plantives in any Causes depending in this Court shall be Bound to take out at last at the Expense of what is Ordered or past in Court, each Court day, or by neglect thereof, that they shall Pay the See'y for the Copy although none[ ]e be taken out."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 164.

28. Evert Pietersen, "Schoolmaster and Precentor," comes again (see April 25, 1668) before the mayor's court and delivers an account of his unpaid salary, which he claims from the city and for which he seeks payment; also a "further allowance for his future services." He says he will leave if these concessions are not granted.

Loveclace confirms Nicolls's act of Dec. 16, 1669 (q.v.), giving freedom of worship to the Lutherans. In this he says that the Lutheran congregation has been at great trouble and expense to continue. The ordinance is a "declaration of his majesty's permission, and having at length attained to their desires there been now arrived into these parts Mr. Jacobus Fabritius to be their Pastor," he not only permits Fabritius to exercise divine worship among the congregation, on their taking the oath "to be true subjects to his Majesty," but allows them to do so unmolested. This permit is signed by both Francis Lovelace and Matthias Nicolls, secretary.—From Loveclace document in archives of St. Matthews Lutheran Church, New York. This document, dated Feb. 20, 1668, is properly 1669.—See Kretzmann, Oldest Lutheran Church in Am., 13. In about a year and a half, troubles in New York City were brought to a head by a petition presented to Gov. Loveclace, June 29, 1671 (q.v.), by "diverse of ye' Lutheran or Augustine Congregatio," charging him with "several Matt's unbefitting one of his Profession."—Ex. Counc. Min., II: 586.

Gov. Loveclace, with some of his council and others of the bench at New York, hold a court a day or two after the other orders, the following: "It is this Day ordered, that a Convenient Wagon-Way bee made between the City of New-Orkse & this place; to wth' and fentre Com'm shall bee appointed (viz. two on each part) who are to View & consider of y't most convenient Passage to bee made." The New York overseers for the current year, Thomas Hall and George Elipson, are appointed as overseers, with Daniel Turnier and Resolved Waldron, of Harlem.

It was arranged that if Thomas Hall could not be present at the meetings of the commissioners he might send John Vigne as a "fitt Person in his Place." Both the patent of 1666 and that of Oct. 11, 1667, granted to Harmon, contain provisions for building a road between the two places, but it is evident that action was delayed. The commissioners were ordered to "view the said Way" on Feb. 25, and, having decided upon the location, to "immediately fall upon laying out the Way." The "Boors" of the Bowery and parts adjacent were to "clear the way to bee left for the passage of Waggons from New Yorke to the Saw-Kill, & ye' Towne of Harlem, from thence to their Towne." It was expected that this "Way" would be laid out and cleared by the first of May ensuing.—Ex. Counc. Min., I: 26-28. On Feb. 24, Gov. Loveclace issued a warrant to the commissioners for the execution of this task, which he says "hath heretofore beene Ordered & appoincted, but never as yet was prosecuted to effect."—Ibid., I: 240-41. This road to Harlem was the beginning of the Eastern Post Road, and in part of the Kingsbridge Road.

At a meeting of the governor's council at New Harlem, it is ordered that all horses and cattle belonging to New York and New Harlem which "shall bee turned into ye' Woods upon this Island shall have a marke of Distinction upon them." All those belonging to New York, the Bowery, and parts adjacent, are to have the New York brand and those from New Harlem a New Harlem brand. A person from each place is to be appointed and sworn to mark the stock which belong to the inhabitants, and "none other."—Ex. Counc. Min., I: 18.

A committee is appointed "to view ye' Lands, & to examine into, & hear, & to determine the several Matt's & Cases in Difference between the Townes of West Chester, & Mr. Wm. Willett about Cornells Neck [Black Rock, also called Cornhill's Neck], and also between them & Thomas Hunt about his Conmagee & Watering Place upon Throgmortons Neck & what else there may bee about the Patent granted to Hugh Oneale & Mary his Wife for the Land commonly called the Joukërs Land." A footnote explains that about 1646 Adriaen van der Donck bought from the Indians, under a grant from Director-General Kieft, their unextinguished titles to the lands "as far as Papirinanim, called by our people (Sptyen du Duyvill), in Spit of the Devil." The tract was soon named "John Donck," or "Donck's Colony," and was referred to in the Dutch as "de Joukheers Land;" an English corruption of which is perpetuated in the Yankers of to-day. Vander Donck's widow later married Hugh Oneale.—Ex. Counc. Min., I: 29-30. Johannes Verrideva (see July 3, 1667) having petitioned, on Feb. 27, for the privilege of the new ferry at Spuyten Duyvil (see Mar. 2, 1668).
1669 Ex. Coun. Min., I: 222), and Gov, Lovelace having referred the Mar. same to the mayor's court for advice, that court now replies, as 2 follows: That “the ferry at Harlem” was farmed out to Verveelen “for the Term of five Years—and now renewed to the Wadings [wading] 30 others” &c. And that, Verveelen “had been at Considerable Charge in Setting the 9th ferry;” therefore, the city bench recommends “that the said ferry at the Wedding place should be granted to” Verveelen “for the remainder” of “the three years,” on condition of his removing “his habitation” there, or settling “a sufficient person in his room to attend the said ferry,” and also “Keep and Deliver up Annually an account of the Incomes of the said 9th ferry.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 170. See June 2.

31 The curators of the estate of Rachel van Tieszoon, Isaac de Forest, and others having property on the Strand next the graft (now Pearl, below Broad Street) complain, in a petition to the mayor’s court, that they have suffered “great damage,” and dred yet more, because “the corner wall alongside Hans Dreper’s house” has not been “built up,” and request that it be built by the city. The court promises to see that “the demanded corner wall” is “built up by the first opportunity.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 170.

30 An order from the mayor’s court is sent to the deaconry of the city to deliver to the court an account “of the receipt and expenditures of the salary of the Preacher of this City received by them for some years hence.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 171.

Apr. 1 Subscriptions to be taken for a crown in silver or the value in good wheat; the list of subscribers to be sent to Capt. Salisbury. Gov. Nicholls had appointed a race the year before; not so much, as he said, for the diversion of youth as to encourage the bettering of the breed of horses, which through great neglect was impaired.—Onderdunks, Queen’s Co. in Old Times, 6, citing Orders, I: N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 620.

6 A petition is read and considered in the mayor’s court from “the householders and some of the inhabitants” of the city, in which they complain, “in Bread,” VI: 183, Cristy, Ruyven, Paulus Leonardts, van der Griff, and Allard Anthony “were busy to the prejudice of the Commonalty” in, fencing in a parcel of land lying between the bouweries” of Vander Griff and Anthony “and the Great Kill [see explanation below], whereby the pasture of the cattle” was being “much abridged.” The petitioners had requested from Gov. Lovelace (who referred them in turn to the mayor’s court), an estoppel on the act complained of; and the city bench now orders Van Ruyven, Vander Griff, and Anthony to make answer at the next court day.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 176. They made their answer on the 27th, and a copy thereof was furnished to the mayor’s court. “For the said passage they are willing to pay as is usual.”—Ibid., VI: 179. On May 19, “the farmers and householders beyond the Fresh Water” delivered their reply to the court, and the other party was furnished a copy thereof.—Ibid., VI: 181. Not until June 23 did the city bench give in its report to Gov. Lovelace, in which it said, “That M’ Van Ruyven & C. van Ruyven, Paulus Compl, & others that have obtained patients for Lands about the Great Kill, since the Reducing of this place undf his Maj:ies Obedience, shall enjoy & fence in so much of their Lands, as they shall be able to manage, besides a reasonable proportion of Land, to be allowed them, for a pitcular pasture, provided that they do not Cutt of the Passages out of the Woods to the Waterside, but to leave openings at every one or two Rods distance, for Common Roads to the Waterside;” and concerning “the other piticular Pastures Whereof Compl was made,” the court adjudged they were “granted, possessed & fenced in, some 20 & others 30 Years since,” therefore their tenure by prescription. The final disposition was left to the governor’s consideration.—Ibid., VI: 185. The Great Kill ran along the present Gansevoort St., which was at one time called the “Great Kill Road.” The farms mentioned in the complaint lay west of Broadway and between Christopher and 23rd St.

45 Jacob Barentsen Knol is admitted as a porter of the weighhouse, in the place of Jacob Daniels, who is about to depart from the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 177. On Aug. 3, Albert Leendertsen was likewise admitted as a porter, and, on that day, both of them took the oath of fidelity “at the hands of the Mayor . . . as wine and victuallers.”—Ibid., VI: 183.

10 The mayor’s court, with the advice of Gov. Lovelace, orders, “that for the future all those that shall Call a Speciall Court shall pay for the same forty shillings in Zilver or the Value thereof in Wampum.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 178. See July 13.

The mayor’s court orders “that from henceforth all persons shall have an action depending in Court, to be Tryed and determined by a Jury, shall be bound to deliver a declaration in Writing in the office, 8 days before the day of Tryal upon Penalty of a Non Suit.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 179.

A certificate of this date is issued by Gov. Lovelace to John Archer in the following form: “These are to certify all whom it may concern that I have given leave to John Archer to settle six- teene families upon the Maine near the wading place according to directions formerly given and that what agreeth here shall make with ye Inhabitants as to their pportions of immoveable Land and hamelotts, I shall bee ready to conform, but doe respite the setting out the utmost bounds for their Range, until I shall come once more upon ye Place after w I shall grant a patent for their further assurance.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 424.

On complaint of Nicolaes Bayard, the treasurer of the city, the mayor’s court orders Hendricks Obe, “the late Collector,” to settle his accounts with the treasurer within eight days.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 181.

In accordance with the recommendation of the mayor’s court, March 2 (g. v.), Gov. Lovelace issues the following order: “Whereas it hath beene resolved and concluded upon that the Ferry at New Harlem shall be removed to a nearer and more convenient passage called from this Island and the townf to bee found at a Place called Spitting duyvel And Johannes Verveelen who hethet hath kept the Ferry at New Haerlem aforesaid being found the fittest person to bee employed therein, that will undertake it both in regard of the Charge bee hath beene alreadie it [at] and his Experience that way. These are to authorize and Empower the him said Johannes Verveelen to repair to the said place at Spitting duyvel and to cause a fence to bee made for keeping all manner of Cattles from going or Comming to or fro the said passage without leave or paying therefore and at his best convenience to lay out a place upon that porce of Land called Papirimin in the meanse Side whereunto this habitation for his habitation and accomodations of Travellers for the which hee shall have a patent and Articles of Conformacon.”—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 223. See Sept., 1669; 1683; and Aug. 10, 1685.

The ferry from New York to Communipaw is leased by Gov. Carteret, of N. J., to Pieter Heflisen for three years, he be to “the only constant ferryman,” with the privilege of renewal at the expiration of the lease while the inhabitants of the “townes aforesaid have any just Exceptions against him.” All persons are prohibited from usurping Heflisen’s right under penalty of a fine of ten shillings and the additional forfeiture which they may have collected. Such fines are to be paid to the regular ferryman. Any person may, however, keep his own boat or canoe for the use of himself or his family and their own goods. The ferry-man must maintain one good and “sufficient” boat or more and, while expected to provide transportation at any time is particularly enjoined to arrange with the Inhabitants of Brentwood and all others who may come from days of the week when at appointed times he will be at their service. It is arranged that the governer and family are to have free transportation as are also public messengers from the governour or those authorized by him. The ferry rates are as follows:

There shall be paid to the ferryman six stivers a head wampum for every passenger.

“For his freight Extraordinary at all other tymes iff but one man 4 Guilders in Wampum, but iff by night and unseasonable weather as the parties cann agree.

The ferry-man must also ferry every person for four guilders in wampum, except "what is before excepted."—Winfield, Hist. of Hudson Co., N. J., 234-56, citing E. J. Rec., III: 27. See Dec. 22, 1664. The Duke of York grants by letters patent a property in Stone St. to Gov. Nicholls, as follows:

"Know all men by these Presents that I, James, Duke of York and Albany, Earl of Ulster, Lord High Admirall of England and Ireland, Constable of Dover Castle, Lord Warden of the Cinque ports and Governor of Portsmouth Now and in consideration of the sum of five hundred Pounds to me in hand paid Have Granted, Bargained and Sold and By these Doe Duly, Clererdy and Absolutely Bargain and Sell unto Richard Nicolls, Esq, that my house late of Jacques Esmie—(Richs Peterson Van) to the Brewers or Stony Stone in New York in America, To Have and to Hold the said house with the appurtenances unto him the said Richard Nicolls his heires and assigns To his and her proper uses and Behooves, for Ever In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my Hand and Seal at New York this 7th of July, 1669. Samuel Maverick writes to Col. Richard Nicolls at Whitehall (in England), thus: "Now give mee leave to acquaint you a little how things goe heere at York. Tryalls have been made several times this spring for cod fish, with very good success; a small ketch sent out by ye Governor hath found several good fishing bancs; amongst ye rest one not over 2 or 3 leagues from Sandy Hook on which in a few hours 4 men took 11 to 12 hundred excellent good Coddi the last time they were out, and most of ye restelissen that goe to and from Virginia take good quantities. That vessell is to goe from Newfound Land to get fishermen liner hookers and other necessaries for fishing: I doubt not but this Coast will afford fish in abundance.

"On the east end of Long Island there were 12 or 13 whales taken before ye 9th of March, and what since wee heare nott: here are dayly some seen in the very harbour, sometimes within Nutt [now Governors] Island [see Pl. 19, Vol. I, where a spouting whale is pictured]. Out of the Pinnacle the other week they struck two, but last but two, the iron broke in one, the other broke the warpe. The Governor hath encouraged some to follow this designe. Two shallops made for it, but yett wee doe not hear of any they have gotten."

The Governor with some Partners is building a ship of 120 tuns, by Thomas Hall's house [at Turtle Bay]; she is well onward and may be finished in August; another of 60 or 70 tuns is building at Gravesend.

"Nutt Island, by ye making of a garden and planting of several walkes of fruite trees on it, is made a very pleasant place.

"The Old House is pulling downe, wth provves so exceedingly defective above what could be imagined, that I think it must [be taken] down to the bottom, and will prove a tedious and chargeable piece of worke. [Cf. "Old Hospital," Oct. 16, 1680.]

There is good correspondence kept between the English and Dutch, and to keep it the closer, sixteen (ten Dutch and six English) have had a constant meeting at each others houses in turns, twice every week by articles, and now in summer at night and part about eight or nine."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 182-85.

On Oct. 15, Maverick again wrote to Nicolls: "The ship was launched 14 days since and is a very strong and handsome vessell, but costly; she is named the Good Fame, of New York. The house is come to covering: it is a handsome fabrick and well contrived, but mens wages goe so high as that it cannot be expected it should come of cheape. The flux, ages, and fevers, have much rained, both in citty and country, & many dead, but not yett see many as last years."—Ibid, III: 185.

Nicolas Jansen, Jan Jansz van Bruntede, and Hendrick Bosch are elected by the mayor's court as firewardens of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 184. For the first incumbents following the English occupation, see Oct. 3, 1665; see also Dec. 1, 1668.

The overseers of highways (see April 16, 1666), whose term of office has expired, are called by the mayor "until further order," as the court expects to appoint some new Overseers . . . for the branding of horses and cattell."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 185. The new appointments were made Jan. 25, 1670 (p.v.).

The mayor's court orders that the city marshall's fee "out of the money paid for a Speciall Court" (see April 10), shall be four guineas.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 185.

In regard to a land dispute between John Archer and William Betts, George Lippeit, etc., the governor's council orders: "That Jacques Courtleyou [the surveyor] be sent to view & lay out Archers thirty Acres, & ye Remaide of to bee to them [see July 7, p. 20]. And if they have cutt & carried away any Hay belonging to Archer, they are to returne soe much, hee paying them for their pains."

"That some Proportion be laid out for the ferryman Mr Vervelen. July 7 That Archers bee good Substantiall Meadow, & Bett's &c to 31 have the rest."—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 33-34.

Perewy, the sachem of the Hackenschack, Toppan, and Staten Island Indians, appears before the governour's council, desiring that the "Indians of Yorke" not be received without being continued under the present governour. He is assured it will be continued as long as they carry themselves well. Gov. Lovelace is requested to hold a band of seawoat as a pledge that the Maquesseys have made a peace with the nations of the sachem. The governour is to communicate with the Indians. Jameses, this 7th of July, 1669.

Jean (Johannes) de la Montagne receives from the Indians a confirmandory deed for the point named Rechawann, bounded between a stream which runs to Montague's Flat; with the meadows from the bend of the Hellegat to Konaande Koogh.——Harlem Rec. David Dillon, a lad about 16 years of age, attempts to set on fire the house of William Paterson, about eight o'clock at night, "by putting a brand of fire under the door of the house." The lad was found guilty by the mayor's court, on Sept. 2, and condemned to be taken to "the Ordinary Execution place" and given "twelve Slashes;" to be held in prison at the pleasure of the court, and then "to be banished out of this City and the Suburbs thereof during his Life."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 194. This house was on the corner of Cocottes Alley and Pearl St., on the opposite corner from the city hall, and was included in the original grant of Thomas Willet, of 1646.

Gov. Lovelace having recommended to the mayor's court "to 31 Consider who are persons qualified to have the Benefit of Comonage on this Island Manhattan & ye New village called Fordham," are agreed upon between Gov. Love- lane and the ferry-man, Vervelen, instead of between the mayor and Verleezen as was the case in the leaving the Harlem ferry (see July 7, 1667). The terms provide that Vervelen "shall Erect & provide a good & sufficient Dwelling house, upon ye Island or Neck of Land knowne by ye name of Paprinimam, where he shall be furnished wth three or fewer good Bedds, for ye Entertainment of Strangers, as also wth Provisions at all Seasons, for them their horses & cattle together wth stabling & stalling." He must have a "sufficient & Able boat for ye Transportation of Passengers Horses & Cattle upon all Occasions." The "Pass upon ye said Island nearer unto Spiting Devil" must be fenced and have a gate and lock so that no person can enter or leave the ferry-man's permission. He must bear one-third of the cost of building a bridge over the meadow ground to town of Fordham, "who are to be at ye remainde of ye Charge themselves." Either the ferry-man or his deputy is required to be ready to provide transportation at all seasonal hours, and in case of emergency where "ye Publicke affaires are concerned" he is to be ready whenever called upon. A fine is to be imposed for neglect of duty. In return for these services, the ferry-man must be paid in Paprinam (see June 2, also Paparanim in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 967) and the meadow ground adjoining, whatever building he shall erect thereon, and the profits of the ferry for a period of 11 years. At the end of this time he or his heirs are to have preference (see 204, 206) of the land and buildings over other parties, such satisfaction for buildings, boats, etc., as two disinterested persons agree upon, is to be granted him. From double nominations made on the preceding day by the mayor's court, for a new bench for the ensuing year, Gov. Lovelace appoints and commissions Cornelis Steenwyck, mayor; Thomas Delavall, Mathias Nicolls, Cornelis van Ruyven, John Laurence, and Nicolas de Meyer, aldermen; and Capt. John Manning, sheriff. Their commissions ran from this date, ending Dec. 20. — Rec. N. Am., VI: 200-01. In a letter to the mayor's court, dated Oct. 6, Gov. Lovelace promised that if they would "consider of Somme Method for the better regulation of Yf Corporation and present it to him. What I find reasonable and practicable, I shall Willingly allow of."—Ibid., VII: 190-99. The return to the Dutch custom of double nominations for court officials would seem to be an attempt towards such "better regulation.

Gov. Francis Lovelace states that he has received letters from the Duke of York in approbation of "ye Tollerance given to ye Lutheran Church" in New York, and that the Lutherans are not to be molested in their worship.—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 626, copied from MS. Records of Court of Assizes, II: 424.

It is ordered that tobacco exported for Europe shall pay two guilders wampum per hogshead; that sugar exported "from these parts thither" shall "pay 2d per Cent, in Beaver"; that beavers to be exported to Europe shall pay 7½ per cent. instead of 10 per cent. and that all other goods exported as before shall pay 1½ per cent.—Rec. Coun. Min., I: 39-40. See Nov. 1, 1668.

Several petitions from towns on Long Island are received by Gov. Lovelace, against which they sought redress were especially noted in the petition from Hempstead, which as considered by the court of assizes. Among the things sought were regulation of the prices of what they bought as well as what they produced; wampum to pass "for current pay at 6d a penny or else not to be a good or lawful money at all," a better attendance at "ye Ferry at New York that men may not be so long detained to their great damage;" that "all harbors, creeks & coves" in the province be made available "for any shipping or Vessells to come into & trade free;" the establishment of weights and measures according to the English standard only, and a provision that such cattle as they slaughtered and brought to the town should not be admitted into the city, should be free of custom duties. These requests were rejected in most cases. The publication of ferry regulations was promised speedily.—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 631-33.

Warnaar Wessells is chosen by the mayor's court as constable of the city during the mayoralty of Cornelis Steenwyck. He took the oath of office on Dec. 7.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 203, 206.

The Harlem court orders that no animals except calves shall be pastured in the common "calve pasture" lying "North of the Village." Penalties are fixed for disregarding such order and for leaving the goal unmade. Both the last of March and the first of November are made law. The common pasture is to make his share of the bridges in the two meadows.—Harlem Rec. (MS. translation), I: 149-50. In a court case of April 23, 1671, mention was made of the community "mak[ing] tigh the fence of the call pasture."—Ibid., I: 186-87.

The following new court of New Haarelem (see June 12, 1666) is elected by the mayor's court, viz.: Jacques Croixoon, constable; Resolved Waldron, Kvert Waltersen, Claude La Metre, and Johannes Vernelde, overseers. Woltersen left soon after the election; hence, on Jan. 25, 1670, Joost Oblinis was elected to the vacancy.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 207, 213.

The first printed description of New York in the English language, written by Daniel Denton, was published in London in this year. The scope of the work is indicated by the title page, which reads: A Brief Description of New York or New-Netherlands. With the Places thereunto Adjuyning. Together with the Manner of its Situation, Fertility of the Soyle, Healthfulness of the Climate, and the Commodities thence produced. Also Some Directions and Advice to such as shall go thither: An Account of what Commodities they shall take with them: The Profit and Pleasure that may be expected to them thereby, likewise A Brief Relation of the Customs of the Indians there. Parts of his vivid and laudatory descriptions follow:

"And first to begin with the Manahantans Island, so called by the Indians, it lieth within land betwixt the degrees of 41 and 42. of North-latitude, and is about 14 miles long, and 6 broad. It is bordered with Long-Island to the north, the Staten-Island on the west, the North with the main Land: And with Connecticut Colony on the East-side of it; only a part of the Main Land belonging to New York Colony, where several Towns and Villages are settled, being about thirty miles in breadth, doth intercept the Manahattans Island, and the Colony of Connecticut before mentioned. New-York is settled upon the West-end of the aforesaid Island, having that small arm of the Sea, which divides it from Long-Island on the South-side of it, which runs away Eastward to New-England, and so by the long wind, through dangerous and pleasant streams, to a pleasing spot on the ground of the Inhabitants, constituting most of English and Dutch, and have a considerable Trade with the Indians, for Beavers, Otter, Racoon skins, with other Furs: As also for Bear, Deer, and Elke skins: and are supplied with Venison and Fowl in the Winter, and Fish in the Summer by the Indians, which they bring at a very low rate; And having sent them, they are continually furnished with all such provisions as is needful for the life of men not only by the English and Dutch within their own, but likewise by the Adjacent Colonies.

The Commodities vented from thence are Furs and Skins before-mentioned: As likewise Tobacco made within the Colony, as good as is usually made in Maryland: Also Horses, Beef, Pork, Oyl, Pearl, Wheat, and the like.

Thus have I briefly given you a Relation of New-York, with the places thereunto adjoinning: In which, if I have err’d, it is principally in giving to it its due status and earthly blessings where it is stord, Heaven hath not been wanting to open his Treasure, in sending down seasonable showers upon the Earth, blessing it with a sweet and pleasant Air, and a continuation of such Influaences as tend to the Health both of Man and Beasts: and the Climate hath such an affluity with that of England, that it breeds ordinarily no alteration to those which remove thither; that the name of seasonings, which is common to some other Countreys hath never there been known: That as I may say, and say truly, that if there be any terrestrial happiness to be had by people of all ranks, especially of an inferior rank, it must certainly be here; and here, as in itself, and the whole of it, is furnished with land, to which there is a due rate; And having sent them, they are continually furnished with all such provisions as is needful for the life of man not only by the English and Dutch within their own, but likewise by the Adjacent Colonies.

The commodities vented from thence are Furs and Skins before-mentioned: As likewise Tobacco made within the Colony, as good as is usually made in Maryland: Also Horses, Beef, Pork, Oyl, Pearl, Wheat, and the like.

may furnish his house with excellent fat Venison, Turkeys, Geese, Heath-Heas, Cranes, Swans, Ducks, Pigeons, and the like: and wearied with that, he may go a Fishing, where the Rivers are so furnished, that he may supply himself with Fish before he can leave off the Recreation: Where you may travel by Land upon the same Continent hundreds of miles, and pass the least complaint for want, nor hear any ask you for a farthing: there you may lodge in the fields and woods, travel from one end of the Country to another, with as much security as if you were locked within your own Chamber; And if you chance to meet with an Indian-Town, they shall give you the best entertainment that they can, and upon your desire, direct you on your way: But that which adds happiness to all the rest, is the Healthfulness of the place, where many people in twenty years time never know what sickness is: where they look upon it as a great mortality if two or three die out of a town in a years time; where besides the sweetness of the Air, the Country itself sends forth such a fragrant smell, that it may be perceived at Sea before they can make the Land: where no evil fog or vapour doth no sooner appear, but a North-west or Westerly wind doth immediately dissolve it, and drive it away: What shall I say more? you shall scarce see a house, in the Southern part, with Rivers of Beers, which increase after so incredible manner. That I must needs say, that if there be any terrestrial Canaan, "is surely here, where the Land floweth with milk and honey."—Denton, Brief Description of N. Y., 2, 3, 17-19.

A large manuscript map of Long Island, including Manhattan Island, drawn in this year by Robert Ryder, is preserved in the N-Y. Hist. Soc. For contrary reasons, I do not adopt that map.

This year, in the region east of the Penobscot was surrendered to the French.—Winson, op. cit., IV. 161.

Capt. Matthias Nicolls, secretary of the province of New York, Jan. informs the mayor's court that Gov. Lovelace intends "to build a house upon the lot, adjoining next unto the State-house [Pearl St. and Coenties Alley, or the present 65-67 Pearl St.], and to make s^h house to be an Inn or Ordinary:" and, if the court does not consider it prejudicial to the city "to allow his house to build the upper part of the house something over the passage of the Towne" which likes "being for necessary use."—His charge was permitted to stand so, as also to "make a store to go from the upper part of the house into the Courts Chambers." The court, "upon mature Consideration," allows the governor's proposals, and orders that it be so recorded.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 215. On March 7, 1671, Gov. Love- lace inquired of the mayor and aldermen whether they would sell him "the Vacant Strokes of ground" which lay "betwixt the State-house and the New House" he had built. The city court thought it "fit to Leave it to his hon’s discretion to pay to the Towne for the said ground" whatever he considered proper: provided, however, that he did not cut off the "Entrée into the prison door or Common Gaol of this House," which was permitted. He then sold this English tavern in New York City, but this contention is untenable.

The Carmen or carvers and the shoemakers of the city are summoned to appear before the mayor's court. Complaints have been made to the court that "several of the Karmen" did "perform their duty in taking good care for the goods" they canted, "for the Burgers & Strangers," and that some of them "manny times" used "ill and bad Language to the Burgers." Evidently the shoemakers or tanners have been summoned as the chief complainants. The court, on Feb. 8, took up the matter and warned the carmen to desist from their incivility, or they would, upon a recurrence and proof thereof, be summarily stripped of their privileges.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 216, 217-18.

Cornelis Barentsen was the only official grain measurer of the city at this time. He asks the mayor's court to appoint Jan van Gelder as an additional grain measurer; at the same time he requests that the measuring of grain be forbidden to all others, and that the "fees for measuring be raised and something be allowed for round measure." The court appoints Van Gelder; reserves the right of everyone to measure his own grain, and disallows any change in the established fees or extra allowance for the round measure.

Cornelis Barentsen was sworn in by March 15, when Barentsen complained to the court against him for making too much money at his expense. The court decreed that Van Gelder should turn over one-half of his collected fees to Barentsen, and that Barentsen should "in future be preferred in the measuring," depriving Van Gelder therefrom, unless Barentsen was "absent at work elsewhere" or when "more

Gov. Lovelace issues a proclamation for "ye keeping a Pecuallty Tyme for meeting at ye Exchange." Whereas "amongst ye searall Imployed" inhabitants of this City are "Conversant in that of ye merchants appears ye cheapest & most important," it is proposed to set up a "Fitt Tyme & Place" for the same "(whether strangers as well as Townsme'n) & other artizans may resorse & discourse of their searall affairs according to ye univerall custome of all martetyme Corporations." The governor and council ordered that "friday ... between ye hours of Eleven & Twelve before noone shall always be ye Day & Bridge (for ye p'sent) to be the Place where all merchants shall meet as to an Exchange to conferre about their searall affairs ... & that daily notice thereof be given by ye ringing of a bell when they should come on, & when they should goe of & that care be taken by ye Mayor of this City that no interruption or disturbance be given to any one that shall frequent that Exchange & likewise that Mr. Mayor's cause a solemn publication to be made of this Ord at ye Towne house of this Citty."—Court of Assizes, II: 478 (N. S. S.). From a typewritten copy, in the N. Y. Pub. Library, of the original, which was destroyed in the Capitol fire at Albany in 1911. "Thus the first merchants' exchange of New York was established in existence, holding its meetings in the open air near the site of the great Stock Exchange building of to-day and [almost on the very spot, on the junction of Broad Street and Exchange Place, where the present Exchange is situated. This Constitution called the 'curb mark' now [1909] likewise does its business out-of-doors."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N.Y., II: 70.

The original Charlestown, S. C., is founded, on the western back of the Ashley River.—Windsor, op. cit., VI: 307. For its removal to the site now, see A. 468.

Johannes de Peyster, Isaac Greveraert, Contraet ten Eyck, and Hendrick Willemsen are appointed overseers "for the Laying out and Paving of the Streets." The instructions given to them by the mayor's court required them "to order that the Streets &c. be to be paved be laid out as level and even as possible" and "according to the Convenience of the Streets;" that "the p'age be Raised about one foot higher than the middle of the Streets to the end the water may take its Course from the passages towards the Middle of the Streets aforesaid;" and provision that, "in Case the Neighbours were "Inclined towards the paving of the Whole Streets," they had "Liberty soo too doe, provided that all the Neighbours agreed in unison to do so. Every person concerned was "required & Strictly Charged to obey the orders" of the overseers in conformity with the ordinance.—Rec. N. Am., II: 228-29. On May 18, the mayor appointed Abram Jansen, master carpenter of the city, "Consult of ye overseers of the streets of the city, for the proper laying out and opening of streets;" but before the overseers had requested the appointment of one of the carpenters who understood the work.—Ibid., VII: 235. This board was entirely distinct from the overseers of roads and fences (see March 1). In N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 78, the two are apparently confused.

The final deed of conveyance from the old Indians, "00 ye behalf of themselves as the True Sachems Owners & lawful Indian Proprietors of Staten Island & all other Indians any way concerned therein[er]," to Gov. Lovelace, is signed. On April 15, in the presence of the governor and Capt. Manning, the secretary, the deed was again "delivered & acknowledged," before "the young Indians out being present at the Essequing & delive[r] y[or] of the deed on April 15." The "young Indians" were boys and girls from six to twenty years of age.—Ex. Court Min., I: 338-43 (where the first and last pages are reproduced).

The final deed was the result of a series of parleys with the Indians regarding a deed of July 10, 1657, which appeared in the "Old Dutch Records" together with the 'Consideration Agree[d] upon" and all the "Indians Names & Markes who sold it." When the Indians who appeared before the governor are asked why they will again sell the island, since he had sold it & placed them that it appears upon Record that all was sold; They being told that since these now would sell the Land again after it had been sold 40 years ago, their Children 40 years hence may do ye like; They say still that then only part of it was sold, soe they continued on it, but at last if they will goe off & leave it. The English finally admitted that, "though there was an Agreement yet nothing of it was paid for, they did not goe off the Island." (It is stated in N. Y. Col. MSS., XII: 61, 69, that the date of the deed was 1657, but that the purchase was annulled Dec. 22 of that year.) The English added: "if they Apr. will now go all off, That Agreement shall be made good to them."—

Exc. Coun. Min., I: 43-45. At a second meeting, two of the Indian signers of the deed of 1657 were present, and, the matter of the early agreement being again discussed, the Indians refused to accept it. Beetem leak out by the pettigal "—Ibid., I: 459-60.

After further barter, terms satisfactory to both parties were agreed upon, which included payment to the Indians of 400 "Fathorn of Wampom," 30 "Match Coates," "Eight Coats of Dozens made up," 30 shirts, 30 kettlets, 20 guns, 1 firkin of powder, 60 bars of lead, 50 axes, 50 hoes, and 50 knifes. Another provision was that "Quator semiem was employed to bring the Indians together is to have a Blackettet, & a Rathom of Duffells." The Indians agreed to leave the island upon receiving their pay. "The Persons present & concerned strooke hands upon the Bargaine." A memorandum in connection with the deed states "That Two or Three of ye said Sachens their heires or successors or so many Persons employed by them shall once every years (visti) upon ye First day of May yearly after their surrender repair to this fort to acknowledge their Sale of the said Staten Island to ye Governor or his Successors to continue a mutual freindship between them."—Ibid., I: 431. See May 2. This indicated deed was burned in the Capitol fire at Albany, in March, 1911. There is, however, a duplicate copy, with the addition of Lovelace's signature, in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

May Gov. Lovelace issues a warrant which appoints "M' Thomas Lovelace & Mr Matthias [Nicolls] to repaye this day to Staten Island there to take possession by Turie & Tignet & ye surrender of ye said Island by ye Indian Sachens & Proprietors in ye name of his Royall Highness according to ye Tenor of ye Bill of Sale & Purchase." (See April 13, 1754.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 344.

The Hudson Bay Company is chartered. See Addenda.

June John and Enamors Kindrick are charged by Constant Warnaer Wessels with dereliction in not aiding him "in bringing a drunken Indian to the Statehouse." The mayor's court condemns them to a fine of six guilders seawant, each, one-half for the poor fund, and the other half for the use of the church, as well as to pay the cost of the case.—Exc. Coun. Min., VI: 269.

The fire-warden of the city are ordered by the mayor's court "to cause all the fire buckets heretofore provided for the City to be brought to the City Hall and to deliver in at the next court day a pertinent list of all the fire apparatus remaining in their charge and hands."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 233. See April 9, 1667, for earlier order.

The governour appoints Thomas Lovelace and Paul Leenderts to be collectors and receivers of all "goods effects or Debts" belonging to the West India Co.—Exc. Coun. Min., II: 518-19.

June The court at New Harlem appoints as tavern-keeper Cornelius Janse, of No. 10, for "that he make publishe the coming mor" (travellers), and that he take oath not to sell any liquor to Indians. The appointee accepts.—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 144.

A letter of this date indicates that the Dutch church was still "dissident of preaching" and the administrating of the sacraments (see Jan. 29). Prayers were offered each Sunday morning and afternoon and the "Word of God and a sermon were read by the chorister Evert Pieters." Every two weeks Dominie Polhemus, who was over 70, preached a sermon on a week day, and administered the sacrament of baptism to children. The letter adds: "We hope that by your speedy help, this anxious congregation may be supplied with a suitable minister." An act obtained from the governour (see June 28), which designated the compensation for a minister as 1,000 guilders, free house rent, and firewood, was enclosed with the the letter.—Ecots. Rec. I: 610-11. See March 16 and 28, 1671.

Resolved Waldron, Lubbert Gerritse, Dirk Siek, and Jan Cornelissen, acting as "agents of the housekeepers and farmers dwelling" on Manhattan Island (see Jan. 25), petition the mayor's court "regarding the marks of all the horses and cattle." Decision is reserved until the 21st. The ordinance provides for branding all horses and cattle above one year old, which the petitioners say is not feasible, and seek to have the age fixed at three years; more- over they request a release from the branding fees, and instead offer "to observe the marks and brands by villages, without receiving any fees therefor." The court conceded the request on condition that the marks be varied yearly, and relating to the marking of horses and cattle be duly executed and that the petitioners provide and find a fit person, by whom the register is properly kept, and finally to pay the expenses incurred in the manufacture of the branding irons.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 237- 58, 239-40.

"Upon complaint of the common council that the stapleright of Manhattan was constantly ignored by vessels not belonging to New York State, the governor has issued an edict that on March 9, 1669, no goods should be carried up the river unless those vessels possessed burghe-right in the city, and unloading their cargoes, paid recognizance therefor."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. T., II: 525; Exc. Coun. Min., II: 532-33. The order was revised March 9, 1670.—Ibid., I: 525.

The elders and deacons of the Dutch church having petitioned the mayor's court for "an able Orthodox Minister," of which they are now "Wholly destitute," the court laid the case before Gov. Lovelace, who now gives his official assent to bringing over a minister from Holland; also to a guaranty that he "receive a Competent Salary or Allowance for his Exercising the Ministerial function," amounting to 10,000 guilders, Holland money, per annum, as well as "the accomodation of a Convenient dwelling house, Rent free, Together with his Provision of fire Wood Gratu." These per- quisites, of course, were to be met by an annual levy upon the inhabitants.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 237, 252. In July 11, 1678, a long standing dispute between John Archer and Betts, Tippett, and Huddy (see Nov. 6, 1668), regarding a 50-acre meadow claimed by Archer out of land sold by Elia Doughty, is settled by the governor's council. Archer is to have the meadow as formerly set off by "Colonel [Cornelius] y^t Surveyors," and since surveyed by Robert Rider.—Exc. Coun. Min., I: 52, 215.

The Treaty of Madrid, between England and Spain, settles the boundaries of their respective possessions in America on the basis of partition.

"Peregrine Students complains to the mayor's court that he is being "abridged in the execution of some of his lands from the public possession."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 245. See Feb. 28, 1671.

In the mayor's court, "The Overseers of Roads and Fences" complain that Bastian Elissen, Jan Kyckuyt, Gerrit Hendricksen, and Augustine the Printer, have "for a long time maintaine their quota of the Common Strand fence" (along the Hudson River), which neglect results in "great damage ... done daily to the graz." The defendants reply that the fence is "down," and the cattle swarm "around the fence at high water." The court refers the matter to Jan Cornelissen and Aront Leendertsen, to hear the case debated and render a report.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 245.

A license is granted to Jacob Meurs, of Amsterdam, to publish De Nieuwe en Onbekende Wereldt: van Beschrijving van America, by Arnoldus Montanus; its title-page bears the date 1671 (see I: 142). This book contains the well-known Montanus View of New York and New Amsterdam. "On the Manhattan island stands New Amsterdam, five miles from the Ocean: Ships run up to the harbour there from the sea with one tide. The city hath an earthen fort. Within the fort, and on the outermost bastion towards the river, stand a wind mill, and a very high wall, on which a flag is hoisted whenever any vessels are seen in the Harbour. The church rises with a double roof between which a square tower looms aloft. On one side is the prison, on the other side of the church the governor's house. Without the walls are the houses mostly built by Amster- damers. On the river side stand the gallows and whipping post. A handsome public tavern adorns the farthest point. Between the fort and this tavern is a row of suitable dwelling houses: among which stand out the ware houses of the West India Company." This translation is from Doc. Hist. N. T. (4to ed.), IV: 75. This book was issued also in an English and a German edition. The English edition, America, contains a somewhat different description, ending thus: "After His Majestyes Restoration, His Majesty being truly inform'd of his just Pretences to all that Urmp'd Territory call'd New Netherland, (the same having been formerly part of New England) and of how great prejudice to the Act of Navigation, and how dangerous it was to the Dutchmen and Merchants, to have the Princes Dominions, what mischief might ensue to all our English Plantations in time of War, if the Dutch were permitted to strengthen themselves in the very heart of His Majesties Dominions, being Masters of one of the most commodious Ports and Rivers in the World, the State of the affairs in America, as at this time, being so clear, the design'd right, and in May 1664, having design'd four Commis- sioners to the perfecting of Affairs in New England, Colonei Richard Nichols, Sir Robert Carr, George Cartwright, and Samuel Mawrck [Mavrerc] Enquires, with three Ships of War to convey them to Boston: The matter was so order'd that the same Ships serv'd for the reducing of the Town and Fort of New Amsterdam, upon conditions, advantageous to His Majesty, and ease to the Dutch.

The town is "plac'd upon the neck of the Island Manhatans, looking towards the Sea; encompass'd with Hudson's River, which is six Miles broad; the Town is compact and oval, with very fair Streets and several good Houses, the rest are built much after the manner of Dutch, with a lively Mote upon it. The Streets and upon the Flood is a large Whirlwind, which continuall leads forth a hideous roaring, enough to affright any Stranger from passing farther, and to wait for some Charon to conduct him through; yet to those that are well accustomed, little or no danger. It is a place of great Danger, and how dangerous present coming in that way, which a small Fortification would absolutely prevent, and necessitate them to come in at the West end of Long-Island by Sandy Hook, where Nutten Island forces them within the Command of the Fort at New York, which is one of the best Pieces of Defence in the North parts of America. It is built most of Brick and Stone, and cover'd with red and black Tiles, and the Land being high, it gives at a distance a pleasing prospect to the Spectators. The Inhabitants consist most of English and Dutch, and have a considerable Trade with Indians for Beaver, Otter, and Racoon-Skins, with other Furs, as also for Bear, Deer and Elke-Skins; and are supply'd with Venison and Fowl in the Winter, and Fish in the Summer by the Indians, which they buy at an easy Rate; and having the Country round about them, they are continually furnish'd with all such Provisions as is needful for the Life of Man, not only by the English and Dutch within their own, but likewise by the Inhabitants of the Fresh Water, who thus supply their wants.

This is an almost identical copy of Denton's description, published in 1670 (q.v.). Denton correctly uses the word "whirlpool," while Ogilvy has used erroneously the word "whirlwind" in describing Hell Gate.

For further discussion of Montauan's De Nassau en Onbekende Wereld, of Beschrijving van America, Ogilvy's America, and Denton's A Brief Description of New York, see Bibliography, Vol. V.

Gov. Lovelace issues the following order in behalf of Isaac Bedford: "Whereas M' Isaac Bedford hath made very good Improvem't upon a Certaine Little Island in ye 8th Bay aforesaiy this City commonly called Oyster Island for ye whch he hath a Patent granted by Coll Richard Nicolls, & at his request I have given it a New Name That is to say ye 8th name of Love Island." Therefore he grants "that ye said Island now called Love Island shall be a Priviledge place Where no warrant of Attachm't or arrest shall be of force or be served uppon or executed upon that island," etc. (see Col. Docs. XIV: 659.) This was Bedloes Island. —See April 20, 1676.

An inventory of the estate of Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, deceased, is delivered to the mayor's court by the curators thereof, together with a petition from the curators in which they pray for "further and more special security for the survivorship and personal property and how to proceed further for the advantage of the estate." The curators are given power "to proceed with the sale of the goods, real and personal, on condition that the fence of the lot of the Great House on the Heerte Grofs . . . be drawn back and set on the common line of the adjoining Grouts." This property was in Grafs Gate, in the west-northeast corner of Broad and Store Sts, and ran back to the present South William St. —See Castello Plan, II: 704-5.

Whereas the governor has received several requests from the inhabitants of Westchester, urging the removal from their jurisdiction of Katherine Harrison, because of an "apprehension they have of her grounded upon some troubles she hath layne under at Wetherfield upon suspicion of Witchcraft," he now decides that the matter shall go over to the next general court of assizes, and that the Widow Harrison and her children shall be allowed to remain "without disturbance or molestation." Reasons for the accusations against her do not "so clearly appear unto me, Yett cow't this standing to give as much satisfaction as may be to ye Compel" who p'tend these fears to be of a breach of peace. Concern, I have not thought fit absolutely to determiny ye matte at Present." —Ex. Coun. Min., I: 392-93. See March 23, 1675.

"All these proceedings [regarding witchcraft] were taken at common law, or under the English Statute of James I. No law against witchcraft has been found on the statute-book of New York. At the same time, there is no room for doubt that the principal clergymen then in the colony were farm believers in witchcraft, and it may fairly be presumed that far the greater portion of the community shared in their faith." Cotton Mather says that the opinion of Dutch and French ministers in New York, "while the storm of delusion on the subject was raging in Massachusetts, contributed to destroy the authority of the 'spectral testimony,' then too much in credit there." Several victims of persecution in Massachusetts found refuge in New York, a fact "which constitutes a part of the history which she may well find under the Mag.(2d ser.), VI: 215, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1869), 274-76.

William Beekman purchases from Anna Hall, widow of Thomas Hall, a piece of land with a dwelling-house, brewery, brew-house, brewing implements, milk-house, horse-mill, and other buildings thereon, together with an Engine built all at the east end of Smith's Valley and on the north side of the King's wagon-road,—Book of Mortgages (1665-1675) in the Hall of Records, 81-85. This property was on both sides of the present Beekman St.—Innes, New Amsterdam and Its People, 328.

The sheriff complains to the mayor's court that "divers persons" have suffered "great damage" because Jan Hendrickse (Steelman, alias) Coopall, and Thomas Wandell have up till "the present time failed to construct their wall on the waterside [East River, now Pearl St], according to previous order." The court gives the two delinquents six weeks time in which to build up their "walls" or suffer a fine.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 259. The order did not meet with compliance. Steelman died soon afterward (see Castello Plan, II: 322). Complaint against Wandell was made again on May 16, 1761 (q.v.). For similar case of Jacob Fodder, see May 19, 1665.

Upon complaint of the overseers of the public roads on both sides of the mayor's court orders that "the house of the carters of this City, who use the Roads over the Fresh Water, whether in drawing firewood from the public woods or otherwise, shall be bound to aid in repairing said roads, as well as the country people."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 259.

Harry Nutson (Newton), one of the sergeants of the mayor's court (see July 9, 1667), is accorded a raise in salary of five pounds per annum for bearing the mate. —Rec. N. Am., IV: 260, 348.

From nominations made on the 10th by the mayor's court, Gov. Lovelace now appoints Capt. Thomas Delvall mayor for another year; Capt. Matthias Nicolls, John Laurence, Olof Stevensen van Cortlandt; Johannes van Brugh, and Isaac Beddo, aldermen; and Allard Anthony, sheriff.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 260-62.

The city has been "at excessive Charges towards the redeeming & repairing of the Great Bridge" (see description of the bridge in PI. 25, E: 244) and the mayor's court adjudges that all those who use the bridge shall contribute towards its upkeep. A revenue tax is imposed, therefore, "upon all Horses, Mares or Geldons" that are "to be Shipt & Exported" from the city to Virginia, Maryland, or any other outward Plantation, and the sale of which is permitted by the court as haver-master "to Collect & receive the said Imposition to the Use of the City."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 262-65.

Lourens van Spiegell is chosen constable of the city by the mayor's court and takes the oath of fidelity.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 265. A complaint from Fasner et al. against the mayor's court is dismissed by the court as "out of his sickness," and the court commends him to the deacons of the Dutch church of the city "to allow the Petif some support, and to enquire Concern'd the decease and Condition of the Petif, and the place of his Late residence, and to make returne thereunto at the next Court day."—Rec. N. Am., VI. 266. See Oct. 24, 1672.

9. Clases is appointed by the mayor's court "in undertaker and sexton" of the city, "together with auctioneer of sales."—Rec. N. Am., VI. 266. For his dismissal from a former office, see July 9, 1667.

Complaints to the mayor's court about infracions of the ordinances concerning the baking of bread in the city (see Aug. 9, 1666) cause the court to appoint Christiaen Hoogland and Timoeus Gabry as "Censurers of all the Bread. . . Baked, And put to Sale by any Public Baker" of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VI. 266.

22. An order, not preserved in the records, is issued regarding bread. Ex. Coun. Min., 279, 299. The court, on the 13th of April 1666 ordered that a person should be appointed for this purpose and to prevent abuses. On Sept. 20, 1671, Ralph Warner was appointed "to take Cognizance of all Houses or Mares that shall come to ye 7th Ferry or part adjacent to be Transported out of this City." And that you Record the Attestacions from whence they come, together with their Markes & Colours, and receive ye 7th Sallary allowed for ye same."—Ibid., I: 57, footnote, citing Gen. Entries, IV: 35.

The having a Watch kept to prevent Disorder by night to be left to further Consideration; but for the present, That the Sher-rife of ye City doe take an Exact List of ye inhabitants & Burgers in each Street of the Towne, & make Returne thereof to the Gover-no& Rct.:—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 58. A footnote adds, "This is an interesting fact in the history of the census of New York City, although the list seems not to be in existence." See Jan. 22-Feb. 1, 1764, for a later list.

23. "Hendrick Janse Vandervinck is accepted as Voorleer and Schoolmaster at New Harlem for three years for 400 florins yearly in Sewant, or in graine at the price in Sewant." Sixty loads of wood are promised the "voorleer" by seven of the inhabitants.—Harlem Rec. (MS. translation), I: 159. The records contain a list of 16 inhabitants assessed to raise the above 400 fl.—Ibid., I: 178.

5. Gov. Lovelace publishes an order that any persons who shall henceforth "steale or take away any Canoe or boate [see Feb. 13, 1671] . . . or shall Cut any Painter or Cordage belonging to any boat or Vessell in this harbour or elsewhere with ye 5th Governr's . . . shall be lyable to a Severe fyre Emprisonment without bate or Malaprise or Corporall punishment according to ye Demeritts of ye fact."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 397.

29. Paulus Leendertsen Vander Grift, one of the "Wes masters" (orphan-masters—see Sept. 4, 1668), having left the province, Cornelis Steenwyck and Johannes van Brugh are now appointed by the city bench as orphan-masters for the ensuing year.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 272.

The public cemener or carters having petitioned Gov. Lovelace that their number be fixed and limited, and that the public concern not be lessened in the case of the governor and council having referred the matter to the mayor's court, this court now grants the request upon condition that the carters be diligent in serving the public and give their assistance in filling up "the breaches in the high ways, in and about ye 8th Citty;" also, "that they by turns weekly by every Saturday in the afternoone" shall "Kart the dirt from all the Paved Streets and Convey it to some Convenient place," appointed for that purpose, and that "the dirt be throwne & Loaded upon the Cart by the owners or tenemants of the houses in the 8th streets." The carters' fees for a load of goods transported within the city's gates is fixed at ten st. in seawant.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 272-75. See April 16, 1667, and Feb. 15, 1672.

30. Public officials of the city are not required to pay the burgurers' excise on consumption of drink in their own households, as is shown by an order of the mayor's court, on behalf of the city's con-

"The House in Peare-Streect being forfeited in the last Dutch Warre, is Ordered to be sold."—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 63. This is undoubtedly the tobacco warehouse, managed by Augustine Herrman for Peter Gabry and Sons, of Amsterdam, which adjoined the "pak-buyt" or warehouse Coia. Both houses were confiscated in 1664, at the time of the surrender of New Amsterdam. Later the tobacco warehouse was occupied by Capt. William Dyre, collector of the port.—Innes, New. Am. and Its People, 52-55.

5. Mr. Sharp excuses himself for not conforming to the conditions of the sale to him at auction of Dominie's Hook (see Feb. 10) by confessing that he "was in Drinke, & without Reason & several Incomberances upon the Estate." The governor's council orders Dec. that he pay back to the auctioneer all the "Pluck-Money" paid out at the sale, the charges then expended in the house, and 200 guilders damage to the persons who exposed the place for sale, who may then dispose of it as they desire.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 64-65.

The description of the funeral solemnities of William Lovelace, nephew of Gov. Lovelace, is of interest as presenting an early and unusual picture of the social customs in the colony during the early days of English administration. The original document was found among a number of miscellaneous papers known as the Ambrose manuscripts, in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, Vol. 846, folio 54, number XI. It is written on both sides of a quarto sheet of seventeenth century paper in the hand of the period, and appears to be a commemoration of the occurrence, probably written in New York and sent or taken to England later. It was printed in the Am. Hist. Review (1907-8) thus:

1671 “At the entrance of the fiert stood his Royall bignesse's Company of Guards with Colours furl'd Drums beating a fiuernal March and afterwards Several great Guns fired thence.

The Mayor of the City of Cornelis van Ruyven and Johannes de Peyster to try to reconcile parties or report their proceedings and award bate to the court.

Dominie's Bouwerswyck is conveyed to Co. Francis Lovelace, governor of New York (Leiberi Deeds, B. 181, New York), from whom the title passed to the Duke of York, and then to the crown. It became part of the land which was successively known as the Duke's Farm, King's Farm, and Queen's Farm—Bogardus vs. Trinity, Sandford's Chan. Rep., IV: 725-26. See March 27, 1667, and Aug. 6, 1674.

On account of the weakness and decline of Rev. Samuel Dridius, the Rev. Agudius Luycck has “several tymeys” officiated in his place, “with good satisfaction” to the city fathers and the people. He is now thanked by the mayor's court, which requests him to continue his services “until further order.” He accepts their offer, and the court then agrees “that the son of one Col. Jaffray, the son of God of word” shall be taught in the former joy by Dridius and in the afternoon by Luycck.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 292.

The city's porters (or public laborers) of corne, planks, etc., having petitioned the mayor's court “that no Corne, Salt or planks” may be carried, save by themselves (since “many of the inhabitants employ other laborers”), the court gives them a restraining order, which, however, permits an owner “himself or by servants or Negroes of his owne” to handle his corne, planks, or salt.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 292.

With the appointment of new overseers of roads, another attempt is made to render the road between New York and Harlem (see Feb. 22, 1666). The magistrates of New Harlem and the overseers of highways beyond “Fresh Water” are ordered by the mayor's court to “lay out together the most suitable road and that then, on the first day of the next coming month of May, the said road shall be made fit for use by the inhabitants of the Village of Haelme and the house holders both on this and the other side of the Fresh Water, each for his limits; and that on such penalty as shall be fixed by said Magistrates and Overseers.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 296.

The mayor's court orders that for the future no wine shall “be delivered by any Merchent out of his house or Cellar, upon any Tappers or burgars bill, without a sworne porter be present.”—Rec. N. Am., VI: 293.

Several inhabitants of the city, who have been at expense in My
"Making a Stone Wall before their lotts allongst ye Waterside," May 1671 have been daily damaged in their rights "by reason ye Walls w/2 Gelyne Verplanck & Thomas Wandel" were to make, were "not made up" (see Sept. 27, 1670). The mayor's court now orders these persons to make up their Wall for further neglect. - Rec. N. Am., II: 301. See July 16.

Capt. Marten Cregler asks the mayor's court to devise a plan for choosing a lieutenant for his militia company, in place of Gouver Loockermans, who has died; and that an order be promulgated for finding members of the militia who failed to appear at the place of rendezvous "on proper summons or beat of the drum." The court decides that the office of lieutenant shall be filled by the remaining officers of the burguer corps sending in a double nomination to the mayor, who will "effect the election from said nomination by the Governor." Unwilling or negligent members of the burguer corps are to be "mulcted in a fine of fifty guilders znew to be applied" as the officers deem proper. - Rec. N. Am., VI: 299-300.

Rev. Samuel Drisius, in a petition on his own behalf, as well as for the widow of Rev. Johannes Megapolensius, deceased, has informed the mayor's court that divers "persons" are yet "in arrears to the previous allowance of the Preachers" of the city, notwithstanding the court's order of Feb. 14, 1669, requiring those in arrears to pay up within two weeks' time, "on pain of execution." The court now orders "the Beadle of the Church, Willem Verheuere," to "speak to all persons who by the list delivered in are "in arrears," and to make the arrest of each in particular in the margin of the list and deliver it in to Court on the Next Court day." - Rec. N. Am., VI: 700.

The appearance of "great Quantities of unmarked horses and Cattle ... found in the Common Woods," on Manhattan Island, in violation of the orders of the mayor's court (for such an order emanating from the governor's council (see Feb. 12, 1669), causes the court to declare that the official branders shall give notice that all horses and cattle must be branded within six weeks' time with the marks of either the city of New York or the town of Haerlem, otherwise to be deprived of grazing in "the Comon Woods" of the island; that if after that time they remain unmarked and unredeemed by owners, they shall be sold at public auction after due notice three times by outcry. - Rec. N. Am., VI: 531-52. See Dec. 5.

This is the first construction of a stone wall "in the State-House Yard" is this day ordered to be paid. - Rec. N. Am., VI: 508. See July 11. For an earlier well, within the fort, see Feb. 14, 1667.

At a meeting of the council for plantations, Col. Cartwright, one of the 35 domestic plans to be made "as to their numbers that there were Men able to bear Arms" that there are 1,500 men in "New York Long Island and New Jersey." - Jour. Coun. for Plantations, I: 45-46.

Gov. Lovelace takes action regarding certain matters in connection with the Lutheran Church: 1. In response to a petition from Christian Peters, who had bound himself to Asser Levy (mortgagee of Cornelis Jansen Pluver) for a "certaine Sume of Money due for a House w/2 bought for y/7 use & Benefit of ye Congregation in Gotten" (see Castello Plan, II: 224-25), he ordered that all "persons of that profession who have consented or subscribed to ye payment for the Church-House, that they pay their proportions according to Agreement, and likewise that they pay or cause to be paid unto y/7 said Magister the Pasto/7 their proportions of his Salary, until ye time of their late publice Disagreement." - See Oct. 17, 1673, for order to demolish church.

2. A further act, see Jan. 20, 1669, "by divers of his congregation" is deferred until July 6. - Ex. Coun. Min., II: 585-87; Morgan, 1654-60 (trans. by O'Cullaghan), 129. Levy brought suit against Pieters in the mayor's court, and that court, on Dec. 20, ordered that satisfaction be made. - "If the judge would be entered and Levy should then have his remedy against those of the Lutheran Church." - Rec. N. Am., VI: 351.

The building referred to in these proceedings was the house of Cornelis Jansen Pluver (Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 929). - June 29, 1673. (The exceptions, see note 9).

Liber Deeds, A: 115 (New York). With other structures standing too close to the city fortifications, the Lutheran Church was ordered demolished by Gov. Colvile on Oct. 7, 1675 (q.v.). For the new site, the Lutheran Superintendent of the "vessel or Wall" is called "je Lune Called the Maegelpaete" (Maalden Lane) is July 1675. See July 1675.

By a bill of sale of this date (recited in Liber Deeds, I: 126, Albany), John Smedes becomes possessed of a farm or bouwer heretofore belonging to "Cornelys van Tynboven" deceased, whose heirs and representatives, Peter Stountenburgh, Luycas van Tienhoven, and John Vigne, transport the same to him. For ground-"grievances," see June 14, 1844; see also March 20, 1675.

Because some members of the Lutheran congregation desire not only to have "nothing more to doe with their said Pasto/7 nor that hee may more modest them;" but also that some person may be appointed to supervise their accounts and collect the subscription money (see June 29), Gov. Lovelace appoints John Laurence to receive all subscriptions, and to make an inventory of "all such Vessells as doe belong to ye Church." - Ex. Coun. Min., I: 588. This case had been brought up on June 29--Ibld., II: 94-95.

Gov. Lovelace having recommended by letter that the mayor's court, together with some of the officers of the church, "take into Consideration and consider ye Salary for ye Experiments made in Europe [see March 16] may be Raised," the court now appoints "a private Court to be holden on fryday Next being ye 14th of this Instant in ye afternoon at — a Clocy," and requests that the "late Aldermen together with ye present and ye Late Church Officers" should "give their attendance ... to Consult with them Concerning ye premises." - Rec. N. Am., VI: 508-9. "In Obedience, To his Honor ye Govern/7 Letter and in pursuance of this Courts Order thereupon," this "private Court" met on the 14th. After the presentation of various proposals and debate thereon, "it was Mutuallly" on Manhattan Island, "decided to Returne for advise," "That itt should occasion a Great discontent amongst the people, to be both taxed & to pay Excise;" and, therefore, it was proposed, "that ye Grand Excise should be something Raised, & that an imposition should be Laid upon Rom going for Albany & Essex and that ye selling of Liquor to the Indians should be prohitted" as it was "throughout all the government & some Excise or Imposition should be Raised thereupon, or Otherwise that all the Excises should be totally abolished; and a Gennal taxe for all towne Charges be made." - Ibld., VI: 310-11.

Benjamin Johnson, the city's executioner of criminals, presents to the mayor's court his account of disbursements for making a stone wall in the yard of the city hall (see June 19) amounting to fl. 1941 to 1820. The court approves the account and directs its payment by the secretary. - Rec. N. Am., VI: 308.

The court puts Oldof Stevenson van Cortlandt in charge of "half Care and Mastership" of "the New York Long Island Waterdise before Gelyny Verplanckx house as farre the Townes part doth reach" to "be finished and Made up; And Mr Johnн Van Brugh to have the Managem in Repairing of the Half Moon before the State house." - Rec. N. Am., VI: 315. This "Half Moon" (battery) would be, on modern plans, on the south side of Pearl St., east of Coenties Alley. - See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

Gov. Lovelace grants the petition of the Lutheran minister (see June 29), Jacobus Fabricius, "to give his Congregation a Valdelectory Sermon, and to Install the new-Come Minis/7 Barthsardus Arentius, according to ye Custome used by those of their Religion." - Ex. Coun. Min., II: 588-9.

Gov. Lovelace orders "all Persoues of this City [New York] who Profess ye Art of Chyrurgery & Physic or any others who have Skill & Judges therein" to hold a consultation in Pearl St. over the charges of the widows of "William ye Old Berry-Man of Commi- pau/7 (now Jeruy City), who was troubled with a "sore Legg," for which she had been a long while under treatment. - General Entries, IV: 46 (N. Y. State Library, manuscript volume destroyed in capital fire in March, 1914).

The decision of the mayor's court to transfer the village court of Fordham to Haerlem is recorded thus: "All small Differances, with for the future shall happen to fall out at fordshom ... shall be Decided at Haerlem by ye Magistrates of fordham With ye
The ship "Expectation," commanded by Isaac Melvin, is boarded by George Sparre, Humphrey Davenport, and accomplices, under pretense of seizing the ship for the king. As this was a breach of the peace and in direct disobedience to the governor's order, a commission was appointed, on Oct. 25, to "hear and determine" the matter. — Exc. Coun. Min., I: 102-3. See Jan. 18, 1672.

Pieter Schaeftshack, keeper of the city jail, is advanced in salary by the mayor's court from 150 to 200 guilders per annum, beginning with Oct. 13, and the secretary is instructed to advance him enough money for "a new coat." — Rec. N. Am., VI: 340-41. For previous increase, see Oct. 10, 1670.

"John Feltham" (Fossace) asks the mayor's court again for "some support & relief in his sickness," and the court recommends him again to the Deacons of this City to inquire and examine into the truth of the matter. The court, in turn, recommends to the mayor his "continued assistance to the court, meanwhile allowing him some support in his sickness." — Rec. N. Am., VI: 340. See Dec. 5.

Proclamation is made by Gov. Lovelace requiring "all Persons that have for ye space of six Months been Inhabitants, either House Keepers or Lodgers in this City [New York] or any part of his R. Highness Dominions, who have Intent to Transport themselves in any Ship or Vessel out of this Governour's" to register their names at the office of the secretary and obtain a passport. This is done because some inhabitants want to board ship for the Carolinas. — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 658-59.

Commissioners are appointed to "view & state all Acces" either of the West India Company or the Towne, as to their Debt & Credit, & make Report thereof how they shall find the same to the Governour." This is necessary so that the governor may act with justice in the case of Coenraet ten Eyck and Boel Kuelofsen, trustees for an orphans' estate, part of which has been lent to the burgomasters for the use of the town. On account of the change of government, these funds have become unavailable, and the trustees are compelled to pay from their own pockets apprentice fees for the orphan, "with proves a great p'judice & Detriment unto them." — Exc. Coun. Min., I: 111-13.

The governor's council orders that all persons bring in their claims to unfenced or deserted lots or ground before the first or second of March, that orders may be issued regarding fencing, improvements, or buildings. — Exc. Coun. Min., I: 116; II: 623-31. A proclamation to this effect was issued by the governor on Jan. 6, 1672. — Ibid., II: 623-31.

The governor's council decides to organize a third militia company in New York. — Col. Coun. Min., 15. The court of mayor and aldermen, at the request of the governor, nominated officers for this new company on Jan. 23, 1673 (q.v.). For the formation of the other two companies, see Aug. 17, 1668.

Evert Pietersen complains to the mayor's court that Stoffel van Laer has not yet complied with the court order of Jan. 17 (q.v.). Failure on the part of the sheriff to secure satisfaction from Van Laer will result, the court declares, in an execution being "Issued out agst the Effects of the Sheriff himself." — Rec. N. Am., VI: 347. No additional record appears. In a list of "the best and most affluent inhabitants of this city," published in 1674 (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 699-700), Pietersen's name, assessed at 2,000 guilders, is found. It seems probable, therefore, that he was duly compensated for his services covering a period of ten years. — Col. Coun. Min., op. cit., 147. Pietersen continued as schoolmaster until 1686, when Abraham de Lancy was appointed to act in his place as "clerk, chorister, and visitor of the sick." — Kilpatrick, op. cit., 147.

The governor's council grants but one year's pay to Rev. Samuel Dirisius, in response to his request for the arrears due him during a period of illness. The deduction is because of his disability during at least half of that time. The council, however, recommends the deacons and elders to make him such further compensation as they may judge meet. — Exc. Coun. Min., I: 110-11.

The governor's council approves the proposal of the French minister, Rev. Jacques Roulland, who is going to Europe and plans to bring back with him some of his French Protostant's. The council decides to give him all encouragement.—Ex. Conn. Min., I: 116; II: 631.

It is ordered by the mayor's couth that all their beavers be paid per ton on all logwood or "Brazelito" shipped from this city to Europe.

John Fossacre, who lived on Long Island, in Westchester, and at "Oackleway" (Fairfield, Conn.) for about 18 years, and has come to New York City "since the Luterish dominion preached here," and "is a Member of their Church," being indigent; and the deacons of the Dutch Church of the city by having reported to the mayor's court that, being a Lutheran, Fossacre ought to be maintained by that denomination, the court orders the deacons of the Lutheraners to appear on the next court day.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 348. See Dec. 21.

The mayor's court, upon complaint of several inhabitants that various persons are committing the abuse of "casting filth before their houses," orders John Sharp to make "Knowne to the Sherriff, the Names of the persons with Carried the dirt from his house or that otherwise the Court shall Look to upon the 39th Sharp himself, to be guilty of ye same."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 349.

The mayor's court orders "that all Bakers" of the city, who make flour "to be exported out of the Governor" (see March 7) shall "brand their Markes uppon the Cakes" which they deliver to the merchants.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 347.

Jan Jansen and Abram Pietersen, coopers, are appointed by the mayor's court as "Sworne Censurers and Packets of Beefe and Porkers of the Mercers in this City," and are given the authority to sign the "Bakers".—Rec. N. Am., VI: 349.

Ariaen Cornelisse and Jan Langestraet, the branders of horses and cattle on Manhattan Island, complain to the mayor's court that, in violation of the court's order of June 7 (g.w.), "several unmarked horses & Cattle" are "kept in ye Common Woods of this Island," some of which have been "brought up and Cryed out by ye Common Cryer," but no owners appeared to claim them. The court maintains that if, after three proclamations made by the common crier of the city, no owner appears, the branders are authorized to sell the horses or cattle at public auction, holding the proceeds subject to the court's directions.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 349.

On the 20th, the court ordered the sale of "the Stray horses" to be held on the afternoon of the succeeding Saturday.—Ibid., VI: 351.

The mayor's court orders the marshal, Henry Newton (Nutton), "to give Warning to the Neighbours between the State house and the Gate, to cause their proportions of the Waaal before their houses to be finished & fild up."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 351.

The deacons of the Dutch Church complain to the court that they have been "Charged with some of the poore of the Lutheran profession [see Oct. 18, 1670, and Oct. 24 and Dec. 5, 1671]; not-with-standing a Collection" was "made for the poore in the ye Lutheran church," some of which have been "brought up and Cryed out by ye Common Cryer," but no owners appeared to claim them. The court maintains that if, after three proclamations made by the common crier of the city, no owner appears, the branders are authorized to sell the horses or cattle at public auction, holding the proceeds subject to the court's directions.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 349.

At a court-martial held at Fort James, Melchior Claes, a soldier accused of theft, is sentenced to "run the gantloope and to be kicked by the marshal out of the fort."—Col. Hist. Miss. Eng., 7.

In a book published this year in London, New York is described as follows: "Here is one very considerable Town, first built by the Dutch and called New-Amsterdam, which name is now changed to New-York: It is well seated both for Trade, Security, and Pleasure, in a small Isle called Manhattan, regulating by Hudsons-River, which severeth it from Long-Island, which said River is very commodious for Shipping, and is about two Leagues broad. The Town is large, containing about five hundred well-built Houses: and for Civil Government, it hath a Mayor, Alderman, a Sheriff, and Justices of the Peace for their Magistrates."

For the further security of this Town, here is raised a Fort called James-Fort, which is very strong, and well Defended and Maintained with Men and Ammunition. The Town is inhabited by the English, and Dutch, and hath a considerable Trade with the Indians, for the skins of Elks, Deer, Bears, &c. also for those of Beaver, Otter, and other Furs; and doth likewise enjoy a good Trade with the English.

An extra Nova charta, XCVI. 348. There are three maps; "Map of the Island of Jamaica," "General Map of Carolina," and "A Draft of the sea-coast and rivers of Virginia, Maryland, and New-England." The last named map shows Long-Island and Manhattan Island; the mainland is marked "New-York."—"Blome, Description of the Island of Jamaica..." (1670). See also his Present State of His Majesties Isles... (1675).

William Edmondson writes in his Journal of a meeting of Friends held in New York, probably the first Friends meeting held under a roof in the city: "When I was clear there [Maryland], I took passage by Sea, and about Ten Days after, landed safe at New-York, where no Friends lived. John Evans of Jamaica, being in my Company at that time, we lodged at a Dutch Womans House, who kept an Inn, and I was moved of the Lord to get a Meeting in that Town; for there had not been one there before; so I spoke to the Woman of the House to let us have a Meeting, who was very willing and let us have a large Soy made by her, with Seats, We gave notice thereof, and had a brave large Meeting, some of the Chief Officers, Magistrates, and leading Men of the Town were at it, very attentive they were, the Lord's Power being over them all, several of them appeared very loving after the Meeting, the Woman Daughter being Widow, both Father and Son when We went away."—Edmondson, A Journal, etc. (London, 1713),63-64. Martin Hoffman (or Hootman), having been chosen by the Lutherners of New York City to go to the Lutherners on the Delaware for the purpose of soliciting contributions there for the erection of "a House for their Church to meet in," in New York City, is granted passports and authority to do so by Lorolace. In this order Lovelace refers to the request he had received from ye Ministr of Officcs of the Lutheran congregation for his "Lycence to build & Erect a House for their Church to meet in."—Ex. Conn. Min., II: 389-90. N. Y. Col. Rec. Di., XII: 494. The original order, signed and sealed by Lovelace at Fort James, is now preserved among the Lovelace documents in the custody of St. Matthews Luthern Church. Beginning "To all whom this may concern," it recites: "Whereas ye Ministers and Officers of ye Church of ye Augustine Confession or Lutheran Congregation in this city under ye protection of his Royal Highness ye Duke of York have requested my license to build and erect a house for their Church to meet in, towards ye which they to All or ye most of their profession will in some measure contribute..."—Lovelace gives notice that Hoffman has to the Lutheran Church, according to a letter from Capt. Martin Creiger, bound for South River, Delaware, for the purpose above stated, provided "it doth no way tend to make Division or Disturbance amongst ye people..." See Oct. 7/17, 1673.

Gov. Lovelace notifies the collector of customs to give the ship "Expectation" (see Oct. 31, 1671) her discharge as the has been declared a free ship by a special court of oyer and terminer.—Ex. Conn. Min., II: 612.

The sheriff is ordered by the mayor's court to "make a strict enquirie after all Strange persons who have come to live within the City "Contrary to Order," and that they be summoned before the court.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 356. See Sept. 11 and Dec. 12.

This is, perhaps, the earliest suggestion leading to the later ordinance concerning "Strangers" (see March 15, 1754).

The sheriff is instructed by the mayor's court to search out such persons as take without a warrant, and be fined.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 356. One of the regulations regarding innkeepers and "ordinaryes" contained in the Duke's Laws required that each "Common Victor" or "publique Seller of wine Beare, Ale or strong waters by retail" should have a certificate of good behaviour from the constable at least two owners of his partizn and a license first obtained from two justices of the peace in the sessions.—Col. Laws N. T., I: 19.

The mayor's court orders the sheriff to give notice to all persons in default of "Makinge or paving their proportions of the Streets..." (see Sept. 19, 1671), that they Cause their said Streets with all the precincts in the name of the mayor's court and the inhabitants in that they represent the necessity of having the roof of the church in the fort renewed, and seek the aid of the court "for this work by furnishing as much money from the City's revenue" as possible and also by asking Gov. Lovelace for a contribution "from the public fund of the Province. The church having been in a bad state by reason of previous knowledge of the governor, allows, "from the City chest," 500 guilders seaward.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 676-88. In reply to Lewin's report on the government of New York, Andros says: "The taking the Tyles off the great house and shingling it, was in imitation of what was done by the Church by the inhabitants in my Predecessor's time to prevent Leakage by reason the Tyles were usually broken when the Guns were fired."—N. T. Col. Doc., III: 311.

England declares war on Holland.—Broodhead, Hist. State of 1727

A glance at this church, as it appears in the Visscher View of 1654-5 (Pl. 8-2, Vol. 1), and the Restitutio View of 1671 (Pl. 8-3, Vol. 1), will show that the roof had been very considerably altered between those years. Furthermore, Montanus, writing probably in 1679, refers to the church as rising "with a double roof between which a square tower looms aloft." Therefore, it seems very safe to conclude that the change from a single to a double peaked roof, as well as the shingling, followed this appropriation by the city.—See description, page 153.

The governor issues orders for raising a troop of horse. Correel Steenwyck is named captain, to take the "Subscriptions of all such Persons as shall voluntarily enlist themselves within this City and Precincts, as also at ye Bowrey, New Harlem and Fordam." Capt. Dudley Lovelace is to serve as lieutenant, and Gabriel Minviele as cornettist.—Ex. Coun. Min., 166. See May 6.

The sheriff has lodged a complaint in the mayor's court against several persons who were delinquent in paving their streets as required by ordinance (see Jan. 23), and also making their sheet piling (see Sept. 25, 1669) on the Strand. Gelyn Verplanck claims that Oloff Stevensen van Cordaadt is "obliged to pave before his own house," the widow of Burger Jorissen promises "to make her share of the street and sheet piling." Nicolaas Backer promises to pave his street as soon as his neighbours pave theirs; Gelyn Verplanck and James Matthews ask to be excused from "levelling their street unto their houses," are contrary. John Rider and Thomas Berryman are "ordered to pave their portion of the Winkel [Market] Street;" Sibert Claessens is "willing to make his sheeting provided the Governor" will "restore to him the stone, which he brought for that purpose to the place" and had been "ordered by their Saucyant [mayor] to finish," and promising to do so shortly, "in order that the Chief may re-visit and to the intent that just such as his neighbours begin to fill in," Tryntie Clcq declares she is "unable to fill in her part of the wall," and the court agrees to look into the better manner of filling in her share, since "her portion of the wall" is "so large," and she, a widow, is "unable to undertake it." Then the court decrees that all who have "failed to pave their streets and sidewalk pursuant to the Placard," shall "comply the same without delay," or suffer the prescribed penalty for infractions. A commission is appointed to see that the work is "prosecuted and completed with all possible expedition," as well as to "take into consideration, what streets or ways" need "to be paved besides those designated" in the former placard, and to give their advice, "how and in what manner the wall in front of Tryntie Clcq and the adjoining lots" shall be "filled in."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 145. See April 24.

To facilitate the measure of raising a troop of horse (see April 24), the governor gives permission to Capt. Steenwyck and his officers to "Enlist such and so many Volunteers out of ye Companys of foot..." as are capable to sett themselves forth with horses, furniture, & Armes," provided that not more than five or six be from any company.—Ex. Coun. Min., 166. See further.

In conformity with the orders of King Charles's letter of March 10 (q. n.), the governor's council orders that the king's commands in relation to "y' Navigation of Vessels from this Port for Europe shall be duly & punctually observed." It is further decided that for the "Security of Ships after they come here..." all Care shall be taken...besides the flort a Battery in ye most convenient Place of the City shall be made, to secure all Ships in the Road, and finally, li Peppers (q. q. q. q.)—see N. Y. Hist. Soc. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987.

The governor's council decides that the "Garrison in Pay" be Jone continued until further orders.—Ex. Coun. Min., 166. See May 11.

Jonas Bartelthen, the weighmaster, informs the mayor's court that several of the weights that belong to the weigh-house are worn out, and so under weight. He asks that censurers of the weights be appointed by the court "to bring them to the exact Weight of the Standard." The court appoints Juriaen Blankaert and Albert Bocht, a cutler, to censure not only the weights at the weigh-house but also all of the weights owned by any of the merchants and inhabitants of the city. This order, so far as it applied to the weights owned by the inhabitants, was immediately recalled; but, on July 2, Bartelthen again asked that the order for perfecting the weights in the weigh-house "be put in due Execution," which the court now ordered to be done "forthwith" by Blankaert and Bosch.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 734-38.

Jan Cornelisoon d' Ryck, Servyn Lourens, Jacob Leendenser, and Gerrit Hendricksem are appointed by the mayor's court as overseers of streets and highways, "as well on this as on the other side of the Fresh Water," for the end that "the further continuance of the year two and new be elected in the places of those retiring."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 734-75. The new feature of retaining always two men of experience on the board is worthy of note, as also the increase of one member (see April 18, 1671).

Because persons daily bring suit in the mayor's court, yet at the time of a hearing fall to appear in person or by an attorney to prosecute, the court orders that if the plaintiff hereafter fails to "appear to prosecute his Action at the first Court day after he Entred his Action," he shall be nonsuited and pay the costs.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 376. See Oct. 12.

Gov. Lovelace has "several times" recommended to the mayor's court "the Making up of ye Mote or Grant of" the city, and the court now declares that this work shall be performed by the owners of the houses and lots lying about or along the mote, or else by their tenants, as follows, "from ye Waterside upwards to the bridge over against ye St. Stone Streete to ye 1st line of such as are to make & finished in ye same forme & manner as ye Johanis de Pesyer "has already begun it, "to be made & finished the owners of ye houses & Lotts or ye Tenants for ye Owners accounts w^h in ye space of two months next ensuing ye date hereafter. Also from ye St. Corner of Jochem Beckemans upwards to ye Corner of ye Lane by Mr Jacob Kip [this lane is now Exchange Pl. and this order shows that the Gracht or Canal extended then up Broad St. as far as this point] in ye same forme & manner as before it is Expected to be made & finished w^h in the space of Three Months next ensuing the date thereof upon Penalty of—to be forfeited & paid by all those that shall be found defective in the finishing of their several proportions of ye space. Mote."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 377-78.

After approving the report of the commission appointed April 30 (q. n.), the court orders "that the Street called the Syck Steach shall bee paved in the Ferry lane, from thence by the westward to the corner of Hendrick van Daelesburgh, and from the small house of David Jochems to the Lott of Jacob van Couwenhoven deceased," shall "be Paved with Stones before the latter end of September next ensuing;" also, within the same time, that "the Street called the Prince Street [that part of Beaver St. between Broad and William Sts.] for the houses of Mr. Mann & Mr. Nichols to ye 3d & 4th houses of Jochem Beckemans, to the houses & lots of Mr Bedloe & the Widdow of Reyer Stoffel" (see Sept. 17), shall be paved likewise; also, "a Strocke or foot path" is "to be paved before the front of the houses, extending from the house of Mr Bedloe at the Waterside to the house of Cornelis van Borssum, and from thence to the house decided upon, suitable for a Massachusetts settlement. Lovelace writes that he has referred the two matters to the Duke of York.

The mayor's court declares that "the highway on the Waterside between Coenties & Tryntje Cloze" (i.e., Pearl St., from Coenties Alley to William St.—see April 30) is "soe washed away that the passengers" are "in danger of some Mishief," and that it is "necessary that the 9th highway bee forthwith repaired and made Levell." For the first offence, beside the fine to be imposed by the court, the offender is to have one of his ears cut off, as "an Example to all others:" and for the second, he is to receive still more severe punishment, such as the court shall direct.—Col. Laws N. T., I: 95.

10 By reason of the extraordinary "Occasion of Restoration of the forte in the City of New York [see July 5] . . . every Towne and corporation within this Province, as also particular persons have by their free Consents and Subscriptions contributed towards the same," and because of the disproportionate cost of collecting some of the subscriptions, it is ordered: "That the Charge of levelling & setting out the Conuntoe of this City or the ferry [sic] be borne by each respective Towne or distinc Person who hath subscribed the same," and that the payment be made before the last of Christmas next.—Col. Laws N. T., I: 96.

The members of the mayor's court resolve "to Contributo towards the repairation of the fort" (see July 3) 1,000 guilders seat- want, "to be 96 equally betwixt them and Ordered the Secretary to give an acc count thereof" to Gov. Lovelace.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 392. "Jan Jansen van Breest, Evert Duyckinck, and John Cooley are appointed by the mayor's court as fire-wardens of the city for one year, to view the chimneys in the city and its suburbs, fire owners whose chimneys are defective or unclean, and look after the care of the hooks and ladderst assembling them safely in "the same place," as they judge proper.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 393. See Dec. 26, Jan. 5, 1674.

Complaint is made to the mayor's court that the farmers of the small or burghers' excise are still negligent in paying and satisfying their arrears, which prevents the city treasurer from paying the city wages, as shown by vouchers received. The court orders the farmers to pay within eight days, or, if delictel, the sheriff shall levy by execution against them.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 391. The court further resolves that when defendants hereafter fail to appear either in person or by their attorneys at the first ensuing court day, or within forty days, upon the loss of his or her liberty, the sheriff or his deputee shall cause him to be committed to prison, and there determined and judgment be given upon the complaint, if the plaintiff.
The government’s council orders that “all Customable Goods with shall be Landed in this Port or any other part of ye Govern[ment] shall pay the Visual Customes for such Goods without any Rebate upon their Transports which they may, or shall have, or have occasion to use, or to use, or to make use of the like wise had, that at this juncture & Season (being a time of War) little or no Shippings arrive here, so that ye yestant Incomes of Customes is very slender. . . . noe Bills of Store shall be granted . . . . Although in better times the Governo' will be pleased to Grant that way such as may deserve the same.”—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 182–83.

The governor’s council agrees with a proposition of Dominie Nieuwenhuysen in proclaiming a fast for this city and island on “Wednesday fortnight next.”—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 182.

The governor’s council issues a proclamation increasing the value of wampum, in the hope of adding to the amount in circulation. Instead of eight white and four black beads, six white and three black shall pass for the value of a st. or penny, and three times “soe much" Yth Value of Silver.” Proclamations to this effect were sent to Long Island, Albany, Esopus, and Delaware.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 184–85. Cf. Beauchamp, Wampum and Shall Articles used by the New York Indians (Albany, 1901), 355–56.

The governor’s council issues an order whereby merchants sending off casks of bread or flour on their own account may mark them with a “known Mark” of their own; but such merchandise of the weighmaste and their strangers shall be branded with the public mark. The cure-master is to be retained in his office unless he willingly commits fraud.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 186.

The council continues at the next session to order that, during the ensuing year, theexcise shall be removed from small beer, hogs, beef, and any manner of flesh, whether killed here or elsewhere. An increased excise is ordered upon strong liquors.—Ex. Coun. Min., I: 187–88.

The colonists sometimes gave the title of mayor to the most influential person in the town. The word is used in this sense in the following terms: “The townsmen, holding any civil or military office in England, Wales, Berwick, Jersey, or Guernsey, shall be required to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy; publicly shall receive the publication of the Lord's Supper according to the usage of the Church of England; and shall declare belief in the Romanist doctrine of 'Transubstantiation.'”—Ex. Coun. Min., II: 790–92.

John Allyn, secretary of Connecticut, and a friend of John Winthrop, thus describes the visit to Hartford of Lovelace of New York: “The Governor, Col. Lovelace, & Capt. Nicolls, with three servants, came to Hartford on Fryday eve. & stayed till Tewsday morning. They were entertained at the Governor's house, I believe to good content. At their departure out of town, Capt. Clarke with his wife & servant of the gentl here waited upon them to Bathebetts Bluer & then gave him in farwell. Mr Willys, with Capt. Treat & two men, waited upon them to New Hannah.”—Writpaper, 6th ser., III: 453 in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections. It was during Lovelace’s visit to Connecticut that New York was captured by the Dutch (see July 30/Aug. 9, 1673).
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

The double date (or fraction) marks the reappearance of the Dutch calendar. To avoid confusion both the Old Style (numerator) and New Style (denominator) dates are given during the New Orange period.

The news of the arrival of the Dutch fleet off Sandy Hook, Monday, July 28, was brought to the fort from various sources. Gov. Lovelace's brother Thomas came from Staten Island in a canoe "only welling ten," an hour later from Gravesend reporting ten sail; about eleven at night, another boat from Staten Island brought word of 19 ships in the bay, while two hours later the reported number was increased to 21 by a messenger from "Nevesinkes, New Jersey, 30 miles away.

In the absence of Gov. Lovelace, who was on a visit to Connecticut (see July 29), Capt. Manning took charge. An express was immediately started to inform the governor; warrants were sent to Long Island requiring the militia companies there to repair to the fort; the beacons were fired; a scout was sent out to gather further details as to the fleet; and an attempt was made to put the cannon in ammunition in order.

On Tuesday morning, "provision, beare [beer], bread, liquors & such like necessaries" were brought into the fort and an order was given to the sheriff to bring in the ladders, "with he aloe neglected & kept them for y^e Enemy." About eight o'clock, Tuesday night, there being-calls shouted there they beel! there they beel!... we saw them at length very farely sayle in, one after another, till wee told 21 sayle," which anchored near Staten Island for the night.—Winthrop Papers, op. cit., III: 436-39.

Upon the eve of attack by such a force, the garrison is described as having but "a 4 Spunges Ramers for all the Guns of the fltarmes and carriages was alowe Badd either the Carriages Broake or they could not bring them to pass again their was neither Bedd Spade Hansspike or other material to help to defend us [There were 4 Bantions of 10 Gunns] upon every Bastion 4 Curtaine each Curtaine near 80 paces long and we had but between 70 and 80 men to help to maintain y^e whole ground."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 62.

Next morning, Wednesday, "wee very cherfully made our selves as ready for a brush as wee were able; but God knows all was in waine tho our hearts were good; for in all this tynee wee had not a man from Long Island, tho they were expected, nor more than a douzen men from y^e Towne,—y^e Dutch standing neuter,—a high shame for English men, who have allways wore y^e garland as to paynt of honor and valore, that in such an eminente occasion they would now their necks out of y^e collar to save a few dirty goods, ... when it stond them in hand, unless they were voyde of all loyalty, to buckle on their armour in defence of their King & Country, as well as to preserve their owne rights & immunities."

About ten o'clock, a boat, flying a flag of truce and containing Capt. Carr, Mr. Lovelace, and Mr. Sharp, set out for the Dutch fleet to demand a reason for their presence and to "treat with them amicably and friendly." About half way out they met a small Dutch boat bearing a flag of truce bound for the fort and carrying the following message: "My Lord,—The forces of war now lying in y^e sight are sent out by y^e High & Mighty States General of y^e United Provinces and his Serene Highness y^e Prince of Orange for to destroy their enemies. Wherefore wee have sent you this summons, to y^e end y^e doe surrender unto Vs y^e Fort called Jersey and remaining good quarter; upon default where of we shall be forced both by sea & land to prosecute our order in such manner as wee shall see to be most advantagious for y^e Serene General and his Serene Highness y^e Prince of Orange. Dated on board y^e ship Swansburgh, riding betwixt Staten Island and Long Island, this 9th of August, 1673."

[signed] "Cornelius Everendene Junior " Jacob Benetec.

Capt. Manning, feeling that his only hope lay in delay, "kept y^e trumpeter here two or 3 hours, treating him with meete, drick, wine, & such accomodations, thicking that they would not return, and Mr. Fort till they did, notwithstanding they did, both winde and tyde being fayre for them."—Winthrop Papers, III: 439-41. The Dutch realized the danger of delay, for "When their fleets was cometh in Sandicook several of y^e Dutch went on Board them from Vtrecht and flatbush upon Long Island and Informe them of the absence of our Governor and weeness of our Garrison and y^e number of our men."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 62. This served to confirm the testimony obtained from a sloop off the coast of Virginia, where the Dutch had taken eight English merchantmen and sunk five. The captain of the sloop tried to mislead the Dutch by representing an able defence for the city, "with made them resolue to steere another course, & not goe to Newyork;" but one of the prisoners declared "New Yorke was in no condition to defend itself ag^e the Dutch, that they had few canons mounted and those that were upon such rotten carriages that one discharge would shake them to pecces & dismount the Canon; that there were but few men in armes in the fort, that any considerable number could not be easily drawn together, that the Govern^e was absent, being gone to C. Nedecott to visit Govr Winthrop all with encouraged the Dutch to visit that place."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 213. For a statement of the general instructions under which the Dutch fleet was operating, see Aug. 14/24.

When the fleet was near Nottin Island, the closest within shot of the fort, Manning sent back to the Dutch a trumpeter with the following answer: "My Lords,—I have receaved by y^o trumpet a summons w^h declares you are sent from y^e High & Mighty States General of y^e United Provinces and his Serene Highness y^e Prince of Orange, to demand a surrender of this his Majestyes garrisons, but being arrivd from hence who are treating with you, I give you this answer, w^h upon return of those gentlemen I shall send you a positwe answer, eyther of y^e surrendering, or non-surrendering of this his Majestyes garrison. Dated at Fort James in N^e York,—this 50th of July, 1673. [Note difference in dates of the Dutch and English epistles.]

[signed] "John Manning."

Upon receipt of this note, the Dutch sent the Englishmen back to the fort saying they would grant half an hour for their reply. They "turnd up y^e glass and kept on saying, telling our men at 5 their departure that when y^e half hour was expired they would fyre a gun as a warning piece to minde us of our answere." True to their promise, the gun was fired and, as they were about to anchor before the fort, Mr. Sharpe, in hope of further respite, was dispatched with the following:

"My Lords,—For the perseruation of y^e burghers of this citi, whom wee have promised to protect, wee desire you to forbear all acts of hostilitie till y^e morrow morning at 10 y^e clock, at w^h tyne wee shall send you our articles and our resolution thereupon. Dated at Fort James in N^e York, July 30th 1673. One of y^e clock in y^e afternoon.

The enemy, however, would promise no longer, and, with the grant of another half hour, again turned up the glass. This time having expired, and they seeing "noe returnes from us, but all our colours on y^e contrary flourishing upon every bastion of y^e Fort, they fyred two guns to leeward as warning pieces to get their men on sharp, the w^o theses on y^e works easily perceived." The firing between fleet and fort lasted for about an hour, when a flag of truce was put upon the walls, and later the "Bagg" was struck and three men were sent out to meet the enemy, who were "marching downe y^e broad way towards y^e Fort."

After some parley, the following articles of surrender were guaranteed by the Dutch:

1. That all y^e office & souldie in y^e Fort shall march out with colours flying & drums beating.

2. That y^e Fort, with all y^e artillery arms & ammunicions, shall be delivered unto y^e Dutch Genl. or Comander, or to them who shall be there unto appointed.

3. That y^e English offis, souldiers, & others belonging either to y^e Fort or Towne, shall march away where they please, with their goods, bagge & baggage, without hindrance or molestacion.—Winthrop Papers, III: 442-43.

Contrary to their promise, however, they put a "Guard upon and made us prisoners in y^e Church and fell plundering of all the Bagg and Baggage and y^e next Morning put us on Board seuerall of their Ships of War & soe carried us some to Newfoundland and y^e Fortinquall Islands where they inhumanely left us and some to New Bruselles w^h we have not heard from as yet."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 62.

Despite the 600 or 700 shots received, but one man at the fort was killed. The damage to the Dutch could not be definitely ascertained, although one or two of their "cheele ships" had to be manned, and it was reputed that 18 men were killed or wounded.—

Israel Chauncy, writing to Gov. Winthrop (the letter is dated Stratford, Aug. 5, 1673), says: "The talking of N-yorke, with the effusion of so little blood is a matter much wondered at; it is very strange that they should be in no better preparation to encounter with an enemy, they had very few Guns that were upon field Carriages, and those after they were once shot off (as it is thought) unfit for further service the carriages breaking."—

Winthrop, Pars, XII, 131.

A letter from Hartford is sent to New York expostulating against the Dutch demand for submission on the part of the towns on the eastern end of Long Island, and the seizure of a vessel belonging to that place. The letter further tells that messengers are being sent "to know your further intentions," &c. must let you know, that wee &c. Confederates the united colonies of New England, are by of Royall souerayne Charles the second made keepers of his subjects liberty in these partes &c hope to acquire ourselves in that trust through the Assistance of all mighty God, for the Preservation of his Majes's Colonies in New England.—

N. Y. Col. Docs., II, 54-S. See Aug. 14/24; and Addenda.

The transition of the form of government of the city, now called New Orange, by which a bench of schout, burgomasters, and schepens superseded the English system of sheriff, mayor, and aldermen, which had been in operation since June, 1665, was brought about as follows: On August 13, Commanders Evertsen and Beneckes instructed Cornelis Steenwyck to have orders issued for calling the burgurers of the city together so that "four or six of them might be chosen as a delegation to confer with them and a council of war on the following morning." This was accordingly "convoked at the City Hall" and chose six deputies. On the 15th, the deputies met the commanders and council of war at Fort Willem Hendrick, and were then requested "to convene the Commonalty again" without delay, at the City Hall, for the purpose of nominating "six persons for Burgomasters and fifteen for Schepens," who were to be drawn "from the wealthiest inhabitants and those only" who confirmed to "the Reformed Christian Religion." From these nominees, whose names were submitted by the city's deputies on the 16th, and all of whom as candidates first took the oath of allegiance to the Dutch, the English commanders and council of war chose, on the 17th, the following persons as the first city bench under the new order, viz. Anthony de Milt, schout; Johannes van Brugh, Johannes de Peyster, and Egidius Luyck, three burgomasters; and Willem Beeckman, Jeromins Ebbingh, Jacob Kip, Laurens vander Spiegel, and Gelyn vanpluck, five schepens. Proclamation of these appointments was made on the 18th. The members of the bench took the oath of office, agreeing to "administer good law and justice between parties in cases brought before them; to promote the welfare of the city and its inhabitants; and to maintain Christian Religion agreeably to the Word of God and the order of the Synod of Dordrecht taught in the Netherlands Church; and "in all circumstances obey, maintain and help to maintain the Supreme government" in authority, "and prevent," as far as they were able, "everything" in "conflict with it."—N. Y. Col. Docs., 1773-75, Rec. N. Y., at that time, p. 95-98.

The Beneces and Evertsen Charter (so-called) of New Orange closes with the words "Done fortress Willem Hendrick, this 17th August Ao 1673." This is an early, if not the earliest, reference to the fort by this name. It was Fort James under Nicole's rule, and Fort Amsterdam prior to that. The reference is to be found in the translation from the New Orange Records in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (8vo ed.), I, 604-5. See Sept. 8, 1663; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III, 944-8.

The Dutch council of war, by proclamation of this date, seizes "all the houses, goods and effects with the outstanding debts in this city," and all in the county remaining and annexed to the township of Kings of England, France and their subjects." On Sept. 10/20 (o. s.), this was affirmed, and the new condition added, "together with the houses, lands, goods and effects belonging to the Duke of York, his late Governor, and Auditor-General, and all other his Military officers in this county," and all in the county remaining and annexed to the township of Kings of England, France and their subjects. This was said High Mightyseesses and his Serene Highness [Prince of Orange], excepting alone the goods and effects belonging to the actual inhabitants of the neighboring Colonies of New England, Virginia and Maryland who for sufficient reasons are as yet excepted from this Confinement.—N. Y. Col. Docs., 1773-75, Rec. N. Y., at that time, p. 95-98.

The newly organized board of burgomasters and schepens send Sebeout de Milt and Burgomaster Luyck to the Dutch naval commanders "to confer with them on some necessary matters." Having fulfilled their errand, they returned and reported that 1673 — "they were expressly charged by the Hooibre Commanders, that Aug. 8-18 the Magistrates should take care, that the Burghers . . . be sworn in future. Likewise that the Magistrates and Constables of the late Mayor Jno Lawrence be brought in together with the Constables' staves and the colours and handed over," to the commanders. Lawrence was sent for and informed of the order, with which he agreed to comply. The commanders, moreover, empowered the lieutenants to become the new captains in the three burghe companies of the city and authorised them, with the scheepen, to elect their lieutenants and ensigns. A beginning was made "to swear in the Burghers and inhabitants." Lawrence reap- peared in court and delivered up "his gown and cloak with the City Seal and Mace and the remainder of the gowns and Constables' staves in like manner brought and fetched into the fort by the express order of the Commanders, except the two burghe flags," which were allowed, with the consent of the commanders, to remain at the house of Burgomaster Van Brugh.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 399.

"It is resolved by the city court "to causing the collection of the great and small excise and to change the fines to double the amount," the face to go one-third to the informer, one-third to the schout, and one-third to the city; also, that nobody shall "presume to tap without license under a penalty of 25 guilders," exemption being granted only to "the crew of the national vessels, the supreme and subaltern government and hospitals." Small beer is to be taxed at half the excise rate.

Balthazar Bayard was offered the chairmanship of the tapsters' and burghe excise, which he accepted on the 28th, to continue until May 1, 1674. His perquisites were five per cent. of the collections, "the proceedings of the permits." The court promulgated ordinances in regard to the excise fees to be operative within the jurisdiction of "the City of New Orange," which ex- tended "unto the Sawkill" (Sawmill Creek entered East River at 24th St.). The tapsters were required to secure their licenses from Bayard, who kept books there to "pay "half tapster excise." Regulations against smuggling, etc., were included, and the rating of the burghe excise was laid down with precision. The office hours of the collector were fixed upon for both summer and winter seasons.

On Sept. 5, the court made additional provisions, that tapsters outside of the city proper could "lay in a barrel of strong beer at Burgher excise at harvest or the Merry Making and at burials both within and without this City;" that "all officers belonging to Fort Willem Hendrick must pay the full excise as well as the tapsters themselves," if they laid in and consumed wines or beer in the tapsters' houses; and that the payment of the excise should be made forthwith, if possible, or at least within 14 days.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 401-2, 402-4, 409.

Cornells Barentsen, who has been measurer of grain and salt in the city "for about fifteen years," requests the new city court to confirm him in office. The request is granted.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 399-400.

10-20 Nicolas Bayard is commissioned by the Dutch council of war "as Secretary and Register of the Province of New Netherland."—N. Y. Col. Doc., II: 612-14.

12-22 An order is issued by the burgomasters and scheepen to the inhabitants of New Harlem to assemble on the morrow to nominate eight magistrates, all to be of the Reformed Christian religion. From this number the court will choose four (see Aug. 23).—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I: 92-93; in N. Y. Pub. Library.

In Rec. N. Am., VII: 400, the 21st is given as the date of this order. This may be explained as the date when the magistrates instructed Secretary Bayard to issue the order.

13-23 The inhabitants of the village of New Harlem having presented a double set of nominations for magistrates (see Aug. 12-22), the city court from these nominees chooses the following as magistrates of the village, viz.: Resolved Waldron, David de Marest, Joost Gusmers, and Arendt Harmense. Hendrick Jansen vander Vin is chosen as village secretary. Waldron is also selected by the city's schout to be under schout at New Harlem.—Harlem Recs., 99, cit; III: 93-95; Ricket, Hist. of Harlem, 377; Rec. N. Am., VII: 400. In the Rec. N. Am., last cited, the clerk of New Orange appears to have erroneously included this and other items immediately following (in all about two printed pages) under Aug. 18. See, further, Aug. 19-25.

The inhabitants dwelling on Manhattan Island, between the city and the village of New Harlem, having nominated magistrates, the city bench elects from their number Jan Langstraet as under schout; Dirck Janse, Jacob Leendere, and Jan Pietersen, schout; and Jan van Couwenhoven, secretary. These take the oath and are required to take a census of the residents in their district and tender to each the oath of allegiance.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 400-1. Date not in original, but confirmed by Harlem Recs.

Hendrik Oele is chosen by the city court "as City-Drummer for the 8, 9, awaan," to "serve that Burgher Companies according to his ability."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 402.

The city court "resolved to offer at public sale the produce of the Weigh Scales according to previous conditions."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 401. See Aug. 20/30.

14-24 Letter from the "Commdg[r] & Counsell of War" at New Orange is sent to Hartford, in reply to the one of Aug. 7/17 (g. 17), in which the commanders say: "We . . . are sent forth . . . to doe all manner of dammage vato the enemies of the said high and mighty lords, both by water and by land; from which cause we be- ing come here into Hudson's River have brought the land and forts in the same under obedience; and in regard the villages lying to the eastward of Oyster Bay did belong to this Governmen" so it is to prevent all inconveniences we have cited the same to give the oath of fidelity; in which if they remain defective, we are resolved to force them with the armes likewise; aliose we shall not be afraid to go against those that shall seek to molest their villagers in their injustices. Concerning the vessel that is taken by vs close to yes havens, their is noe other consideration but that it was taken from of enemies, wherefore it appeares very strange before vs that we should be objected against concerning it."—N. Y. Col. Doc., II: 58-59. See also 15-25.

The new magistrates at New Harlem (see Aug. 13/23) summon 15-25 the other inhabitants of the village and administer to 32 of them the oath of allegiance. In the classification given, three only are listed as Englishmen, eight are called "Yeomanis" (i.e., unmarried), and five are over 60 years of age.—Harlem Recs, op. cit., III: 94-95; cf. Ricket, op. cit., III: 337-38.

The Dutch naval commanders and the council of war recom- mend to the city fathers "that the fortification of this City should be proceeded with, according as the engineer should order and stakke it out, so that no broken works should be erected." The city court appoints Capt. Marten Cregier as superintendent, in association with the engineer of the works.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 406-7.

A committee from the court of burgomasters and scheepen, after a conference with the naval commanders of the Dutch fleet and the council of war, reports as follows: "That the old stones of the Quay, wall, house and cellar and appurtenances thereof, belonging to an Englishman in other countries and now confiscated," shall "be again given to the City works in compensation for the stone here-fore taken, by the English government from the City's works."—Rec. N. Am., VI: 406.

The city court finds that the existing Sunday ordinances have been flagrantly violated by "many of the inhabitants," who almost make "a custom" of frequenting "the taverns more" on Sundays "than on other days," and take "their delight in illegal exercises." The court now restores the former ordinances and, "from sunrise to sundown on Sundays," interdicts "all sorts of handicraft, trade and traffic, gaming, boat-racing, or running with carts or wagons, fishing, fowling, running and picking nuts, strawberries, etc., all riotous racing, calling and shouting of children in the streets, together with all unlawful exercises and games, drunkenness, fre-quenting taverns or alehouses, dancing, cardplaying, ballplaying, rolling nine pins or bowls, etc., which are "more in vogue on this than any other day." Heavy fines are prescribed for violations. If officers of the law catch children in disobedience of the law, they "may" take their hat or upper garments, which is "not to be restored to the parents" until they have "paid a fine of two guilders." The in-ention of the law is not to prevent "a stranger or citizen" from buy- ing "a drink of wine or beer" for quenching his thirst, "but only to prevent the sitting of clubs on the Sabbath," which has hindered many from "resorting to Divine Worship."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 405.

The city of New Orange was now being strengthened in its de-fence, "in this year," it being observed, "the burghers and hogs roamed in great quantities about the roads and streets to the damage of the city's works. The city court, therefore, requires all the owners of hogs within the city, and as far as the Fresh Water, to confine them within two days from date and no longer suffer them to roam about, under a penalty of confiscation.—Rec.
The city bench orders that all fit persons who are "not yet on the watch" shall "be divided among the companies." Former labourers and porters to the weigh-house are continued in their places. —Rec. N. Am., VII: 402.

The city court unanimously agrees to let out the farming of the weigh-house (see Aug. 13/25), and fixes upon 3,000 L. as the lowest figure. —Rec. N. Am., VII: 407. On the next day, the court asked Balthazar Bayard if he would "also collect the Weigh-Money; but he refused, saying he would not be paid so handsomely" and that he had half the work of collecting the tapsters and Burgher excise." Jonas Bartelsen was then sent for and asked if he would either "rent it or collect the money." He offered to serve, at a salary of 600 fl., until May 1, 1674; but he absolutely refused to take it on a percentage basis. The court could not come to an agreement with him and, on Sept. 4, after some deliberation and debate, the city authorities appointed Timotheus Gabry as "Collector of the Weighhouse" of the city, until May 1, 1674, at an honorarium of eight per cent. of the collections, the profits from receipts to accrue to the city.—Ibíd., 408-9.

27th Sept. For "to quiet the government."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 597.

The city court, in a petition to Commanders Eversten and Sept. Benneces and the council of war, estimates the Dutch inhabitants of the province of New Netherland, including women and children, "to amount to six thousand souls." They have heard that the Dutch ships are all to depart and fear for their safety and that of the province in general, since they are surrounded by French and English, with whom the Dutch are technically at war. They say: "These enemies, albeit they now keep themselves somewhat quiet, will, if blessed with good fortune or any possible protection under England, as soon as they hear that we are again left to ourselves; our weakness and condition being as well known to them as to ourselves since they have, now 9 years' command over us." The city fathers plead with the commandants "to take to heart the welfare of so many innocent souls ... and not leave them a prey to be destroyed or to be sold as slaves to the English plantations;" and ask them "to allow under command and prudent conduct of at least one of the superior officers, two ships of war to winter here." The commandants give good heed, and agree, beside the garrison in the fort, to leave under Capt. Anthony Colve's command "one of our ships of War carrying forty guns, and a small frigate named the Zeekint," until other succor is sent from Fatherland.—N. T. Col. Docs., II: 598-600; see also 612, where the ship of war is mentioned as the "Serenatam."

The schout, burgomasters, and schepens of New Orange (forts Amsterdam and New York), in a letter to the states-general, write: "It hath pleased the All-governing God so to bless your High Mightinesses and his Serene Highness' Arms under the command of Commanders Jacob Beneces and Cornelis Evertsen, Jun., that this entire Province of New Netherland, consisting of three or more counties, well governed, was, to the great joy of its good inhabitants, on the 9th August last, reduced again under the obedience of your High Mightinesses and his Serene Highness, their lawful and native Sovereigns, from whose protection they were cut off about nine years ago in time of peace." The rest of the letter relates to the profitability of the province to the Fatherland and invokes the aid of the states-general in preserving it. It says: "the good Dutch inhabitants ... with women and children" are "estimated to amount here to about six to seven thousand souls," but scattered, "in consequence of the vastness of the country."—N. T. Col. Docs., II: 516-27; cf. also 588-79.

30th Sept. "to put across any strangers from this Island, unless they first exhibit a pass to that effect."—N. T. Col. Docs., II: 603.

Gov. Leverett of Massachusetts writes to Sec. Arlington regarding the capture of New York, and adds: "I have certain intelligences that the Americans are preparing an assault upon New York." Gov. Lovelace has been arrested for debts and it is said the Dutch intend him for Holland.—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 105. See Aug. 23/Sept. 2.

Former Gov. Lovelace is granted permission by the Dutch council, in the name of Commander Beneces's ship to Holland.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 603.

The Dutch commanders issue a proclamation in which they order "all strangers" in the city of New Orange who have "not taken the oath of allegiance" or "obtained a licence" from them to depart within one day after publication of the proclamation, or be "considered enemies of our State," and be "treated as spies and disturbers of our public peace." The inhabitants are forbidden to lodge or give beds to any strangers or outside people of what Nation soever, "before furnishing the names" and "places of their abode, to the Schout ... before the going down of the sun." Violation subjects the guilty to a fine of 600 guilders, in beaver, for each person so harboured unlawfully. The names are to be delivered "every evening before drum-beat" to the "Officer in the Fatherland."—N. T. Col. Docs., II: 606. The order of allegiance to the Dutch authority, as taken by the inhabitants of the city, and also as specifically subscribed by the English residents, is recorded in the minutes of the city court. The English residents who subscribed to the oath are not obliged to take up arms against the British crown in the war, now in action between the states-general of The Netherlands and Great Britain.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 8. See Aug. 15/25 for oath of allegiance in New Harlem.

"The Sachems and Chiefs of the Hackinsagh Indians, accompanied by about 20 of their people," request an audience with the Dutch commanders and council of war to Fort Willem Hendrick. They are admitted, and say they are sent "by the rest of their Indians, to request" a continued state of peace with the Dutch. They bring "about 20 deer skins, 2 @ 3 laps of Beaver, and 1 string of Wampum." Their presents and proposals are accepted, and in a council of information they are presented with "a checker'd linen, woolen hose, and some cartridges of powder."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 608.

Some sachems and chiefs from the Mohawks having come down to see the naval force of the Commanders and to make a report thereon," are received at Fort Willem Hendrick by Beneces and Eversten and presented with "a present of the choice, select powder, &c. 3 cartridges of powder, and 3 muskets."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 615.

Nicolas Bayard is commissioned by the Dutch council of war as "Book-keeper and Receiver-General of the Public Revenue and payments of this newly conquered Province of New Netherland." His duties are "to collect and receive all public revenue and income, to give acquittances for its receipt if needs be, also to keep account and entry in form with all officers and servants, colonists and merchants, whenever demanded, of all public payments."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 613-14.

An order is issued to the major of the garrison in Fort Willem Hendrick. It contains the following regulations:

1. A corporal's guard from each company shall be put on duty each day, "when the arms shall be inspected by the sergeants and corporals of the guard."

2. The guard shall be relieved "at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and at 11 o'clock on Sunday," and the officer in command "during the watch shall wear his sash and be continually in the fort, in order thus to be able to give an account of the watch, and in the morning to ... report ... what has occurred."

3. The reveille shall be beaten at daybreak, the gate opened as soon as it is light and that before dark. When the drum beats the tattoo at nine, "all soldiers and matrosses shall quietly repair to their quarters without making the least noise."

4. "The corporals shall take good care ... that not more than three or four [of their men] at the same time have leave to go and eat, pay particular attention that no strong drink be brought, much less drank, in the guard-house; constantly teach the men the use of arms and punctually observe all orders ... and, above all things, pay attention that no Dutchman nor Englishman (the city Magistrates excepted) come here into the Fort without permission of the same."

5. "The Grand Rounds shall go before midnight and receive the word," but both before and after this, a cadet "shall continually go the rounds as well also on Sunday during Divine service."

6. The soldiers shall "weekly clean out their barracks and quar- ters." The corporals shall take care "that the beds of the guard be loaded with a loose ball, and whenever it is necessary to discharge the muskets, in order to clean them, that shall be done on the Battery after drawing the ball; and ... each corporal on his watch shall 24 The burgomasters of the city of New Orange having called at Fort Willem Hendrick, Gov. 19 Cornelis van Borsum receives a patent (Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., XXIII: 20–435, Albany) for a piece of land bounded approximately by the present Broadway, Centre St., Chambers and Grand Sts., and through which Reade St. now passes. A large part of this land became later the negroes' burying-ground. See April 10, 1696; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927, subject "Pottersfield;" Pl. 174, Vol. III; also Man. Com. Coun. 18 Whereas Fort Willem Hendrick and the city of New Orange situated on Manhattan Island is seriously encumbered and weakened by the houses, gardens and orchards, which lie so close under its walls and bulwarks that it is impossible to defend it properly when occasion requires against its enemies. It is therefore considered necessary by the Governor-General, by and with the advice of his Council, to demolish pull down and remove the undermentioned houses gardens and orchards, and the owners thereof are hereby most strictly ordered and commanded instantly to commence demolishing and pulling down their houses, gardens and orchards. The owners are to pay the cost of the same and all the necessary expenses for the same, as well as the sale of the lots which, by the governor's order, have been set aside in other parts of the city for that purpose. All those who are found to be "contumacious or negligent" in executing the removal will not only lose the indemnity below mentioned, but also, "on the first arrival of any ships," will have their houses "demolished or burned." The ordinance applies to the houses, gardens, and orchards of Peter de Riemer, Lodewyck Post, George Cabbet, Jan Dircksen Meyer, Jacobus van de Water, Symon Blauck, Andries Meyer, Gerret Hendrick, and Peter Jansen Stutt, all of which are situated under the walls and bulwarks of Fort William Hendrick, to the houses, gardens, and orchards of Gerret Jansen Roos, Peter Stoutenburgh, Henry Taylor, The Lutheran Congregation, Willem van Vredenburg, Peter Jansen Mesier, Martin Meyer Smith, Augustine Hermanus, Lysbet Tysen, and Peter Harmesen, all of which are "Situated under the fortification and bulwarks of the city of New Orange," and the garden and orchards of Johannes van Brugh and Sara van Borsum. The expense incurred by the removal of the houses, as well as the value of the lots, is to be estimated "by impartial persons" and other lots of like value are to be given to each owner in lieu of the lots surrendered to the government, on which to replace the destroyed houses, garden, and orchards for all losses sustained is to be made from "the extra duty" which is hereafter to be collected upon certain exports and imports, according to percentages set forth in the order.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 637–35.

17 The ordinance was published on Oct. 7/17.—Rec. N. A., VII: 12. For repayment of the loan, see March 7/17, 1674.
The appraisers appointed Sept. 30/Oct. 10 (q.v.) decided that the Lutheran congregation should receive the "lot in Company's garden No. 7" (see May 16/26, 1676, valued at 435 £, and a balance of 415 £, making a total of 850 £ to cover the assessed value of the Lutherans' lot, together with the cost of removing the house.—N.Y. Col. Dec., II: 635-36.

Abell Hardenbroek is charged by Schout De Meert before the city court with delinquency and abusiveness; further, "being in the event of the crime and the City of New York & is at no time other than Pieter Schaefbraek" (the jailer), "carried on and made a racket like a man possessed and mad, notwithstanding the efforts of Burgomaster Van Brugh, running up to the Court-room, and going away next morning, as if he had not been imprisoned." He was fined, committed to prison, obliged to apologize to the court, and condemned in the costs incurred.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 9-10.

Allard Anthony asks the city court to exempt him from the excise, because he takes boarders who are "officers of the fort and therefore exempt from excise." The court consents.—Rec. N. Am., VIII: 12-13.

The Amsterdam board of admiralty informs the states-general concerning the expedition of Beekes and Evertsen, thus: "One Andries Michielson . . . presented himself to-day before our Board, and verbally reported that, after the abovementioned Captain Beekes, reinforced by Captain Cornelis Evertsen's squadron, had, together, burnt in the River of Virginia five English ships laden with tobacco, and captured six others, without having been able to effect anything further there, they had sailed for New Netherland, and became masters of the principal fortress situate on the Island Manhattes, on the 9th of August ultimo; that also, before that departure, a number of thirteen Dutch, when he was dispatched with letters hither, he had heard that they had reduced another fort, situate some thirty leagues inland."—N.Y. Col. Dec., II: 527; cf. also 528-59.

The amounts received and expended on the fortifications of New York, together with the property whose assessments remain unpaid, are recorded on a balance sheet of this date written in Dutch.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 27.

Gov. Colvile issues an order prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to soldiers or sailors garrisoned at Fort Willem Hendrick.—N.Y. Col. Dec., II: 650. This ordinance was renewed on Jan. 14/24, 1674.

"In a case against Thomas Lovelace, the governor's brother, the defendant is ordered to render an account within two weeks time "of the administration of the monies, contributed to the fortification" (see July 3/13, 1672), and it is decided that Lovelace's "private estate" is "not responsible therefore, unless it he found indebted thereunto."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 15-16. See Jan. 7/17, 1674.

The late governor, Francis Lovelace, when he departed the province, had "many outstanding debts and liabilities;" wherefore Gov. Colvile now appoints commissioners "to regulate the estate of said Mr. Lovelace and the government." It is reported in Broadway that Lovelace has been Lovelace's "Factor and Commissary," is now deceased; so Colvile orders his widow to hand over to the newly appointed commissioners, "under proper inventory, all the books, accounts and papers in any way concerning the aforesaid government and factorship of said Francis Lovelace, that the said value may be added to the communal estate, later, because he was able to "explain many doubtful items."—N.Y. Col. Dec., II: 651, 667.

At a meeting in London of the council for trade and plantations, Nov. 6 a committee report is offered concerning "ye reducing of New Yorkers," to the effect that "they have not yet had time fully to acquaint themselves in the State of that Affaires But having discovered with my Lord Baltimore on Saturday morning last concerning it, It is their opinion that notwithstanding ships cannot be conveniently sent thither, still after consideration, they do otherwise the Ships from hence to set Saille, so as to arrive there about the beginning of March, the entrance to New York being usually frozen up till about Equino (see Nov. 3/13) yet it is necessary that it should be here presently taken into consideration & a project of ye whole design made, that so Advice may be sent to Virginia by ye Ships now going thither, that the forces to be raised there & in Maryland, for this Occasion, may be in readiness to be Shipped against ye coming of His Maiestys fleet thither." The council acts favourably upon the report.—Jour. of Coun. for Plantations, 1676-86 (MS.), in Cong. Library, I: 52-52. See Nov. 3/13.

Arent Eversten Ketelops is appointed by the city court as corn measurer of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 9. So the grain measurer of New Amsterdam (see Jan. 22, 1677) and of New York (see Jan. 25, 1679) remains as a necessary official in New Orange.

The British council for trade and plantations at London considers various communications relating to the proposed recapture of New York, among them being the following: "Mr. Dyer a man who had been much conversant in New England informed ye Counsell That Road Island hath a safe Navigation to it for great ships within ye year Shute or tide supplied, with Ice, And was therefore, if ye King sends any Ships, for reducing New York, the fittest place for Rendezvous, from whence great Ships might Sayle to New York on the outside of Long Island, & lesser vessels with provisions & other necessaries might Sayle between Long Island & the maine land, & attempt ye Motions of ye New England forces with should march by Land. "Both hee & Mr. Harwood agreed that New England would rayse men for this service if His Maiestie will please to command them. And both Mr. Carteret & Mr. Dyer agreed that New York was the best place so frozen vp as to hinder ships from coming in ye Towne (see Oct. 17/27).

"Mr. Dyer was desired to bring two or three Pylats experienced in ye Coast about Road Island, Long Island & New Yorke to ye Counsell & Mr. Lock was Ordered to desire Mr. Harwood to do ye same."—Jour. of Coun. for Plantations, 1670-86 (MS.), op. cit., I: 53-54. See Nov. 3/13.

The city court gives instructions to the undersheriff and shcepens of the suburbs lying between the Fresh Water and New Harlem, consisting of fourteen articles. They provide for the conduct of a subsalter court in civil cases not exceeding 100 £, sealing cases such as fighting, striking, scornful, and such like, in the same. Appeal lies to the city bench, which is to have the ordinances of the city court executed properly within its jurisdiction; to conduct the payment of awards for wolves shot on the island within its district, and to levy a tax on the inhabitants for the payment of prescribed fines and for the damage they have caused. Interference with the arrest of animals is punishable by fines. If an animal is left longer than three days in the pound, the cost of fodder rests upon the owner or lessee, and if not claimed within three months, the animal is to be "sold to the highest bidder for payment of damages and fine." The "surplus" to be "applied according to law." Animals that "wont to leap over proper fences" must "be tied up, or removed elsewhere." When the undersheriff and shcepen give notice.—Rec. N. Am., VIII: 22-23.

Instructions for the overseers of fences and highways between New Harlem and the Fresh Water having been drawn up are now confirmed by the city court. They are required "on the first opportunity in a body" to "inspect all fences and roads between the Fresh Water and N. Haerlem," and to direct the owners to repair such as need it. Neglect by owners of the demands of the overseers, leads to fines of 25 fl. for the first, 50 fl. for the second, and 100 fl. for the third dereliction, "together with all damage done to the grain or crops." The overseers can summon persons to appear personally or by a proper substitute at any particular place "to aid in repairing a highway of to make a road," and all persons who fail therein are subject to a fine of six guilders for every day's remissness. If one neighbour maintains that another neighbour's fences are not "good or sufficient," and dreads "damage thereby," he is first [to] request his neighbour in love and friendship to repair his fence, and, failing to do so, he is then obliged to make inspection as soon as possible. If the overseer finds the complaint to be just, "the person complained of" is to pay them ten guilders "for the journey and inspection," and to make the repairs on their order; but if the complaint is unwarranted, the complaintant is to pay the ten guilders to the overseers for their trouble. As "divers lands lie within one fence," the overseers are required to mark out every party's share, to be kept in order. No one is to "pasture cattle on the lands and valleys lying in common except by common consent, when all the cows shall have been removed;" if anyone wishes to use a part of pasture, he can fence it in so much land at his own expense. Provisions are made for collecting fines, for notifying interested parties about the rules, and for regulating the office and duties of the overseers.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 20–22.

The Earl of Arlington informs the council for trade and plantations that they were sending six men of War, to reinforce Eveson but hee could not Lay any great Strees upon this information. The council orders that the secretary draw up an address containing suggestions for the campaign against New York to present to the king.—Jour. sess. for Plantations (MS.), op. cit., II 54–55.

For details of this plan, see Nov. 15–25.

In compliance with the order of the council for trade and plantations issued on Nov. 8/18 (g. w), the secretary presents to the Earl of Arlington a communication for the king, in which is emphasized the importance of New York, and in which is contained a detailed plan for such accomplishment. The danger arising to the colonies adjoining New York, New England on the one side and Maryland and Virginia on the other, from the occupancy of New York by a hostile nation is pointed out. This is the only fortified harbour along the coast, and offers a retreat for ships from which they may be unwelcome. The Virginia trade, resulting in loss of customs duties alone from $120,000 to $40,000, while the plantations, by loss of export and import facilities, may well be ruined. Trade with, indeed the existence of, the Caribbbean islands is also threatened.

New England is more populous and better able to defend itself against the enemy, but the danger there lies in the fact that "the inhabitants of New England, being more intent, upon ye advancemt of their own private trade, then ye publique Interest of ye Massachusetts Crown and Governm't, may if ye Dutch continue a quiet possession there, enter into commerce with them, whereby it is feared, they will at present divert a great part of ye Trade of England into those Countries," and lay a prejudicial foundation for a union between them and Holland.

It is probable that the English inhabitants of the eastern part of Long Island have not surrendered to the Dutch. The English have a superiority of numbers over the Dutch inhabitants, and if a force be sent from England speedily they will be in a good position to aid in retaking New York. The council therefore offers the following suggestions:

1. One ye rate, One ye 4th rate, two ye 5th rates, with 5 hired Merchant ships each whereof should carry upwards of 40 Guns, 3 fireships, & 600 Foote Souldiers are absolutely necessary. The three hired merchant-ships should have their "compart made up in good part of Landmen, that so as few Seamen as possible may be taken from ye Massachusetts service in other places."

2. There should be directed to such Merchant Ships as are going to Virginia, to some of whose ship it may be convenient that yeo Mass'y should lend some great guns.

3. An embargo should be laid "upon all ships preparing for Virginia, Mary Land, & ye rest of ye Northern Plantations, That no goods that he has received for the coast, nor any strong and serviceable vessels, & that all such Merchant ships as goe with this convoy be obliged to follow your Massachusetts ships & to receive orders from them." Passengers and servants going to Virginia on the merchant ships are to be trained by the officers of the expedition.

4. Enough powder and other ammunition are to be supplied to carry New York and Albany, when taken, for their defence.

5. All possibility of or making a new new-war going out of the Thames with the merchantmen as may serve as a convoy, the others and the 600 foot soldiers joining them at Plymouth or some other convenient port. At that time the commander-in-chief is to open his commission and instructions, and not before.

6. Preparations should be made with all haste for the voyage to New York, and when within convenient distance from the coast, one small ship shall be dispatched to Rhode Island and one to the eastern end of Long Island with orders to raise forces in New England and Long Island to aid in this design.

7. If the expedition prove successful, the Dutch which remain in the colony should be "removed farther up into ye Country from ye Sea side, at least as far as Albany, their inhabiting ye town of New-Yorke being a great cause of ye loss of both Towne & Castle now."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 211–13. New York was, however, returned to England by treaty (see Feb. 14/19, 1674).

The city court publishes the proclamation of Gov. Colv for a day of general fasting, thanksgiving, and prayer, to be observed in the city and province "on the first Wednesday of each month." The next day, the court sent a copy of this proclamation to the district, "for the furtherance of the New York Establishment." The carters of the city are assembled in the city court and asked if they will consent to a deduction from their wages for their share in paying for the work on the fortifications of the city. They agree to leave the matter to the discretion of the court, which decrees "that seven carters per day shall be deducted from each carter's a/c on the City book, for horse and cart," and that each of them shall "henceforth work in company like the other Burghers."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 30–31.

Capt. Evertson, commander of the ship "Surinam," being sailing away from the city, ordered, by the three burgomasters to Gov. Colv "to ascertain the reason," since it was "contrary to the tenor of the apostille granted" in response "to their petition presented to the Hon'ble Commanders and the Council of War," Sept. 6, preceding. Colv informs them he cannot and will not "explain to any person his resolution and intention," but assures "the whole Burghery in their name that with or without that ship" he will not "undertake nor execute any thing except what he shall consider serviceable and expedient for the fort, the City and the Burghery."—Rec. N. Am., VIII: 31.

Francis Beado, a native of London, is sentenced by the Dutch provincial council at Port William to direct, for having come to New Netherland "without consent" in order to "disturb the good people thereof." Beado has claimed to have a "commission" empowering him "by fire and sword to attack, rob, burn and destroy" the inhabitants, "which he also threatened to put in execution in the village of Flushing," which would have doubtless carried out had he not been prevented by arrest. He is sentenced to "be brought to the place where justice is usually executed and there placed at the stake to be firmly bound and to be branded on the back with a red hot iron," and then banished. This sentence was executed on the 20th of the month.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 665–66.

Gov. Colv has found that, contrary to orders and proclamations hitherto issued, "many strangers, yea enemies of this state," have attempted to come to New Netherland without a passport, and some "even presumed to show themselves within this city."

Dec. 12

The inhabitants, too, "forgetting their oath of allegiance," have kept up a daily correspondence "with the neighboring Colonies of New England and other enemies of this state." Former edicts are now renewed, and all persons who have not yet bound themselves by an oath of allegiance to the Dutch sovereignty are given 24 hours' time to leave New Netherland. Strangers without a passport are to be seized and detained as prisoners till their office to be examined.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 665–66. See also Dec. 12/13, 1673.

By a secret resolution of the states-general, relating to the government of New Netherland, Joris Andringa, who was secretary...
CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664–1763

1673 of De Ruyster's fleet, is "appointed and commissioned" governor Dec. of New Netherland as successor to Anthony Colvo, to "be Chief of New Netherland and Supreme Ruler, both in civil and military affairs," subject to orders from the board of admiralty of Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 310–11, 531.

"Capt. Willem Kayff, commanding a company of Dutch infantry in Fort Willem Hendrick, is commissioned by Gov. Colvo as provincial "Fiscal and Public Prosecutor of the Province of New Netherland." His duties are to promote its increase, population, peace and order, and to take care that the various jurisdiction and domain are "maintained without suffering anything to be directly or indirectly attempted to the prejudice or injury thereof; also to apprehend and prosecute all malefactors, whether criminal, political, or military," in provincial matters, and to "pay particular attention that all scandals, irregularities and ungodliness be driven from this Province;" also to "execute all placcards and ordinances as well as "all sentences and judgements of the supreme magis- tracy."

1679 Gov. Colvo issues an order as follows: "Whereas, divers out- side people have requested, for the better security of their families and goods against any attack of the enemy, that they may be permitted to remove them hither within this city, and that some houses may be appropriated for that purpose; also, that for the present some orders may be issued respecting the Long Island Ferry, to the end that their property to be sent across, may be conveyed over with safety to be ferried. To that end, this purpose he commissions Councillor Steenwyck, Coroelis van Rayuven, and Burgomaster Van Brugh "to inspect all houses and dwellings within this city, to ascertain what rooms therein can be hereafter conveniently vacated, and to billet therein such outside people as apply to them; likewise, to issue such orders respecting the Ferry as they shall deem necessary for the better accommodation of housekeepers."
—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 669–70.

11–21 Allard Anthony is "admitted a public notary and attorney in private suits pending before the superior and inferior courts of New Netherland. He was sworn in on January 11, 1674.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 671, 677.

12–22 On or about this date, the militia officers are summoned by Gov. Colvo to the fort and thanked "for the great zeal they exhibited in fortifying" the city. He urges them "to persevere therein until the work be completed."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 670.

13–23 Cornelis Steenwyck, formerly captain of horse, is commissioned captain of a new company of militia of the city.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 671.

1677 Gov. Colvo and council prohibit "the exportation from this city from this day forth of all provisions and other articles except such as are necessary to last the Dutch magistrates resident on the flat land, shall have need of for their families and no more." The inhabitants of the city are also commanded "to begin to lay in a supply of necessary provisions for six or eight consecutive months commencing next April."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 671. This order is issued by the mayor's court Dec. 15/27.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 35.

16–26 Gov. Colvo, in view of the expected arrival of an English fleet, orders the militia companies of the Dutch towns on Long Island to appear "fully armed . . . the 19th instant, in the foregoing, in the city of New Orange, in front of Fort Willem Hendrick." One-third of each company shall then be furloughed for the present, to remain in their respective towns until relieved by another corporal's guard. The officers and magistrates may give such orders respecting "threshing and foddering the cattle" as best suits their district. Both a day and night guard must be kept, so that they may not be "surprised by the enemy or cut off from us."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 75.

17–27 Gov. Colvo, realizing the need of vigilance, recommends to the schout, magistrates, and inhabitants of New Harlem and Fordham, that they "keep a wakeful eye on all designs which may be concocted to subvert this peace or yourselves in particular, and always . . . be ready to transport your families and movables hither on certain information of the [English] enemy's approach, or on special command from me." For this purpose he names Resolved Waldron as "chief officer of the militia of the towns of Harlem and Ford- ham" and "in the evening" is "required to choose a Sergeant."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 673–74.

The fortifications of the city being now "mostly completed," Gov. Colvo issues orders "for the preservation of the same and better security of this City," as follows: That henceforth "the Burgher watch" of the city shall be "set and commence at drumbeat about half an hour before sun down, when the train bands" of the city "then on guard" shall "parade before the City Hall," that the "city gate" shall be "closed at sun down by the Mayor of this city and his attendant train bands and in like manner opened at sun rise;" that nobody, save "the watch alone," shall "attempt coming from sunset to sun rise on the bulwarks, bastions or batteries" of the city "on pain of bodily correction;" that anybody, without excep- tion, who presumes "to land within" the city, "or quit the same in any other manner, way or means then through the ordinary City gate," shall be subject to the death penalty; and that hogs in the city be kept off "the bulwarks, bastions, gardens or batteries," subject to confiscation and fine upon the owners.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 35–56; N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 974.

1674 The colony of Manhattan is "bless'd with the richest soil in all New-England, I have heard it reported from men of Judgement and Integrity, that one Bushel of European-Wheat hath yielded a hundred in one year. Their other Commodities are Furs, and the like. New-York is situated at the mouth of the great River Moho- gana, and is built with Dutch Brick alla-moderna, the meanest house therein being valued at One hundred pounds, to the Landward it is compassed with a Wall of good thickness; at the entrance of the River is an Island with many houses and public buildings, that shall attempt to pass without theirleave."

A court case in Harlem, April 5, 1677, brought out testimony that "they of the French congregation, in the time of Gov. Francis Lovelace, having received a preacher, the aforesaid governour had said that 'the French of the Town of New Harlem should be free as to contributing to the Dutch voorloer.'"—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 375–76.

"Rev. Pierre Daillé is said to have been the first 'pastor' of the French Church in New York. But according to the reference in the text, a 'preacher' had preceded him by ten years or more, whose name, however, is unknown to us. The statement is of interest as showing that the refugees at N. Y. and H. joined to introduce and sustain the French service as early as 1674."

In this year, Samuel Sewall, of Boston, began his interesting diary, which he continued until 1729.—Winson, op. cit., V: 167.

Jacobs vande Water is commissioned as town major and "audi- tor of the court martial" (see Oct. 15/25 of the city of New Orange).—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 674–75. See also ibid., II: 677–78.

The Dutch Orange, under its captain, is "required to retain the former custom of having fire-wardens."

Four men are appointed, two of whom have been fire-wardens under the English régime (see Oct. 8, 1673). They are "requested and au- thorized to execute and fill the aforesaid office . . . in such man- ner as the same has been heretofore executed and filled."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 35. See Jan. 20/30.

Gov. Colvo presents in the city court "a provisional instruction for the Schout, Burgomasters and Scheepens," consisting of fifteen articles. Among the directions are these—to "take care that the Reformed Christian Religion, conformable to the Sydor of Dor- drecht," is "maintained, without suffering any other sects attempt- ing any thing contrary thereto;" that the schout shall "be present at all meetings and preside over them unless" Gov. Colvo or "some person appointed by him" be present, who shall then preside, and the schout shall "take rank" on such occasions "below the youngest acting Burgomaster;" that the schout is not to sit on the bench when acting as prosecutor before the court; that "all matters appertaining to the police, security and peace of the inhabitants," as well as "justice between man and man," "in cases not exceeding 50 beavers, shall be finally determined by them, and in all cases in excess, an appeal may be made to the supreme bench of governor-general and counselors that "all criminal of- fences" in the city's jurisdiction are to "be amenable to the judi- cature" of the city court, which shall have power to judge and sentence the same even under the Death," yet "that the sentence of corporal punishment" shall "be executed unless the approval of the Governor" has been "first sought and obtained;" that the presiding burgomaster shall convolve the court and, on "the night before, make the same known to Capt. Willem Knyff" (the proof the court are to provide for their successors, by convoking an assembly on Aug. 11, "being eight days before the

and most wealthy persons and such only as" are "of the Reformed Christian ReHgion, or at least well affected towards it, as Schout, Burgomasters and Schepens," handing the nominations, "folded and sealed, on the same day," to the governour-general, from which he shall make election of the new bench on August 17. Rec. N.
Am., VII: 36-39; N. T. Col Docs., II: 678-81. The burgomasters and schepens, having heard the instructions read, resolve "to adjourn the meeting until the next morning, to revise and consider the instructions granted." This fact is communicated by the presiding burgomaster, Johannes de Peyster, to Capt. Knyff, who immediately quits the meeting and separates from them.
The three burgomasters were then sent to see Gov. Colve at the fort.
He asked them why they had adjourned so abruptly and "refused to allow Capt. Knyff to preside." They answered "that not the smallest disrespect was committed, but that they had adjourned the meeting to examine the newly granted instruction and that when Capt. Knyff was informed thereof he had left the meeting." After the case had been argued, pro and con, Colve ordered them to "forthwith repair back to the City Hall, to give without delay conjointly a categorical answer," as to whether they would allow KnyfT "to preside at their Court," and, if they refused, he would "immediately dismiss and discharge" the whole bench and appoint others in their places.
Moreover, Colve despatched Cornelis Steenwyck, of his council, and Nicolaes Bayard, the provincial secretary, to the city court to receive their answer and Knyff to preside. The city bench, having "considered and weighed" the situation, voted unanimously to reply that they appreciated the presence of the governour in their court as "a great condescension" on his part; that if he had "any doubt or misgiving" of their "judicial proceedings or behaviour," he should "inspect and examine the Minutes," which would show clearly what they had done; that they thought it proper to say, briefly, that what he desired conflicted "with the laws, statutes, and Ordinances" of the mother country, which their "commission and oath" bound them "to observe and obey;" that it was "manifestly prejudicial to the privileges of this Bench and Burghery," a depreciation of their character, and contrary to the practice of the cities of the Fatherland; furthermore, it could not be otherwise "than prejudicial to the public peace of this Burghery," as already shown by the unjust accusation by Capt. Knyff; that they were "grieved" to find that all their "solicitude, trouble, care, and labour expended to this time for the good" of the city and its people "should be requited by a dismissal for bad and illegal conduct," and "beseeching" Colve "to arrange the matter in a more gentle manner" and not misinterpret their zeal for the welfare of the city. Their answer was pre-behalf of the Governor presiding," with Anthony de Milt in attendance as schout. Knyff continued at the head of the court in his capacity as fiscal during the term, and, when in August a new bench was elected, Knyff continued as the president in the capacity of schout. Ibid., Vll: 43,113.

The city court having found itself embarrassed by " the expences successively incurred in fortifying this City of N. Orange," and troubled by the demands made upon the city "by its creditors for payment and earned wages" (whereas, "little or nothing" has been received from "the outside people"), the court, acting in unison, appeals to Gov. Colve for reUef. He merely answers that he will "take their proposition into consideration," and appoint some persons to consult with them on ways and means, but prefers that the bench should find a way of furnishing the funds.
The court again sent its committee to remind the governour of "the verbal promise" he and the Dutch naval commanders had made, that, "if necessity required it," the city would be granted
"the proceeds of the tapsters and weighhouse excise" for as long a time as required. As this excise did not promise an immediate way out, the court recommended to Colve the authorization of a loan for the city from "amongst some of the most wealthy inhabitants."
At the request of one Jan Cooly (John Cooley), the city court appoints Jacob Leisler and Dirck van Clyff "to examine the books and papers of the fortification of the Fort, lately called James, which now remain in the hands of Sieur ffrancois Rombouts and to render a report of their award at the next Court day." Rec.N. Am,, VII:

The city fathers, in a petition, having informed Gov. Colve that the city is heavily in debt on account "of the excessive expenses incurred ... in the fortification" thereof, and the creditors daily demanding payment, the burgomasters and schepens request "that some expedient be found and invented for the payment and discharge of those expenses already incurred, and yet to be incurred, for completing said fortifications." Gov. Colve thinks this a reasonable demand and concludes that the most equitable solution Hes guilders in wampum value; and, in order that the execution of the order may "be effected in the tenderest and fairest manner,"

Colve resolves that the assessment is to be levied "by six indifferent persons." This tax commission consists of Cornelis Steenwyck and Nicolas Bayard, representing the provincial government, Cornelis van Ruyven and Olof Stevensen van Cortlandt, representing the Commonalty, and two deputies of the city bench.
"A like commission" is also given to Burgomasters Van Brugh and Luyck, Schepen Kip, and the merchants, Capt. Martin



Jan. 27. Colve's representative, Capt. Kniff, as presiding officer (see Jan. 6/16), especial interest is attached to a court case of this date in which the regular members oppose as a body the judgment of Kniff.— Rec. N. Am., VII: 50.

"Complaints having been lodged against the city carvers, charg- ing them with negligence" to ride timber, stone and other materials for the City and public service," the city court decrees, that upon "their first refusal or exhibition of unwillingness," their horses shall "be immediately untacked, and they be deprived of their places of carvers."— Rec. N. Am., VII: 31.

"Pursuant to order and appoint," issued by Colve on Feb. 1, "on a Petition presented by this W. Court Jany. 16th." (p. r.), the city bench "commissioned and qualified from their Court . . . the president Burgomaster Johannis de Peyster and Schepen Wm. Beeckman to help make out with the Commissioners on the part of the Supreme Government and Commonalty, a general assessment enacted by the Honble Governor and put the same into execution according to his Hono: order." On the 10th, the city court, "being assembled Collegialiter," addressed a letter to the villages of Midwout, Breuckelen, and Amenosf, in which they said they "had made a new "full" order" on their "engagement and promise to furnish and collect" for the city "some monies," and requested them "particularly to assist" and "send the monies demanded by the earliest opportunity."— Rec. N. Am., VII: 51-52. See Feb. 14/24.

Feb. 21. The Lord Governor General and rigorous Council of War of N. of N. discharging justice in the name and by authority of their High Mightinesses . . . have condemned and sentenced . . . Aml Cesar . . . that with the upper part of the body naked he shall run through the garrison of this fortress and be beaten with Switches for as long as the Council of War shall deem well, and thereupon, with the ensign above the head, shall again be admitted among the company, in order to perform his duty as before." At the same time Jacob Farmout is sentenced to run the gauntlet in a similar manner, "his sword to be broken before [his] feet by the executioner," and he to be banished from the island for four years. Jacob Prick must "ride the wooden horse with 24 lbs. weight on each leg, during the time that Jacob Farmout shall run the gauntlet."— Translated from the Dutch in N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIII: 302-06.

Feb. On this date, Colve finds that "the respective Commissioners appointed at two different times having known and passed over the property of the Burgurers" had made a written report of their assessment, varying very much in "divers items," so he ordered that each set of commissioners should name three, "each in its Board," who were to meet at the city hall on the following Monday morning (19th) to consider anew and revise the valuation" which had been made, doing some other county business, and then report the result to the council. — Ibid., II: 688. See Feb. 9/19.

Feb. 19 On this date, pursuant to a second order of the governor-general (Colve), the valuation is obtained, "in the city Hall of this City, by the Commissioners, from the second compiled valuation of the best and most affluent inhabitants of this City." The list of 62 names is recorded, with a total valuation of 520,900 fl. in Holland currency on 62 estates. Frederick Felipe was the highest assessed, with 89,000 fl. Cornelis Steecke and Nicolaes de Meyer followed with 50,000 fl. each; Olden Stevensen von Cortlandt, with 45,000 fl.; Jeronimus Ebbinge, 30,000 fl.; Cornelis van Ruyven, 18,000 fl.; and Johannes de Peyster and Jacob Leisler, 15,000 fl. each.— Ibid., II: 699-700. Est. Rec., I: 641-53. For a later order, see March 7/17. Valentine, in Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 809-59, gives in three separate columns the first valuation, the second valuation, and the "extracted valuation.

Another interesting list of the inhabitants and their property at this time was compiled by Valentine, who explains that his estimate of the wealth of the several inhabitants is not based upon any one document, but is compiled from several sources and is designed to be only an approximate valuation. The inhabitants are described in a variety of ways, and the ownership of the Owners Of houses and lots in the city, about the year 1674, at the final cession to the English; the property being classified according to its relative value, as first, second, third and fourth; with the national descent of the persons named—given to illustrate the condition of the population at that era—and their estimated wealth,—Valentine, Hist. City of N. T., 319 and footnote.

The Treaty of Westminster is signed by Arlington and four other commissioners on the part of Great Britain, and by France on the part of the United Netherlands. Its provisions are, in part, as follows:

1. The houor of the flag is yielded to England. In a letter from Gov. Leverett of Massachusetts to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, Leverett somewhat elaborated this article: "the Treaty General to give due acknowledgement of the flagg whether singl or in fleets . . . to any ship or vessel, belonging to his majesty of Great Britannie whether single or greater Number if they carry his majestyes flagg or Jacke."—Winthrop Papers, in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections, 7th ser., XI: 104.

2. The Treaty of Breda is revived.

3. The rights of neutrals are guaranteed.

4. The commercial principles of the Triple Alliance are renewed.

By the sixth article, it is covenanted that "all lands, islands, cities, havens, castles and fortresses" taken by one party from the other before the time limited for the duration of hostilities shall be restored to the former owner. This article restored New Netherland to Great Britain (see Oct. 31/Nov. 16). The Treaty of Breda had called it to the king "by a promise of equal and reciprocal provisions." The Treaty of Westminster gave it back to him on the principle of "reciprocal restitution."—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 251, and authorities there cited. The Leverett letter, op. cit., mentions a provision requiring the states-general of The Netherlands to pay "500,000 pounds, one fourth on the Rattification of the Treaty the rest in three equal years by equal portions."

News of the signing of the treaty, and the consequent cessation of hostilities, did not reach New York until July 11 (p. 5).

The first printed reference to the final cession of New York to England is contained (on p. 7) in His Majesty's Gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, January 24, 1674-5. As also A Letter From the States-General of the United Provinces, to His Majesty the King of Great Britain, &c. January 24-25, 1674-5, together with certain proposals from the said States-General to His Majesty, concerning a Peace (London, 1675-4). See also A. Maurice Law's The American People (1909), Chap. XXI (on "How the Dutch Came and Went").

The use of any other measures or weights than "the real Amsterdam measure and weight" is prohibited by a provincial edict. All merchants, shopkeepers, or others using measures or weights are ordered to have the same stamped within two weeks "by the sworn Sealer."— N. Y. Col. Doc., II: 688.

Isaac Kip is granted the office of official stamper and brander by the city court; he was sworn in on the 27th.— Rec. N. Am., VII: 58-65. See Feb. 24/25.

The city bench resolves "to give notice of the contracting next Thursday [24] for some boarded palisades for the fortification" of the city, and chooses the schout and scheepen Jacob Kip and Gelyn Verplacke to close a contract for the city.— Rec. N. Am., VII: 59.

Complaints being made daily "to the burgomasters and Burgber Chief Officers" against "many of the inhabitants" of the city who, contrary to orders, fail to "appear at the appointed time in their respective companies to aid in advancing the public necessary work of fortifying" the city, the city court resumes its order "that each and every one" shall "repair to his company and corporal's squad at the appointed day and place of work and there advance the public necessary work," on pain of a fine of six fl. per day, or three fl. per half-day, etc., for lost time, the fines to be "collected and gathered precisely every week by the Provost and the respective Corporals," who are charged to "keep a correct account and list of the absent persons."— Rec. N. Am., VII: 60-61.

Cornelis Steecke and Cornelis van Ruyven have come into the city court and declared they were commissioned by Gov. Colve to make a statement in regard to the court's petition about "furnishing of some monies for the fortifying" of the city, and that Colve, "having seen and considered the assessment made," thought the required monies should be borrowed in the form of loans from the richest and wealthiest inhabitants" (see Jan. 6/16) of the city, and that each of the taxed should advance the hundred pence thereto [see June 2/14] which loaned monies should be re-paid from certain extraordinary imports enacted" by the governor "to be paid for this purpose on all imported and exported Indian goods and mercantile;" also that the governor thought some persons, such as the three wealthy or widows, should be excluded from the obligation: and that he "judged it most proper to make use of the said monies as well to strengthen the Fort and City and for this purpose to appoint two Commissioners to dispose of the receipt and disbursement, in consideration whereof the contributions to be collected for this purpose shall and other places in town be again fetched both for the fortification of the City and fort." The city bench approves the governor's proposal.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 63.

16-26 Ariaen Cornelissen, being asked by the city court "for payment of some wines and beer found at his house on the first gauging," replied that he was "only to pay the wine at the price of the beer himself."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 62-63. See Aug. 22, 1665. Cornelissen "lived a little out of town, beyond the Fresh Water."—See Danckwaert's Journal, 1679.

17-27 The fire-wardsen (see Dec. 26/Jan. 5) present to the court of schout, burgomasters, and schepens a detailed report of their findings. They say that, on Jan. 5, they visited "the houses of all the inhabitants" of the city and "found divers fires place very much exposed to cause a conflagration," for which reason they "warned and notified" such persons "to remedy and improve the same, thus to prevent mischief." They also "caused the City Crier to make known, that if any one of the inhabitants" had possession of "any City fire buckets," he was to "deliver them up without delay at the City Hall" or hand them to the fire-wardsen; but they were not able to collect more than 37 fire buckets, three of which were being repaired by Abel Hardenbroeck. Moreover, they "found also" that there were "two old and 7 new" buckets, which were "unsuit for use in case of fire or other mischief." They now, therefore, request the city court to provide them with as "many fire ladders and fire hooks" as the court thinks necessary. The court authorizes the fire-wardsen "to have made such supply of ladders, hooks and such like materials at the expense of the City" as they themselves consider to be necessary.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 66-67.

24a "The Stamp master" (see Feb. 10/20) asks the city court whether he is "also to stamp the miller's measures, as several persons" 6 have been to him about it. The court decrees "that the millers shall also be stamped, and that the stamper shall receive 3 stiv. a piece for stamping."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 68-69.

"The city court resolves to send a petition to the Gov. Colve, requesting that "no vessels nor persons" shall leave the city, as it is "now open water." On account of the shortness of the time, they send the three burgomasters instead, "to confer with the Governour" in the matter.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 69. See Feb. 16/March 8.

26e The following order is issued by the governor's council:—

"Whereas divers Skippers and Sloop captains have requested leave 8 to sail to Esopus and Wilmotestadt with their vessels, whereby this city, with reference to the Gold of the said Provinces and the greatly weakened," the court of the city is ordered to summon the shipmasters and instruct them that, for the better security of this city, "no more than two sloops" shall "go at once to Wilmestadt and Esopus and one to the South River, and that alternately," as shall "be determined by lot;" also, that the skippers "shall not convey any passengers hence without passport."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 695. The city court meet the shipmasters March 10, and informed them of the order. After hearing it a majority of the skippers asked that the earnings be "put in a common fund" from which each of them should "then draw his share out according to the size of his sloop." The city court presented this conclusion of the skippers to Colve, who, on the 15th, ordered "that said skippers and barquiers" should, "according to the majority of their opinions, sail in a common stock," etc., in line with their conclusion.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 70-71. See April 8/18.

27v King Charles II is avant-garde from "Our Court at Whitehall," for publishing the peace of Westminster (see Feb. 9/ 19) between England and The Netherlands.—From the original preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Mar. 3-15 Gov. Colve, by proclamation to the five Dutch towns on Long Island, Harlem, Fordham, and Bergen, orders them "on the first notice" of the approach of the enemy to come to the defence of the city of New Orange, "provided with proper hand and side arms." Those who fail to comply are to be "declared traitors and perjuries, and consequently be proceeded against as enemies, or be punished with death and confiscation of all their goods, as an example to others."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: Mar. 696, 701.

6-16 "From the nomination made by the Under-Schout and Schepens beyond the Fresh Water," the city court elects and swears in Ariaen Cornelissen as commissary, "in place of Dirck Jansen Kuypier, who is now gone away from thence."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 72.

7-17 Fear of the approach of an English expedition decides Colve to order that "all and other places in town be again fetched both for the fortification of the City and fort."—See Danckwaert's Journal, 1679.

14-24 701. The governor appoints Jacobus vande Water, the town major of New Orange, "Book-keeper and Receiver of the moneys which will be furnished and advanced pursuant to the Proclamation dated 17th inst. [6], for completing the fortifications of this city." He is to pay out the money only on order of the governor.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 701. Such orders for large amounts were issued by Colve on April 25 and May 18.—Ibid., II: 707, 711. As some persons were diligent in the payment of their proportions, Colve ordered the city court, on June 12, to begin "immediate execution" against them.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 719. See also May 2/12. So that the inhabitants of the suburbs may come to the aid of the city in case any enemies arrive, Gov. Colve commissions Cornelis Strangwyck and Cordyl strippedge and the under-warden of this city to summon and order the "skippers and boatmen" of the city "promptly to obey whatever orders" are given to them in the premises.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 702.

17-27 Gov. Colve issues the following order: "Whereas the vessels lying in the harbor near the public Weigh-house of this city are considered to be seriously in the way should the enemy arrive, and it is therefore necessary that they be brought thence in season, inside the float (in 't sloe), therefore all skippers, barge and boat-men of this city, are hereby ordered and instructed to bring their vessels from the said harbor inside the float, and to anchor before this city, and on the arrival of more one ship at a time, to haul them behind the ship Sarinam near the circular battery (rendier) in front of the widow Lookquermans, on pain of having all vessels without discrimination burnt, which will then be found lying in the way.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 702. The fortification here referred to, as in front of the house of the late Master Lookquerman, is located as about in front or slightly eastward of the present No. 117 Pearl St., and is shown on Pl. 17, Vol. L.

By the sixth article of the treaty of Westminster (see Feb. 9/19), Charles II now addresses the states-general, thus: We desire that you would order the dispatch as early as possible of the necessary instructions to your Governor or Commandant of the place called New-York in the West Indies, to surrender it to Sieur Edmond Andrés, or to such other person as we shall depute thither, with all its dependencies, arms, artillery, ammunition and material of war, of what sort soever they may be, and in the same state as they were

1674 at the time of the publication of the peace; Which orders you will please to give to Chevalier Sylvius to be sent hither, as we have in the 3d. ordered Andros to proceed to the said place of New-York with all speed, because of her pretended desire of it, for us and to make the 10 name."—N. T. Col. Docs., III. 544. For the action of the states-general thereon, see Apr. 6/16.

Apr. 6-16 The states-general, having considered the letter of Charles II of Mar. 31/Apr. 10 (q.v.), resolves that the board of admiralty of the state of Zealand and also that at Amsterdam shall be advised to "give such orders, and make provision that . . . New Netherland, . . . be vacated and restored" to the king of Great Britain. "And that to such end the officers and military, &c., who have reduced said place and still keep possession of it, be withdrawn with all their property, artillery, gunpowder, implements of war and everything they have had, taken and conquered there . . . leaving the aforesaid place, also the cannon, gunpowder and all implements of war appertaining thereunto, in such a state as they were at the time New Netherlands was mastered." Orders shall also be given to the governor or commander there to "give up New Netherland . . . to Edmund Andros, or to such other person as his Majesty shall depute."

In a letter of the same date to King Charles, the states-general expresses the hope that the king will leave the inhabitants of New Netherland in "full and entire possession of the lands, property and rights of the parts."—N. T. Col. Docs., III. 554-56.

Because "great damage" has been "done to the fortifications" of the city "by cattle, and particularly hogs," which have been "kept in herds along the public streets," and also have been the cause of "great stench and filth," by which the city became "infected," so that "on this account illness has resulted, Gov. Colv. now forbids "the running of hogs, be they big or little, within this city along the public streets," and requires that they be "confined in inclosed and fenced places." So, likewise, horses and cows are forbidden to roam within the city's walls "or to go along the public streets without a person to drive them to and from pasture."—N. T. Col. Docs., III. 704-05.

8/18 On complaint of the magistrates of New Harlem, Gov. Colv interdicts all persons from "going to shoot or catch hogs in the public woods" on Manhattan Island without an official permit, and orders "written notices" to be posted informing the inhabitants that cattle or hogs are not "to run and graze in the public woods" without official consent.—N. T. Col. Docs., III. 706.

14/24 The porters of the weigh-house ask the city bench to give them also the office of grain carriers in the city. They are answered by Gov. Colv in the matters of this house. —N. T. Col. Docs., VII. 80.

17/27 A resolution is enacted at Fort William Henry requiring the community of New Harlem on the second day of Whitsuntide next "to collect and drive into their village all the horses of the late Governor Lovelace Captain Leavell or belonging to any of the officers of the English government as are now running in the woods upon Manhattan Island, and so many of them as they shall come to get."—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), I. 198.

21st For baptizing a child of Reformed Church parents, on April 18, My 1 "when the father was from home," Jannette de Kleuse is brought before the city court by Schout De Witt and, although she pleads ignorance and asks forgiveness "if she did wrong," she is condemned to "be imprisoned and remain there until further order."—Rec. N. Am., VII. 101. The governor and council of war have found that it is impossible to repay the principal property owners of the city who have been assessed to loan money for fortifying the town (see Jan. 22/Feb. 1). Moreover, it is directed that "for the further support" of the garrison at Fort Willem Hendrick and for "other public expenses." To raise this money, they now decide, "in default of other ready effects" or equity, to hypothecate certain "pieces of metal cannon" in the fort which may be sent to Holland if necessary to be sold.—N. T. Col. Docs., II. 710-11.

The Mohawks submit several proposals to Gov. Colv, together with gifts of wampum. They renew pledges of friendship and loyalty, saying that if the French should come against the Dutch they will "march out with the Dutch and live and die with them." They express pleasure at the strength of the fort and hope that an other nation will become master of it. As they are going further to renew their covenants they desire permission to pass through New Netherland on their return, and as they "are old men" they request to be taken up the river "in a yacht." The governor answers in courteous terms, thanking them for their offers of help, and promising to protect them against invasion by their enemies. He hopes to provide transportation for them. On June 5 they returned and wanted to be taken home, but requested that some trade regulations might be made so that they might once again buy a duffel coat for one beaver and other goods in proportion. The governor explained that the high prices were due to the long European war, but when he finds favor he would be willing to sell them as cheap as possible. Three of the prized duffel coats were given them, together with gunpowder, lead, socks, and a hat, and they were promised passage on the first yacht that went up the river.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 479-85; ibid., II: 712-13, 716-17.

Schout De Witt repeats a charge of him made (Rec. N. Am., VII. 83) against Antoni Jansen, an old resident of Manhattan, who had come from Salae to Morocco. The charge is "that in the night between the 28th. and 29th of April" Jansen "suffered an Englishman, named Edward Bambri [a Quaker], dwelling at Martenar's Neck, to sleep" (at his house), which was "directly contrary to the Placard of the Honble Governor General enacted on that subject." De Witt asks that Jansen be fined, as required by law, 600 fl., with costs. Jansen's wife testifies "that the Quaker was brought at Nine o'Clock in the evening to the house by Margriet Phillips' daughter who told her at the same time, that the Quaker was already notified of said Quaker, and therefore was sent to him while he was here. Margriet Phillips and her daughter deny their complicity and the court adjourns the case until the next court day. It then condemned Jansen "for reasons" in a fine of only one beaver and costs.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 83, 84-85, 90. On June 19, the schout was empowered to levy by execution on Jansen's goods in the present city plantation.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 363. See also Oct. 7/17, 1675; and Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 29, and N. T. Col. Docs., VII: 636. Graebner, in his history of the Dutchmen, says the original of this grant is still preserved in the archives of the 1674 first Lutheran Church. He gives a translation in his work on p. 66. May 16-26 By order of the governor's council, Jacques Cortelyou, the surveyor, is directed "to sett off," among others, the lot "for the Lutheran Society of this Province," which is afterward laid out (see May 12/21), and the burgomasters are "required to depute some of themselves to point out said lots [meaning all of those listed], and assist in the survey."—N. T. Col. Docs., II: 716.
20-30 Matthijs Nicolits, writing from Stratford to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, expresses the belief that the confinements of many of the Dutch "are accusing them not to have dealt our Countrymen with equal Civility as they rec'd from vs during the English Government.
"He hopes "some more politic provision will be made hereafter to invite & encourage more English Inhabitants" there (New York), whose fidelity to their Prince & Country will prove a stronger Bulwarks of Defence then other Fortifications garrison'd by Mercenaries hath done."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 147.

lamented by friend or foe."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 147.

"the turn of all the yachts" has "gone round," whether they prefer
"to leave the city" or "to be divided in common" at once, or whether those who have already sailed shall "lie by so long, until the others also" have "made a trip and then to divide all that has 'been earned.'" After hearing "the opinions of the majority of the skippers," the court concludes to speak to Colve before making "any further disposition" therein.—
Re. N. Am., VII: 91.
27-28 Gov. Colve issues an order, in which he says that complaints June 2-12 have been made against some persons who neglected and refused "to pay the Book Keeper Jacobus van de Waeter the hundredd penny, which pursuant to the assessment [see Feb. 14/24] . . . was ordered to be raised by form of loan for the payment of the incurred and still to be incurred expenses in the reparition of the fortifications on the Island Manhattans." Colve directs the city court "to proceed by immediate execution, without distinction of persons against the negligent or contumacious."—Re. N. Am., VII: 97.

ing day, from the city hall, that all persons in arrears must pay within three days' time or suffer levy by execution.—Ibid., VII:

in 1664, without the terms of which, provision was made for the July 17-27 Dutch in the Indian Company of New Netherlands by a lien on its property in this Province. For various reasons this property has decreased in value. The debts of the company orders that all tangible property of the company in New Netherland shall, "with the approbation of the Lord Majors," in Holland, continue to "he and remain unlemablely pledged" to the creditors until they are paid in full. Cornelis van Ruyyen, as receiver of the hand over the account books and journals, and other proofs thereto

Jacobus van de Water, who are to keep them safely until commis-to their desires or Expectacions, (I mean that New Yorke is excluded in the Articles) since the arrival of a great Ketch, which came 22/Aug. 1) is to come as English governor.—Winthrop Papers, Matthew Nicolls, writing from "Madspeth Kills near New Towne upon Long Island" to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, says that the rumour about Andrew Newport (see June 17/27) "is quite sottIsd..." and that "The Governor's name now allowed of, is one Mayor or Colll Edmond Andrews" [see Aug. 3/13], as by directions of Letters to him from the Barbados, & divers other Circumstances doth appear." He tells further of the misfortune that has come to ex-Gov. Lovelace, while travelling in the Mediterranean region, of being captured by Turks and taken to Algiers. Here all his Jewells (to the value of several hundreds of pounds) & last Reserves of Treasure went most unfortunately all to Wreck. His ransom is expected, English merchants having offered 500 crowns. "He is a Paterne," he continues, "of a great alteration of Fortune, from a Governor amongst Christians in America, in so short a time to bee hurried away at so great distance to be a slave to the Turks, but what is not our humane Nature subject to?" — Winthrop Papers, XV: 119.

The time for nominating a new city bench having arrived, the court assembles at the city hall for that purpose. From the nominees, Gov. Colvency appoints, on the 15th, his fiscal, Capt. Willem Knuyf, to be city sheriff, displacing Anthony de Milt; Johannes van Brugh and Willem Beekman, as burgomasters; and Jacob Kip, Gely Verplanck, Francois Romboots, Christopher Hooglandt, and Stephanus van Cortlandt, as schepens. — Rec. N. Am., VII: 110-14.

Matthew Nicolls, writing from flushing to Maj. John Winthrop, says of Andros (see July 22/2 Aug. 1): "He was in his youth a Page to the Queen of Bohemia; hath married threedly with Cravens who bee brokers with or with, hee was to come out of Engd about the beginning of June." He says further that he had had a letter from Col. Manning (see Jan. 15, 1675) to the effect that he has "had the good luck to bee acquitted by the King & Councill about his surrender of the Fort, and that he expects to come over to these parts again, but without Employ." He reports "no News in Engd of Colll Lovelace." — Winthrop Papers, XV: 128.

The gravestone of Thomas Willett, the first mayor of New York (see June 12, 1663), records this date as the day of his death. He was buried at Swanze (named Derick End, now 9 miles south of Providence, on Narraganset Bay). — Holmes, Annals (1829), I: 368. On Oct. 18, 1913, the City Club of New York unveiled a monument to his memory at that place (now called Riverside); and on Nov. 17, 1913, a tablet to his honour was placed up the Old York City Hall, Oct. 19, and Nov. 17, 1913. For account of his life, see Adam and Anne Matt, etc., by Cornell (1890), Chap. 157; in which work the place of Willett's burial is called "Rehoboth or Swanze (now in the town of Seconneck, Massachusetts)." See also Mon. Comm. Coun. (1855), 379, ed. (1864), 622; and May, Am. Hist. (1857), XVIII: 239-41.

Andros is required by the Duke of York to put into execution in the territories under his government, the laws granted to the duke by the king's "Letters Patent" (see March 1, 1665). These laws, "digested into one volume," are annexed to the duke's order to Andros. The order also directs Andros, with the advice and help of his council, "carefully to peruse and consider ye same," and if you finde it necessary for ye easte and benefit of ye people and ye common good of my service to make any alteration, addition or amendment in ye said laws, you are with ye first opportunity to represent ye same unto me, to ye end and you may receave from me such ords & directed as altho' at my charge.

The Duke of York issues a warrant to Gov. Andros, authorizing him to seize the estate of Francis Lovelace, late governor, to satisfy a debt of about £50,000. — N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 316. See Oct. 17/ Nov. 6.

On Nov. 5, the sheriff was ordered to proceed to the houses of the sheriff to attach the lands, houses, and estate of the late governor. The sheriff's return, dated the following day, reported the seizure of "ye great house near the Stadt house y't Mr Van Cliffe lives in and the garden house in the broadway," and "12 parcels of land... from Coll Francis Lovelace which formerly belonged to Capt Willet and the Domine which lays betwixt Derick Sickars & Mr Adrain Tony." Appraisers were appointed, and on March 27, 1715, Andros made an inventory of all such estates and lands to the amount of £811,134. This is entered in detail in N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIV: 14, 72, and is printed in the Third Annual Report of the State Historian (1897), 256-57, 281-83. In this way the land, which the heirs and widow of Dominie Bogardus had conveyed to Lovelace in 1671, became a part of "the Duke's farm." It later became the property of Trinity Church. — Brodhead, Hist. State of N. T., II: 274.

In the city court, Martin Hardewyn brings action against Frederik Philipsen and Thomas Lewis. He says they "bired him for a year as miller at their mill" (in Yonkers), and that they discharged him. He wishes "to know the reason." They reply that he "represented himself as a capable miller and that he nevertheless knew little or nothing of it." — Rec. N. Am., VII: 115. On Sept. 4, the court gave the matter over to arbitrators for a hearing, to reconcile the litigants or report an award. — Ibid., VII: 119.

On Oct. 2, Hardewyn told the court that Philipse had "engaged him as miller for his water mill for one year for the sum of fl. 800. And after he... had been some days at the mill, he was discharged therefrom" by Philipse "without any cause." He proved "by divers witnesses" that he had "manufactured good flour..." and demanded fl. 800 "for damage suffered, for loss of time," and "the affront inflicted on him" by the defendant, with costs of the suit. The court condemned Philipse to pay to Harde- wyn 200 fl., because "he was discharged... without any legitimate cause from his engagement... and for the affront, loss of time, etc., caused to the pl[t]." Philipse was charged also with the costs for "the appearance of Secretaries & Messengers," while the remaining costs were put upon Hardewyn. — Ibid., VII: 124-25.

The city's creditors, among them the "labouring people and contractors," daily importune the burgomasters for payment. This leads the Honourable Commissioners to present to Gov. Colvency an account of the expenses incurred by the city for fortifications and other purposes since the time of the receipt by the Dutch (which shows a debt in this regard of fl. 6101 18, seaxant), and to appeal to the governor for some media for securing the funds necessary for liquidating these obligations (see Feb. 14/24).

On Sept. 7, Colvency granted them "the receipt of the product of the Scales [public weigh-house receipts] and Tapestries except the city, of the from the preceding May 1 until the revenues reached the amount of arrears. — Rec. N. Am., VII: 116-17.

The public carterers of the city have complained in a petition to the city court that "that rude sort of workmen and unemployed" (see Nov. 29, 1670), and have, moreover, on their departure, sold their carts, horses and privileges with privilege to cart; also, that there were certain boys, who in like manner rode in the cart above the number fixed," from which they demand redress. The court decrees that the boys "shall... not ride Curt any more," and shall also "leave off driving cart" within the city. — Rec. N. Am., VII: 122.

The city court "reciprocally" enacts the ordinance (see Aug. 22, 1665) relative to punctuality and attendance of its members at sessions. — Rec. N. Am., VII: 122-3.

Euphrain Herrman, clerk of the city court, exhibits to that body "an apostille granted him" by Gov. Colvency "on his petition," giving him "the office of Secretary of the city," in place of Nicolaes Bayard, who resigned a year ago to become the provincial secretary. Herrman requests "a fair allowance for his last year's service as Secretary." On Oct. 5/15 (p. 9), he was granted 250 fl. — Rec. N. Am., VII: 123, 128.

The last magistracy for New Harlem under a Dutch regime is appointed.Resolved Walsdor is continued as schout; the usual double set, are Adolph Meyer and John Dyckman. — Harlem Rec. (MS. translation), IV: 19, in N. Y. Pub. Lib., See Nov. 19.

The term of the church-charters of the Dutch Church having expired, the city court receives the double nominations from Gov. Colvency, who, on the next day, appoints Nicolaes de Meyer and Frederik Philipsen, to serve for one year with the remaining warden, Adolph Pietersen. — Rec. N. Am., VIII: 126-127.

1674. The people dwelling "beyond the Fresh Water" having made Sept. nominations for a new magistracy, the city court, with Gov. Colvle's 22nd approval, chose the following persons for one year, viz: Jan Groot, Oct. 2 Pietersen de Groot and Wolphtert Webber, as new schepens, "to govern the Outside People in their district according to the instruction granted them."—Rec. N. A., VII: 127-28.

28th. Former regulations respecting fence-gardens, and spaying fences Oct. fences, have not been observed; on the contrary, 8 many persons have been in the habit of "climbing over, breaking and trampling them under foot" while "hunting and shooting par-tridges and other birds." The city court, with Gov. Colvle's ap- 199 proval, refutes the ordinances on this subject, and forbids "all per- 45 sons, of what rank soever...to climb, break and spoil any fences of gardens, orchards or enclosed places," or to shoot "par- tridges or other birds" in the "city or in the public streets," on Oct. forfeiture of the firearms and payment of a fine. This law was "published from the City Hall" on the 9th.—Rec. N. A., VII: 127-28.

The burgomasters and schepens met at the city hall on the 5th. summonses of Gov. Colvle, who comes into court and informs the city fathers that he has "now received by the National Ship the Mayl Trapm letters and absolute orders" from The Netherlands "for the making of this Province of N: T: Netherlands to his Majesty of Great Britain, pursuant to the Treaty of Peace," (see Feb. 9/19) and is required to "return home with the garrison as soon as possible."—Rec. Abraham Pierson Junr is at Milford, and hath bin in these parts near a fortnight; he is a great deere of Mr Calfe [Colvle] at Yorkes, and speaks much for his Justification in his former and more late proceedings; and when I spoke with him was in great hopes that the Dutch would still hold the rule there, but I do not wonder at it, for I conceive that he and others of them have bin whipt to this persistence."—Winthrop Papers, XII: 153, in Mass. Hist. Soc. See Oct 31/Nov. 10.

Ephraim Herrman (see Sept 8/18) is allowed 250$ for his ser- 15-25 vices as clerk of the city court last year.—Rec. N. A., VII: 128.

At a joint meeting of the city court and the burguff court mar- tial (see March 22, 1655, Aldenda), Gov. Colvle states that "his departure is " very near," and that he will "probably not be able to wait the arrival (see Oct 22/Nov. 1) of the expected Governor from England, Mr. Webster is appointed to acquaint the Meeting thereof and at the same time to order, that the Burgomasters and Schepens together with the Buruff Court Martial" "nominate a double number of ten persons," from whom he will elect five men, who, "after his departure," are "to possess and exercise the executive authority until the arrival of the expected ships and the Governor of his Majesty of England," and who are "also authorized to surrender the country" to whomsoever ex- hibits "his Majesty's commission." This joint body takes an appointment until the next afternoon. They then nominated ten men, eight of whom were from their own number.—Rec. N. A., VII: 127-28.

The city bench resolves to ask Gov. Colvle, among other things, in regard to "the extraordinary tax imposed for the payment of the monies loaned for the repairs of the fort and City's fortifications," and recommends that those persons who were subjected to a loss of house and removal of their houses "be paid out of the above-mentioned tax already collected, according to the placard of the 17th March last and the orders to Book Keeper Jacobus van de Water, which so express and promises; also, that those persons who would have to "accept any houses and lots" within the city, in lieu of which choses the following persons for the year, viz: Jan Pier- son, "be freed from" those persons who came later "to claim the same houses and lots."—Rec. N. A., VII: 134-35.

The city still owes about 1,500 guilders, besides a year's salary due the city's secretary, while the city treasurer has "scarcely any provision of money therefor." The city court now asks Gov. Colvle to give them an order for the payment of the secretary's salary, in Oct. meaning, evidently, with assistance from the provincial exchequer. Dec. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 40-47.

The burgomasters and schepens, with the council of war, assem- bled at the city hall, and, with Gov. Colvle's approval, choose Cornelis Steenwyck, Johannes van Bronkhorst and Willem Breckman to repair on board his Majesty's frigate now anchored under Staten Island and there to welcome the Governor Majr. Andrews [Andros] and at the same time to request some privileges for the advantage of the Commonalty." This delegation carries out its mission and re- turns to the city on the same day. Majr. Andrews has told them to "assure the inhabitants of the Dutch nation" that they shall "participate in the same privileges with those of the English nation," and that he will "promote their interest as much as possible." He refers further "to the instructions given him by his Royal Majesty and Highness of York."—Rec. N. A., VII: 138.

The new governor, Sir Edmund Andros, arrives unexpectedly. He brings, as first counselor, Anthony Brockholst, who has been appointed to succeed him in case he becomes incapacitated; William Dyre, collector of customs; a chaplain; and 100 soldiers, all in the pay of the Duke of York. The government is authorized to form a council of not more than ten men.—T. Y. Col. Docs., III: 220-21; Van Renselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 170-71.

Andros, from his ship, "The Diamond," which is at anchor near Staten Island, dispatches a letter to "the Honble Governor Command- er in Chief in The New Netherlands" [Colvle], requesting that a time be appointed to the burgomaster to "proceed to the Court, in behalf of His Ma: of Great Brittany Pursuant to the Late Arti- cles of Peace," etc.—T. Y. Col. MSS., XXIII: 413 (Albany); Dec. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 45. For a narrative of events from this time to the surrender by Colvle on Oct. 31/Nov. 10 (9, w.), see Brookfield, Hist. N. Y. 422.

Andros, still on board, having been asked "Last Night" by Colvle to "come in a private capacity," writes in reply that he is sur- prised that so much time has been set for him to take over the government, and that he has "no Orders to Land upon a private acket.

The ship that arrives with him, he states, are "at very great expense," and are intended for service elsewhere as soon as he is "possessed of this Place."—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 46.

Gov. Colvle is present at the city hall, at a joint assembly of the burgomasters and schepens with the burguff council of war, to recommend "most particularly" to them "to take good care for the prevention of all miscarriages by night or by day," likely to "be occasioned by the malice of any persons and the insolence of" the regular "soldiery;" and "further enjoining on them that if any soldiers" are "found in the streets exhibiting insolence" they shall be secured and brought to him to be punished as they de- serve. The joint assembly proceeds to draw up an order for regul- ating the city watch by the four train-bands or militia. The prov- est and sergeants of these bands have complained that the men do not "keep parade and watch as they ought," and are absent from duty "very frequently," so that they are "unable to place sentinels on the streets of the deserted places and trading districts." This condition has arisen only "because the incurred fines" are "not collected and paid nor satisfaction made to the Corporals." The joint meeting therefore orders that the provost, together with the sergeants and the watch, shall henceforth collect the fines the next morning "on the breaking up of the watch," and, in case of refusal of payment, shall proceed at once against all such persons without distinction, and "take as much goods out of their houses" as cover the amount of the fines.—Rec. N. A., VII: 137.

Andros, being informed by Colvle that the latter will be ready "within the space of eight days" to surrender the fort and govern- ment, writes again to him from "The Diamond," asking that a certain time be fixed, sooner than the time mentioned, when he can take possession.—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 46-47.

The burgomasters and schepens, with the council of war, assem- bled at the city hall, and, with Gov. Colvle's approval, choose Cornelis Steenwyck, Johannes van Bronkhorst and Willem Breckman to repair on board his Majesty's frigate now anchored under Staten Island and there to welcome the Governor Majr. Andrews [Andros] and at the same time to request some privileges for the advantage of the Commonalty." This delegation carries out its mission and re- turns to the city on the same day. Majr. Andrews has told them to "assure the inhabitants of the Dutch nation" that they shall "participate in the same privileges with those of the English nation," and that he will "promote their interest as much as possible." He refers further "to the instructions given him by his Royal Majesty and Highness of York."—Rec. N. A., VII: 138.

Proposals are sent by Colve to Andros. These relate specifically to the settlement of the debts of the province; permitting all judgments to stand good; permitting the owners of real and personal property occupying the land within the Dutch Nation... to retain their customary Church privileges in Divine Service and Church discipline besides their Father's laws & customs in the division of their Inheritance; excusing them from Impressment; permitting each Congregation whether Lutherans or others to "support their own Place" permitting all public houses to continue "according to the Customs now existing;" paying the creditors of the West India Company, etc. Andros replied on Nov. 12, acquiescing in general terms to these proposals with one or two minor exceptions.—Doc. Hist. N. T. (4to ed.), III: 49–51.

Nov. 28.
Andros writes Colve again, assuring him that he is "not only given me io writings, for damages sustained from those under your... Camand, since the time limited for Peace in these Parts."—Doc. Hist. N. T. (4to ed.), III: 50–51.

Nov. 29.
Andros issues a proclamation "confirming all former grants privileges or concessions heretofore granted and all estates legally possessed by any under his Royal Highness before the late Dutch government, As also all legal, judicial proceedings during that government;" He also confirms the "known book of Laws formerly established and in force under his royal highness government... the which are to be observed and practiced together with the manner and time of holding Courts therin mentioned as heretofore." All magistrates and civil officers "belonging there unto" are to be chosen and established accordingly.—Doc. Hist. N. T. (4to ed.), III: 52–53; Col. Laws N. T. (1894), I: 107–8; M. C. C., III: 52–53; and Vol. I, p. 169, of this work (where it is incorrectly cited "1675"). For an account of the judiciary of the Dutch period, up to 1674, see an article by Chief Justice Daly, in Stone's Hist. of N. Y. City, Appendix VII; and an article by Jameson in Mag. Am. Hist. (May, 1882), VIII: 315–29. Regarding the development of the judicial system during the English and American period, see Jameson's account in Mag. Am. Hist., VIII: 598–611.

The last two mayors under the former English régime, Matthias Nicolls and John Lawrence, are now appointed by Andros as mayor and deputy mayor respectively. William Dervall, Frederick Philip, Gabriel Mevrouw, John Winder, and Thomas Gibbs, sheriff.—M. C. C., VIII: 145; Brodhead, op. cit., II: 273–74, and documents there cited. These names (except John Winder) appear on the first page of Vol. II of the M. C. M. (MS.), under date of Nov. 13 (p. 9).

Nov. 11.
The sheriff of New York is ordered to seize public property in the possession of private persons. The return of the sheriff on this order reported the finding of sundry pickaxes, spades, and carvings.—N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIV: 12, 13 (Albany).

Nov. 13.
The first meeting of the newly appointed court of mayor and aldermen (see Nov. 10, supra) occurs. The first page of the record, beautifully penned (see reproduction in Peterson & Edward, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, insert between pp. 20 & 21), reveals the appointment of John Sharpe as "Towne Clearke," and Thomas Moore, "Citty Cryer"; the names of "Wise and Corner Porters" and of "Carmen" appear also.—M. C. M. (MS.), II: 12.

Property rights were duly respected when New Orange (Dutch) became New York (English). The first case recorded as coming before the newly constituted court of mayor and alderman was that of William Dervall vs. Peter Aldrich. Dervall happened to be in Boston when the change in government took place. On his return he found Aldrich in possession of his stronghold. Despite the former's letter "produced a bill of sale under the hand of Governor Colve, for his said Boate, and a Copy of the Instrument of Confination," the jury, composed largely of Englishmen, "brought in their Verdict, That they found for ye 12th, the Restoration of the Boate in Controversy, with her appurtenances and Costs of Court."—M. C. M. (MS.), Nov. 17, 1674.

In another suit, Capt. Matthias Nicolls vs. Greetye Provoost, of the same date, the plaintiff, who had exited himself during the months of Dutch rule, found on his return that certain buildings he had erected at an expense of a thousand guilders on land rented from defendant had been removed by the latter. The court ordered "that the deft forthwith deliver and make good the same within 14 days, and the plait to pay ye Def's rent."—Ibid.

The mayor and aldermen meet with the governor in the fort, and it is decided that flour and meats shall be examined and marked lip by the town bond before being shipped (see Nov. 20). Orders are promulgated concerning weights and measures, bakers' bread, fortifications, and the gate at Smith's Valley.—Col. Coun. Min., 30.

The last two orders are expanded thus in Ex. Coun. Min., MS., III: (part 2), 4: "An Order to restrain ye cutting up & destroying ye Fortifications & ye Gats to ye 12th About ye Canton Valley, As followeth: That a little Gate be made for a foot plat." The court of mayor and aldermen, "finding great inconveniences attending them by the bringing in writings and papers written in the Dutch Language, doe therefore order that for the future, no papers shall be brought to this Court but written in the English Language. Excepting poor people who are not able to pay for translating;"—M. C. M. (MS.), Nov. 17, 1674.

John Lawrence declares that Capt. John Manning has "greatly.
defamed and asperred him" by spreading abroad the assertion that he "might have saved the Macc & Governy if he would, but he delivered them to ye Dutch without order." Lawrence proves that "he was forced thereto, and produced the Dutch Governo's Order, for his delivering the Same." The court judges that the reports of Manning are untrue and undeserving.—M. C. M. (MS.), Nov. 17, 1754.

25 A certificate is issued directing that all bargains, sales, contracts, and agreements remain as they have been, in conformity with the terms of the two proclamations recently issued, notwithstanding any change of government.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 52.

John Sharpe wrote from New York to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut, as follows: "Honned Sr. Having had an Acc't of yof sympathetical trouble, at ye Dutch Governo's ill, unkind, inhuma, barbarous and Tyannicall usage of mee, I cannot but make it my business to pay my humble and respective thanks to you, for that undeserved favour, and begin where I left in my last to yt Hoono'f, from Shelders Island, vist; Having recev'd a Lc by Capt Nicoll's advice of the English Governo's arrival, to advance westwards, in order to be ready & hearing, for making demand of van Colve for satisfaction for my unparalleled wrongs, both in Shoon & Estaro, I did accordingly. And arriving within 7 Miles of Shoon, where I layed a way, so board our English Governo, but ere wee could reach to said friggott, unfortunately Tyde was spent, and a powerfull winde against us, in so much that attaining to the happiness of seeing his Malles flagg so near new Yorke, I thought the Begelick Power evident, and, as far as tho my Holes of an hour, but came Capt Kneif, the Major, and 18 more of their Dutch Rusticks, into my House; Violently laid hands on mee, and againe carried mee to my old, dark, dismal Chamber, and in 4 hours after, threw in 12 more of their own Nation, next to mee, only a Deal-head Petticoat betweene us, in which there were 300 Granadoses Skills full'd, and they so cruelly drunk, that they were beare'v'd of Sense; Swearing, Cursing, drinking and smoking amongst said Shells, that every Minute I expected to dye no other death, then by 100,000 Thunder Bolts; flar'd off with Corr. Spark of Tobacco fire fell there on (being covered over with Fich and Tow) that had sett all the rest on fire and then (LiberaaS Domine). But by Gods great mercy, I was preserv'd from that Master piece of dangers. Amongst 16 Sea fights I have bee'n in, and 5 Land Battles, I never encountered with such dangers and hardships. There I was continued 8 days & Nights, prohibiting mee from sight or Speech of my poor Children in so much, that in that whole time, I could not receive one word or Line, whither I must live or dye; at length hee departed like a Pamick Slave, fearing every Soul that look'd on him, would have revenged his barbarous cruelty, & ordered the Joyler to carry away the Key of the Cell and throw off its Board; so that he's no longer a Dutch Governo was Two Hours Posset of the flo't, hee could not get mee out, until a Smith was sent for, and broke the Lock off the Doorce. Four or five nights before the Surrender, divers Soullers, Smiths and Carpenters Employed themselves in ripping off Locks, Latches, Hinges, Bolts and Glassse Windows, &c., destroy'ng and Stealing whatsoever they were capable of carrying out of the flo't, that was worth 24, aiming at nothing but destruction and confusion to his Royall Highness Garrison; The very Soullers Bedsteads in the Guarde, escaped out their fury, but pluckt downe and burnt. And now-abstaining this Dutch Governo (by the great Noise in the Night) was sensible thereof, not one word of treeproof or repre'm for their sood; The unhappy stay of the Cattle friggott behinde, infused more patience in our Governo's breast, then ordinary, otherwise hee would never have put up such rude enormities. In fine, for my particular, I must bid farewell to all expectations of satisfaction and advartice to my House, whereate bodily out- tering; having neither Money nor friends to impel him before the States of Holland or Zeland. Deare Sr; I must also acquaint yfo' hono', wee are very happy in our New Governo, who is excett'tably accomplis'ed with Martialisl, as well as civil experience; And noe'st'hing of promising div'ning, that three years to hoys up the priaces flagg in 2 yeares, by the industry, care and vigilanci of this our worthy Governo, hee will break his promise, as he hath always done; Their Tyranny being so great, that several hundred of us, his Royall Highnesses Subjects on soe so occasion, will get a flagg with this Motto, No quarter within, withou't, rather then once more come under their Belgick Tyranny."

Endorsed by Winthrop as "ye 3 Dec. 100 p Francis Hall."—Win- thrp. Papers, XVII. See also Brecon, 49, etc., II, 254-56.

"The Proclamation prohibiting the Exportation of Wheat" is "Published, at ye 29 Townhall."—M. C. M. (MS.), Nov. 17, 1674. See Feb. 19, 1675.

Capt. John Manning appears "before Court Satt," and acknowledg' what hee had reported relating to Mr John Lawrence his loosing the Macc and Governy (see Nov. 17), it was by misinformat' and is very sorry for it." The Court ordered that Capt. Manning's acknowledgment shall be recorded to "ye 2d the Callumne Capt on the said Mr John Lawrence, by the said Aspersion, may bee taken off."—M. C. M. (MS.), Dec. 1, 1674.

The mayor's court forbids under penalty "the Carmen to ryde wood and other things on ye Saboth day . . . . . as aboe digg'ing Sand in unlawfull places, to ye Great detriment of many."—M. C. M. (MS.), Dec. 1, 1674.

By order of the mayor's court, new officers are named for Harlem from a double set of nominees. A constable takes the place of the schout, and David de Maret is appointed to that office. Instead of the Dutch with their "magnates" are named, Cornelius Jansen, Joost van Olibinis, Adolph Meyer, and John Dyckman. The last three were on the Dutch board (see Sept. 22, Oct. 2).—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), IV, 26.

The "regulation" of the estate of the former governour, Francis Lovelace (see Oct. 25, Nov. 2, 1673), is responsible for two court cases, of this date the sheriff against Dirck van Clyff, who has rented a house next the city hall which has been attached by the sheriff on order of the governour "for account of Lovelace;" and the sheriff against Fardon, who is in a house on Broadway which has been similarly attached. It is decided that neither tenant shall pay any rent until so ordered by the governour.—M. C. M. (MS.), Dec. 22, 1674.

To illustrate the domestic style of life among the principal English merchants who established themselves in this city immedi- ately after the fire, it will be useful to give an account of our "magistrates" named, Corneillus Jansen, Joost van Olbinis, Adolph Meyer, and John Dyckman. The last three were on the Dutch board (see Sept. 22, Oct. 2).—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), IV, 26.

A number of Dutch inhabitants appear before the court of mayor and aldermen and request a continuance of "their former privileges granted To them by Governor Nicolls." 2. "To have the Liberty of the Church," 3. "That their people shall not be Prett." 4. "That they shall not be obliged to take up Arms against their own Nation." The court communicated to them the governor's reply that they must take the oath "without Condition," Articles, or Oaths. 5. M. C. M. (MS.), March 15, 1675.

A proclamation of the governor is published by the court of mayor and aldermen to the effect that "true subjects" must inform the governor of "Mutinous words or Actions they shall See or heare done or Spoken."—M. C. M. (MS.), March 19, 1675.

John Smedes conveys to Conrect Ten Eyck, Caarsten LEERSEN, Jacob Abrams, and John Harberding (Liber Deed, I: 126, Albany), most of the land subsequently called "The Shoemakers' Land," the grantees being all tanners and shoemakers. The land was "to be equally divided into four proportions or shares amongst them." Cornelius Clopper, another shoemaker, threw his parcel, which adjoined, into the common field and, in 1676, these proprietors, "having the said land to be receiv'd for building of houses for an enlargement of the city, projected and laid out said lands into 164 lots."—Liber Deeds, VI: 135 (Albany). For the location and subsequent history of the Shoemakers' Land, see description of Pl. 24-25, I: 216-35; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947.

Katherine Harrison, the "Wethersfield Witch," is declared innocent of the charge brought against her by Alice Manning in the court of mayor and aldermen.—M. C. M. (MS.), March 21, 1675. The first entry in this case is in ibid., Dec. 22, 1674; subsequent ones in ibid., Jan. 19, 1675, Feb. 9, 1675, and March 8, 1675. A decision against the "Witch" on the last named date was reversed after a doctor's report on the case had been received. 6. Evert Duyster and Henry Williams were appointed by the mayor's court "brand Masters to Looke after fowle Chimneys, and fryers," also "Lathers hookes & fyer Buckets."—M. C. M. (MS.), March 23, 1675. Herein the English magnificacy was following the practice of the Dutch court in appointing firewardens. Duyster had been a Dutch appointee to the same office.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 35. See Jan. 6, 1678; Dec. 23, 1678.

"This day was Proclam'd the edict prohibiting hogs going about the streets of the City longer than 8 days after the Publication, on the penalty of £20 for the first offence, £40 for the second, and forfeiture of the hogs found in the street & Steered for the third offence."—M. C. M. (MS.), March 24, 1675. This was the English order that suspended the New Orange order of August 28, 1673; it was considerably milder in tone. The Dutch order prohibited stray pigs in the whole area south of the Collect, not merely in the city streets. The hog was to be returned or decapitated or first offence involved the third. —Rec. N. Am., VII: 406. Restraint of hogs was a subject for discussion; in the common council meetings for a century or more after this; as late as July, 1788, a new effort to keep the creatures from the streets was defeated, although it was more successful four months later.—M. G. (1784-1785), I: 385, 387. Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. at 1st, 2d & 3d Gent. Municipalities, 91-98.

The following year, Feb. 3, 1676, appraisers were appointed by the mayor and aldermen to survey and value the vacant land and "ruin'd or decayd houses within this City, convenient or fitt to build," whose proprietors were either absent or unwilling to improve the property, so that they might be handed on to those who were willing to make repairs or build houses.—M. C. C., I: 14-15. On May 26, 1676, the governor in council ordered the mayor and aldermen of the city of New York to publish an ordinance providing that all "Vacant Land without fence not Improved" be appraised and disposed of to those willing to build "Sufficient dwelling houses" within a year upon the payment of "the Purchase to the right Owners according to the appraisement."—Ibid., I: 19; Cal. Hist. MSS., Engg. 46.

The appraisers appointed to value the estate of Gov. Lovelace make their report.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 35.

The Duke of York, writing from St. James's Palace, London, to Governor Andros, in answer to the latter's letters of Nov. 20, and Dec. 17, 1674, says: "If Appraisers have thus long dawdled, A Seal and Mace for ye City of New Yorks, ye charge whereof wille you allow upon Acc? and it is well that you have ye other Seal for ye Province."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 239 St. Vincent's "Cal. of State Papers, Am. and West Indies, 1675–6" (London, 1893), 302, item No. 513. See Oct. 6, 1669. For a reproduction of the seal, see Frontispiece, Vol. V.

The Duke of York also remarks that the latter has done well to discourage any suggestion "touching General Assemblies" with ye people there since desires of in imitads of their neighbour Colonies." He believes an assembly not "consistent with ye forms of government already established, nor necessary for ye ease or redress of any grievance ye may happen, since ye may be as easily obtained, by any petitioner or other address to you at General Assizes (with is once a year) where the same persons (as Justices) are usually present, in all who all probability would be their representatives if another convenion were allowed."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 230. See also O'Callaghan's "Historical Introduction" to the *Jour. Leg. Coun. (1861), I: xvi.

26 All the vacant land and "old decayed houses" (see March 25) are viewed by the mayor and aldermen to "find a Proper place for a Church [Dutch or English]—and Schoolmaster Tom Pitts." They kept a record of what they saw "in a Paper tytled the Survey of ye City."—M. C. M. (M.S.), April 26, 1675.

June

By order of the court of mayor and aldermen, strangers are required to pay eightpence per ton, and freemen sixpence, for goods "brought into this Government, and Landed on the Bridge" goods brought from New Jersey, and salt, were the only things excepted. Revenue from this source was needed to repair the "bridges" or landing-places of the city which had been reported "very bad."—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 162; Harlem Recs. (M.S. translation), I: 216 (No. Y. Pub. Library).

Aug.

21 On account of the Indians, the several towns (evidently both on the east and west) is ordered to maintain strict peace (See Dec. 6). A message from the mayor is published in the village of Harlem, on Aug. 9, requiring the inhabitants "not to beat the drum nor to hold any meetings, neither to ferry any stranger across the river, without the knowledge and sanction of the constable." This had reference to the practice, long in vogue in the towns before they had a bell, of beating the drum to call the people together. Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 1605; Harlem Recs. (M.S. translation), I: 246.

Sept.

21 By order of the court of mayor and aldermen, all writs of the courts must be executed by the sheriff "before the sitting of the next Court."—M. C. M. (M.S.), Sept. 21, 1675. This order followed "sundry Complaints" to the court that executions were delayed.

Oct.

26 court of assises are the following:

Oct. 6

1. To prevent troubles arising from the sale of liquors to Indians at their plantations, where small relief can be expected if troubles and drunkenness is presently re-established which prohibited selling liquors to them "in New Yorke Schire upon Long Island and dependencies; and providing that "Constables of the several Townes take care no powder or Lead be Sold to the Indians but by them as directed or by their consents." The Indians at Mr. Pell's or "Anne Hock's Neck" are ordered to remove within a fortnight to the usual winter quarters within Hell-Gate upon this Island."—M. C. M., I: 45.

2. English weights and measures shall be used in New York City three months after the publication of the law providing for the same. The proclamations prohibiting the exportation of corn and flour shall continue in force six months longer.—M. C. C., I: 2–4.

In April, Gov. Andros continued this prohibition until the next general court shall be held.—Ibid., I: 4. But there were probably no permanent buildings erected in connection with this annual fair in New York, which must not be confused with the weekly market, which, doubtless, was still held on the smaller plain east of the fort; but see Jan. 29, 1677. See also Castello Plan, II: 344.

4. Magistrates throughout the "whole Government" are required in all cases "to do Justice to the Indians, as well as Christians."—Ibid., I: 4.

5. By reason of Staten Island's insular position, it is given "Jurisdiction of it Sellef; and to have no further dependance on the Courts of Long Island nor on their Militia."—Ibid., I: 4.

Gov. Andros appoints William Dervall to be mayor; Gabriel Minville, Nicholas de Meyer, Thomas Gibbs, Thomas Lewis, and Stephen van Cortlandt to be aldermen, and John Sharpe to be sheriff of the city of New York, to hold office until Oct. 13, 1676. The mayor and aldermen are given "full power and Authority to keep Courts, Administer Justice as a Court of General Assize, and Save, and Govern" all the inhabitants of the city.—M. C. C., I: 1–2.

On this date the "town clerk" begins to keep the "Common Council" minutes in a record-book separate from the minutes of the "Court of Mayor and Aldermen."—M. C. C., I: 1. Beginning in 1677, "according to the custom of our Fatherland," the burgomasters of New Amsterdam began to meet apart from the "Court of Burgomasters and Scheepens," Thursday mornings at 9 o'clock, "to consult then together about all that may happen in the City and to dispose thereof as shall be found proper." Their records were kept separate from the court records and are found translated up to Jan. 28, 1661, in Vol. VII of The Records of New Amsterdam, and from Feb. 11, 1661, to May 30, 1664, in Minutes of the Orphanmasters (pub. 1907). From Nov. 11, 1674, until Oct. 17, 1675, the English court of mayor and aldermen transacted administrative and judicial business at the same sitting, or at least the clerk recorded such business in the same book; a separate book, however, contains administrative business after Oct. 17. This probably means that at this date the court sessions and legislative sessions were separate, marked by the changing of a bell;—Ibid., I: 104, 297. For reproduction of the first page of the Minutes of the Common Council, see Pl. 16, Vol. IV. Also see Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Century Municipality, 9–12.

Gov. Andros, having appointed Samuel Leete to be clerk of the court of assises, administers the oath of office.—M. C. C., I: 45.

Upon ye Proposal of building a Church [for] the Towne, see Jan. 16, 1671; Oct. 6, 1673; May 12/3, 1674 Ordered, That Mr Thomas Lewis doe call[i] [to] his Assistance, Mr. Adolph Pieters & Abraham Jansen, who are desired to make a Calcaulgation of ye Charge of building a wooden Church [of] sixty two English feet in length, and fifty in breadth, the height of ye wall to be twenty [feet] & to have a Convenience to hang a bell in.—M. C. M. (M.S.), September 8, 1705; May 17, 1673; May 15, 1673; May 11, 1674; and Oct. 6, 1673. The church was built between this date and 1678, probably in 1676 (q.v.), or shortly thereafter.

The magistrates of the town of Harlem appoint two fire-wardens to inspect houses and chimneys.—Harlem Recs., op. cit. I: 245.

At this time, it is ordered that former regulations to prevent the straying of horses, cows, and other animals in the streets of New York be enforced; also that former orders for the clearing of the streets be carried out. The inhabitants are required, each Saturday or onfeste, to sweep the dirt before their doors and the指挥官 required to cart it to some convenient place by the water-side.—M. C. C., I: 7—8, 15.

The order was emphatically reiterated the following year.—Ibid., I: 18.

With this date begins the record of the admission of freemen of the city. The list is published in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1889, p. 71). By comparing the record that year with those of 1866; the original records are in the city clerk’s office. For the beginning of the burgemeister in New Amsterdam, see Sept. 18, 1648.

25 Conditions are decided upon and recorded whereby the weigh-house is “to be let to farm. The contract is undertaken by John Sharpe. Orders are issued regarding payments at the weigh-house, including the tariff of duties.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 43.

The following year (Dec. 2), a similar record was kept, with the list of bidders and the amount of their bids.—Ibid., 52. See Nov. 29, 1679.

Public notice is given (signed by Samuel Leete, clerk of the mayor’s court) that on Dec. 4, at the house of Peter Denier, the privilege of selling wines, etc., is to be let to the highest bidder. This privilege is referred to as “The Great Packt or Excise and the Small Packt or Excise of all Man-ner of Wines etc., as hath beene heretofore use’d and accustomed.” It is to “see Lett or Sett for one yeare from Such time or time as the old Farmer termes Shall have expired.”—M. C. C., I: 7. Regarding the “Conditions on which the Great Packt or Tapper’s excise is to be let to farm,” on Dec. 4, with the names of the bidders and the amount of their bids, see Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 43.

In January, 1676, the mayor and aldermen discontinued the “Small Packt or Burgers Excise, for any Stroo Liquors, wines, beere Syder etc.”, it having been found “a great Burthen and Imposition” on the inhabitants. They presented the following proposals to the government:

1°. That there bee 6 houses appointed to Sell all Sorts of wine, and Brandy & Bume etc and Lodging 2. That there bee 8 houses appointed to Sell beere Syder, Mum and Rum and to provide for Strangers as the Law directs, to Sell Brandy Rum strong waters & Tobacco. 3° That 2 of the wine houses bee Ordinaryes and 4 of the Beere houses, (An ordinary was a set meal, similar to the French table d’hôte of to-day.—See “Famous Taverns of Old New York,” by John Austin Stevens, in N. T. Herald, Dec. 17, 1893.) The prices of wines and other liquors as they were to be sold by the tappers were scheduled in detail, including the price of “The ordinary at y wine house p’meale,” and the same “Att the beere house.”

Another arrangement went into effect on Jan. 29, 1676, which was that “the great Packt or Exise, a-since the Little Packt Burgers or Towne Exise is wholly taken off,” reumed, and no more to bee paid, by any particular or private persons or houses of entertainment; but all at Liberty to buy and Sell freely at due times, when they please.” It was nevertheless ordered, “to prevent the irregularity or confusion that may happen by to many disorderly Retailers or houses of Entertainment, that no one should “Sell or Retale at home not out of doors, Less then one Gallao except Licked houses.” All persons desiring to sell drinks at retail or keep a house of entertainment were required to apply to John West, deputy clerk of the mayor’s court, before Feb. 5, where they might see the regulations regarding taverns and other houses of entertainment where liquors might be sold. Persons who were approved were to “have out their License” and the regulation was to be in force for a year.—Ibid., I: 15—14, 16—17. See also Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 66, regarding the conditions on which licenses were “to be let to farm” in 1678, with the names of bidders; and ibid., 77, for a notice to retailers to take out licenses in 1679. See also the order of Aug. 16, 1681.

December

In later day Light, the ordinances and regulations are frequent and various, and references are being made about the city, especially toward the bridges, at least three times every night; and that the serjeant belongs to every watch come with his halberd, and see that everyone of the watch brings his arms,—that is, his sword and half-pike. It is also ordered that all citizens have in readiness in their houses “for every head” one good musket or firelock with powder and ball, and that all citizen 1676 soldiers appear with good arms before their captains at the first beating of the drums. Penalties are fixed for failure to comply with these regulations.—M. G. C., I: 8–9. Undoubtedly the Indian war of this period made these regulations desirable. See 1682.

20 The mayor and aldermen, by order of the said Dock, ordered that "Goods, wares, and Merchandizes," unless he be a freeman of the city or a settled housekeeper for one year, or has given security, except by special license from the mayor and aldermen with the approbation of the governor. A freeman loses his privileges by absence from the city for six months, if during that time he does not "keep fire and Candle Light and pay Scot and Lott" (i.e., his share of the taxes). A merchant may be made a freeman on payment of six beavers; and all "Handicraft trade and others," on payment of two beavers.—M. G. C., I: 10, 18, 19. See also March 15, 1684. Regarding the burgerright in New Amsterdam, see Jan. 24, 1677.

21 It is ordered by the mayor and aldermen that all masters of vessels, as soon as they "come on Shoare," shall "give an account to the Mayor or Deputy Mayo'r of all and every Passenger" landed here. A "Merchandize Beve" is the fine to be exacted for every passenger not so reported.—C. G. C. G. order of the aldermen, made and set up by the aldermen, Feb. 24, 1661, a short time after the latter date, April 2, 1661. It was in this way the magistrates hoped to minimize pauperism in the city. The local communities in New England were also "exceedingly jealous of the intrusion of strangers," says G. E. Howard in his Local Constitutional Hist. of the U. S., 1883.

Feb. 3 The mayor and aldermen appoint appraisers to survey and value vacant land and "ruined houses" whose owners are unwilling to improve the property so that such may be handed over to those who will build.—M. G. C., I: 11, 14–15. See also Jan. 22 and March 25, 1676.

25 The "Wickerscreek" (Wickquaskeek) Indians are allowed by the council to settle near "Spitting Devil" on Manhattan Island.—Col. Coun. Min., 25. The date of the order is Feb. 6, as given by Riker in Revised Hist. of Harlem, 329. During the previous autumn when New England was in the throes of King Philip's War this tribe had been ordered to stand apart from the rest of the Indians, and to assist them in defending the harbor, a fortiage to their usual winter quarters within Hell gate upon this island.—Ibid., 326–27. So it was nothing new to have a tribe of Indians for neighbours on the island, although their presence was the occasion regularity for an increase in the number of the watch.

Mar. 3 Common fences enclosed the cultivated lands on Jochem Pieters' Flat and Van Keulen's Hook at Harlem. The location was on the Harlem River, opposite Randall's Island and Morrisania. See "Map of Harlem: Showing the Lands as in the Original Lots and Farms," in Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1881), opp. p. 620. No perimeters were set up, respectively, and they were being merely staked off. When new fence-makers were appointed, April 24, 1675, it was resolved that each inhabitant should repair his part of the common fencing; that by the spring of 1676 these fences should be generally renewed and made at least 6 ft. high; and that if any one failed, it should be done by the town at his expense.—Ibid., 70–71.

19 Gabriel Curtiss receives a patent (Liber Patent, IV: 121, Albany) for a lot of land which, as bounded generally by streets and avenues on the modern map, lay between a line running slightly east of Third Ave.; a line running from the north side of 52d St. near Third Ave. to the south side of 51st St. at the East River; the East River on the east; and, on the south, a line running from the river at 47th St. to a point half way between Second and Third Aves. in the middle of the block between 48th and 49th Sts. The northern part of this land became subsequently known as the James Beekman tract the southern part fell into the Turtle Bay farm of Franklino Winthrop.—See Turtle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, I: 33, 119–37.

Apr. 7. On account of the Indian troubles, the council orders that all boats and vessels desiring to pass through Hell Gate shall first obtain a permit from the custom-house. This permit, except for merchandise, be given "grafis and with dispatch."—Col. Coun. Min., 25.

Gov. Andros continues the order of October, 1675, prohibiting the exportation of wheat and corn from New York, until the next meeting of the general court of assizes.—M. G. C., I: 16; Col. Coun. Min., 25.

15 A intercourse, passed by the mayor and aldermen on Jan. 15, is now allowed by the governor and ordered to be put into execution, requiring "that all Merchants and other that Shall at any time come and trade at this place before the new Docke or Wharfe (intended to be built) Shall bee finished and paid for, Shall pay proportionable for his and their Estates, as hee or they shall bring here, as the Inhabitants and other Traders doe towards the building of the said Docke or wharfe, defrayinge the Charges thereof."—M. G. C., I: 9–10, 25–26, 29–38.

The carpenters report to the provincial council concerning the frame of timber, or mole, necessary to be erected in the harbour.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 45. The original of this report, entered as a draft in the N. Y. Col. MSS., XXV: 98 (Albany), states in part:

"Adolph, the carpenter, and a great many of them beeing present, . . . do unanimously agree and give their opinion that the grounddills beneath and plates above will be most proper. . . . That at each end of a grounddill one beam to goe athwart; that for every ten feet a stud and a beam will be necessary, the beams to be laid at ordinary highwater mark and every other beam to be under-braced.

. . . To be filled with wood and stone, the wood all undermost and the stone uppermost."

An agreement is made between Elizabeth Bellow and Capt. James Carteret for the purchase of Love Island.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 45. Elizabeth Bellow was the widow and administrator of Isaac Bellow, an English merchant residing in New Amsterdam as early as 1664, who became factor for Gov. Lovelace after the English gained possession of the town, and who died in 1672.—N. T., Col. Docs., II: 249, 671, 690; ibid., III: 73; Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 38. Brodhead, in his Hist. State of N. Y., II: 168, refers to the transaction of April 20, 1676, as a sale of the island by Mrs. Bellow to Capt. Carteret; but this appears questionable, because, on July 1, 1679, Mrs. Bellow joined in an agreement with Capt. Carteret to relinquish the island.—Col. Land Papers, 19.

Brodhead expands further that, on Dec. 23, 1677, Gov. Nicolls granted the island to Capt. Needham, who in turn sold it to Isaac Bellow. On Aug. 19, 1679, he says (error for Aug. 10), Gov. Lovelace directed that "Love Island," then owned by Bellow (whose Brodhead describes as "economical, careful, and discreet" paid his rent "in the revenue"), should be a "Priviledged place," where persons should be free from warrant of arrest. No map, apparently, records the name "Love Island." Lovelace gave the island this name on Aug. 19, 1679 (p. 9), at the same time that he made it a "Priviledged place."

The earliest record found showing the use of the name Bellows' Island is Ryder's Map (1670?); see, further, Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 492. The map of the harbour, published by Bradford in 1739 (Pl. 29, Vol. I), shows this name.

Bellows' Island was offered for sale, in August, 1735, by Adolph Phyneman & Henry Loner, N. Y. Aug. 17, 1739; afterwards came into the possession of Capt. Archibald Kennedy, who occupied it as a summer residence.—Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 498. In 1738, a quarantine was established there by order of the governor's council.—M. G. C., IV: 429. Kennedy sold the island to the city in 1759 (ibid., VII: 131–32), and a post-house was built there (ibid., VII: 162, 205), which was placed in the care of various tenants until 1773 (ibid., VII: 216, 279–70; 179, 368, 429, 441–43). Barracks also were erected there some time immediately prior to 1767.—Ibid., VII: 53, 75. The island is shown on the Mottoset Map of 1765–66 as "Kennedy or Corporation." (Pl. 49, Vol. I), and on the Ratzer Map of 1776 as "Bellows or Kennedy's Island" (Pl. 41, Vol. I). It subsequently became the property of the state. By act of the legislature, on Feb. 15, 1800 (p. 197), it was ceded to the United States government, together with Ellis or Oyster Island, and Governor's Island, at which time the state reserved the right to keep the islands as a military post. In 1837, the island was occupied by the New York civil or criminal courts. The peculiar exception, above mentioned, which Bellows Island had enjoyed since 1675, was thereby abrogated. Thereafter, for over 50 years, the island was occupied as a military station, fortifications being erected there from time to time on the site of the channeling the town.—Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 498 etc.
1576 | The "Pavements" on both sides of the Broad Street were taken up, and the street newly levelled and paved in 1675.—M.G.C., VI: 139.

16 The governor in council orders the mayor and aldermen to publish an ordinance providing for the disposal of unimproved property to those willing to build.—M.G.C., I: 19; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 48.

July | The court of mayor and aldermen appoints Peter Stoutenburgh Receiver of the City of Amsterdam, New York, to superintend with the work on the great dock. On Sept. 12, Matthias Nicolls writes from New York to Maj. John Winthrop, governor of Connecticut:—"The Governor and Andros ... had still some thoughts of visiting you this fall, but having undertaken a great work of making new wharves before the 'Towne for preservation of sloops & small vessels in the winter & our Co's of Assizes approaching, (being to begin tomorrow three weeks) he hath alter'd his design of going, but sends his Sloop for Boston this week." Nicolls wrote to Winthrop, on Sept. 23, regarding Andros, whose time is "taken up & spent with his daily labour of supervising workmen upon several publick occasions, but in short time that will be over."—Extracts from letters in the Winthrop Papers, in the archives of the Mass. Hist. Soc., XVI: 155-56.

Charges having been made by Jacob Leisler and Jacob Milborne against Peter location. New York and Gov. Algernon of Albemarle for "words spoken by him in a Sermon," an appeal is taken to Gov. Andros and his council at New York. On Sept. 18, Leisler was "committed into the Custody of the Sheriff" for failing to furnish security of £5,000. The trial of the case occurred in New York on Sept. 23, the governor, council, minister, aldermen, &c. being in the city at the time. Settlement was reached Oct. 23, the costs being chargeable to the plaintiffs.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 536-39. The incident brought Leisler and Milborne forward as leaders of the dissenting party in the province. Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., III: 300; Man., Com. Coun. (1866), 578. The mainspring of the attack upon Domine Van Rensselaer was "in the fact that Englishmen now bore control over the Reformed communion in the old Dutch province." The interest which Milborne, an Englishman, had in the prosecution of this case was based upon the apprehension that danger to the ecclesiastical rights of the Protestant inhabitants meant danger to all their rights and privileges.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 183-84. About 13 years later, these two dissenters, so intensely Protestant, became leaders of the popular faction in a rebellion, which had "No Popery" for its watchword, which led to their own tragic end, and which was followed by many years of factional battles.—See May 16 and 31, 1668, et seq., where is presented a detailed resume of Leisler's early activities in this province. Mrs. Van Rensselaer gives a sketch of Milborne's career, beginning: "Jacob Milborne, according to the testimony of the many enemies he made in after years, had a love of change of condition, as well as a taste for reforming men, and then sold as a bond-servant to a resident of Hartford. Stubborn and disobedient, he had been transferred from master to master until his term expired in 1668 when, at twenty years of age, he came to New York. Here he was employed until 1672 by Thomas Delavall as bookkeeper and business agent, his honesty seeming not to have been called in question. He had a brother who was a conspicuous Anabaptist preacher in Boston, and himself a radical in politics if not in religion."—Ibid., II: 185.

The first watch of which we have any account in this province was that belonging to the learned Domine Van Rensselaer. It was of brass.—See "Hist. of the Domestic Affairs of the Inhabitants of N. Y.," in Man., Com. Coun. (1858), 502. Van Rensselaer owned a library of about 200 volumes, in various languages.—Ibid., 593.

1744 | See also Dec. 10, 1679; April 15, 1676; and the "New (Great) Dock," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 990. The governor and council order that the magistrates of New York appoint a town treasurer. A committee is appointed to confer with the magistrates on the subject.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 48. On Nov. 14, 1676, Peter Stoutenburgh was serving as "Treasurer of ye City."—M.G.C., I: 38.

Aug. | King Philip's War practically ends with the death of Philip, although continued by tribes in Maine and New Hampshire until April 12, 1675 (q.v.).—Lincoln, Nat. of the Indian Wars, 104-5.

Matthew Hilliard is reappointed at a meeting of the deputy magistrates to maintain in the City a School for ye Educating & instuctive of Youth Either in Readings Writing Arithmetic Latin or Greek. He had already served about two years and had received from the city a small salary, but there had been some dissatisfaction, and another applicant, Ebenezer Kirtland, now appears. Hilliard is continued in the position, "he behaving himselfe for ye future better than ye time Past." The city will now provide him with a school-room but no salary.—M.G.C., I: 22-24.

John Harbendinge and Jacob Abrahamson are appointed the tanners for the city, and given the sole right to exercise this trade. Peter Pangborne is appointed sole currier. A butcher is not permitted to be a currier, tanner, or shoemaker, and a tanner is not permitted to be a currier, shoemaker, or butcher.—M.G.C., I: 24.

A pure food regulation is made by the mayor and aldermen. Grain which is not to be ground or bolt shall not be distilled. "Two inches of water in the Leevin, all or part of the town island, is not known (or known to be) navigable."—M.G.C., I: 25. For another instance of community responsibility, see July 21, 1715.

James, Duke of York, through his secretary, gives these instructions to Gov. Andros: "It is his Royal Highness intenious to have all persons whatsoever treated with all humanity and gentleness that can consist with the honour and safety of your government to the end, that where the laws do inflict a punishment, it may seem rather for example to deter others from the like crimes, than to afford the party punished, except where his malice appears plainly to aggravate his offence."—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 237.
The mayor and aldermen of New York present two sets of candidates to the governor from which he may select their successors for the ensuing year.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 51. Regarding this custom of making nominations, note the Dutch practice (Jan. 18, 1665; Jan. 29, 1667), and its revival under Gov. Lovelace (Oct. 9, 1666). Nicholas de Meyer was chosen mayor; Thomas Gibbs, deputy mayor; Stephen van Cortlandt, Johannes de Peyster, Francisc Romboult, Thomas Swanswell, and Thomas Lewis, aldermen.—see Weiser for brief sketch of de Meyer’s life, Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 385; Wilson’s Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 51.

Nov. 14, Mayoralty, 1675; 1669).—M. C. C., I: 9, 17, 18, 25, 29. Vide supra, Jan. 10. This dock, spoken of commonly as “The Great Dock,” supplemented a smaller one which was constructed by the corporation of New Amsterdam in 1659 (see April 18, 1659), and enlarged in 1660 (see Nov. 1, 1660). There was evidently some thought given to permanency, as “Eighteene thousand Carte Loade” of stone (see Jan. 10) were estimated to be necessary. An assessment of “One Penny half Penay per Ponde” is levied on this day on 301 persons, yielding $357 18s., a portion of which is to be used in paying the Chargs of the New docke.”—Ibid., I: 29, 28. The statement in Wilson’s Mem. Hist. N. Y., I: 377, that this dock was completed before the close of 1675, seems untenable. For its location, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 990. For a description of the successive changes in its development in later years, illustrated by an outline drawing, see 1700 and Addenda. It is significant that the Great Dock, repaired frequently and enlarged from time to time, served as the only place of dockage until 1750, when the common council decided to run out a pier on the west side of Coenties Slip, and appointed a committee to have charge of its construction. For later this received the name of “The Albany Pier.”—M. C. C., V: 293-294. VII: 177; see also Pl. 34, Vol. I. One additional dock was constructed by the municipality prior to the Revolution, the “Corporation Dock,” the first dock or pier on the Hudson River shore of Manhattan Island; it was built to 1805—(Ibid., VII: 378, 379; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 998.

The mayor and aldermen pass an ordinance for the observance of Sunday, as follows: “Ordered that noe Inhabitant Merchant or Trades Mane Or other Person or Persons whatsoever which is or shall bee in the said Captivits of Liberties Therof Shall att any Time hereafter wilfully or obtrusely prevent from the Sabbath daye By Buyinge or Sellinge of any wares of Merchandizes of his or their Trade or Mistery Or by Unlawfull Playinge att Cards Dice Tables or any other Unlawfull Games whatsoever Either In Sermon Time or w8out... As also the disorderly Assemblies of Challange, Bill Stretts and other publick Sourses of others with Noyse Upon the Sabbath day which is to bee Understood from Sun Risesing till Sunn Setting.” Restrictions were placed upon selling or drinking wines and liquors, and fines of from 10 to 100 guilders were fixed for disregarding these regulations.—M. C. C., I: 271.

The mayor and aldermen appoint “Jacob the Baker” to be “head Viewer or Cure Master of the flower of this City and the Liberties thereof,” and define his duties and those of his two deputies.—M. C. C., I: 38-39.

Robert Ryder (or Rider), surveyor, prepares a description of a survey of Manhattan Island, which he has laid out for Gabriell Curtese.—Gal. Land Papers, 14. Ryder’s name as a surveyor first appeared on a M.S. map of Long Island (including Manhattan Island), of 1675 (q. v.), which is preserved by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. It measures from 100 to 517 in. in height, and from 4 ft. 3 in. to 10 ft. 5 in. in breadth; and is reproduced from the original in Ex. Coun. Ann., I, opp. p. 3. It is the same as his map of 1675, which is his name of record on Oct. 20, 1675.—Gal. Land Papers, 7. Other surveys by him, on Manhattan and Staten Islands, and elsewhere, followed.—Ibid., 14 et seq.

The people of Harlem, wishing to secure the two extremities of their patent from further encroachment, engage Robert Ryder, the government surveyor, to lay out five lots at Spuyten Duyvil, "upon the old Matthys Jansen patent ‘beginning by Johannes Verweenen,’ 1677 who as ferrymans occupied the upper end of that patent; and...

Cornelis Mattysen received a patent (Land Papers, I: 144, Albany) for 60 acres of land to the northward of Turtle Bay, being bounded on the south-west by the land of Jacobus Fabricius and to the south-east by the East River; on the north-east by the land of John Bassett; and on the north-west by the Commons. The boundaries of this farm are, generally speaking, as follows: Beginning at a point on the south line of 70th St., a little east of Great Jones St., and 50 feet outwardly to the East River, a little south of the south line of 69th St.; thence southwards to a point a little south of the south line of 64th St.; thence westwards to a point a little west of Second Ave. and south of 6th St.; thence northwards to the point of beginning. This farm became subsequently subdivided into the Peter Sawyer lot; the Widow Hardenbrook tract; and the southern part of the Louvare farm.—Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, I: 249-300.

In this year, Hubbard’s map of New England was published, in his Narrative of the Troubles with the Indians in New England.—Church Catalogue, No. 6901, Wmson, op. cit., III: 314.

The court of assizs establishes the half acre as the legal standard for the sale of firewood, and orders that corders be appointed.—M. C. C., I: 41. At the same time an order is issued relative to the cutting of firewood exposed for sale in New York, and renewing former orders forbidding felled timber to be left on the ground.—Cal. Hist., MSS., Eng., 75.

Gov. Andros orders ("by advice of my Cornell & Co’t of Mayor and Aldermen") that a weekly market be held every Saturday, beginning March 24, in the "house being now built by the Water side near the Bridge and weighhouse."—M. C. C., I: 40. On this was published, the "Market-Place at the Strand," established in 1656 (q. v.). When built, De Voe explains, the business of the old market house at the Strand was probably moved into it. "It appeared to accommodate the country people and Indians, who came by water with poultry, fish, butter, cheese, &c, while those who brought ‘fresh meat’ went up the canal in Broad Street, to the Marketfield Street, and 60 across into the ‘Broadsay Shambles.’" The question may be fairly rated, however, in view of Gov. Dongan’s order of April 28, 1684 (q. v.), whether there was, prior to that date, any meat-market on Broadway. De Voe calls the new market-house the "Custom-House Bridge Market."—Market Book, 70-71.

This same order of Andros, of Jan. 29, 1677, proclaimed Feb. 3, also calls for the one at the Strand, at the New Market St. or St. Peter, which he has laid out for Gabriell Curtese.—Gal. Land Papers, 14. Ryder’s name as a surveyor first appeared on a M.S. map of Long Island (including Manhattan Island), of 1675 (q. v.), which is preserved by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. It measures from 90 to 517 in. in height, and from 4 ft. 3 in. to 10 ft. 5 in. in breadth; and is reproduced from the original in Ex. Coun. Ann., I, opp. p. 3. It is the same as his map of 1675, which is his name of record on Oct. 20, 1675.—Gal. Land Papers, 7. Other surveys by him, on Manhattan and Staten Islands, and elsewhere, followed.—Ibid., 14 et seq.

View, Pl. 17, Vol. I. On May 24, 1684, Gov. Dongan asked that the market be removed "to the Vacant ground before the Fort," and the council ordered it done.—M. C. C., I: 191.

Feb. The city's debts amount to 24,905 fl., 31 st. In the common council minutes are listed the names of over a hundred individuals to whom the city owes money, and against each name is the amount due; to Gov. Andros the largest amount is due, 16,940 fl. The treasurer is ordered to "pay or discount with each of them."—M. C. C., I: 47-46.

The common council orders "that for the Necessary and Publick Use a Generall or Publicke slaughter house shall be Built for the Use of the Cytie over the Water without the Gate at the South-west side of the halle Mound..."—M. C. C., I: 46. See also J. 8, 1678. See also Pl. 17, Vol. I.

The mayor and aldermen order that six wells, "for the publique good of the Cytie," be made in certain specified streets by the inhabitants thereof. One is to be "in the broad way against Mr. Vanicker's" (Hendrick van Dyck's house.; i.e., in Broadway, just south of the present Exchange Alley), and another "in the yeard or backside of the Cytie hall."—M. C. C., I: 46-47. The records show the establishing of two public wells prior to this date.—See Feb. 14, 1667; June 19, 1671. The Van Dyck well is shown on Pl. 17-9, Vol. I. After the six established this year, four more were dug before 1700, making ten new ones. "Of these wells, seven are known by name, and the sites of the other three have been established beyond [reasonable] doubt. They were located thus:—"De Riemer's, in Whitehall Street, near Bridge; "Well of William Con," near the Stadt Huys, at the head of Coenties Slip; "Tunis & Wissell's, in Broad St. between South St. & South William; 'Tunis De Kay's Well," in Broad St., a little above Beaver; 'Frederick Wessel's Well," in Wall St., west of William; 'Mr. Rombout's Well," in Broadway, near Exchange Place; and 'The Well of Suert Olpker's," in the same neighbourhood. Of the three which are not known by name, two were in Broadway Street, near Exchange Place, and the third was in Wall Street, between Broad and New Streets. The waters from these wells was brackish and the supply was not plentiful; but they were regarded as an important addition to the resources of the fire department, and valued for this, if for nothing more."—From "Old Wells and Water-Courses of the Island of Manhattan," by Geo. Everett Hill and Geo. E. Warig, Jr., in Historic New York (1897), 200. See also Sept. 10, 1686.

The mayor and aldermen order that persons having houses with "sone Chimneys or not fitt to keepe fire in" repair the defects within three months or remove therefrom.—M. C. C., I: 12.

It is ordered by the mayor and aldermen that "the old Church yeard or Late buryinge place in the broad way bee Layd out in Lowere Lotts Conteyning Twenty five foote each Lott in the fronte (English measure) And the same to bee sold at a Vandew or Out Court sale to the person or persons who shall require that the same be sold surveyed by Adolph Peterson; he is to make a return to the clerk of the court, who is made "Vandyew Master for the sale of the said Lotts att such Convenient time or times as hee shall think fitt."—M. C. C., I: 47. Goodrich states, in The Picture of New-York (1828), 27, that "Here is the first mention of an auctioneer in our city annals;' but this is a mistake.—See Rec. N. Am., I: 76. It is interesting to note this, and even earlier examples of the 25 foot lot, which later became so common.—Cf. Pl. 24, Vol. I.

The location and history of the "Old Church-Yard on the Heere Straet" are summarized in the Landmark Map Registry, III: 927. See ibid. for the distinction between this burial-pace and the "New Burial Place without the Gate of the City;" see also Hoffman, Treatise on the Estate and Rights of the Corporation (1862), I: 119, and Map Com. Coun. (1861), 922. Valentine stated in 1856 that, "Seventy years ago were buried a great number of the dead of the spades of workmen on the site of this burial-place, a few doors above Morris St. He also gave brief biographical mentions of prominent citizens of New Amsterdam who died while the graveyard was being used for interments.—Ibld. (1862), 445-47.

A law is reenacted (apparently one of April 14, 1674) regarding the licensing of women on the Common Records of branding both horses and cattle. It requires, first, that "two horses be continually kept in the Commons." (According to Valentine, in Map Com. Coun., 1856, p. 533 these were stud-horses, which were to be let loose for the increase of the animals.) The law requires that an exact account shall be kept of all the horses and cattle branded, their colours and markings, and the names of their owners. Two days in the year these shall be apprised of - to give the inhabitants "by fixing tpp of Bills for that purpose." The branders of Harlem are to account to the recorder every quarter, and those of the city every month, for all horses and cattle branded by them. The branders' fees are prescribed, and these are to be paid, through the medium of the recorder, every half year, a certain portion being left "to the disposal of the Mayors Court."—M. C. C., I: 47-48.

In a "History of the Domestic Affairs of the Inhabitants," Valentine thus describes the system of horse-breeding: "The horses of those days were of a very poor class, all having been bred in the woods or in the pastoral woods and meadows which covered the upper part of the island. Many thousands of animals were thus running at large, the only trouble taken by their owners being at a certain season of the year to engage in a common driving expedition, by means of which the animals were collected in a large pound, where the young of the season were branded with their owner's mark, and the whole were then turned loose until the winter snows rendered their protection necessary. Those which were turned out again in the spring were all of the female gender, except the bulls and stallions, which were devoted to the common use. So great an increase was occasioned by this system, that it is said the island was overrun by animals almost as wild and dangerous as the wild horse and buffalo of our prairies at the present day . . ."—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 504-5.

Jacobus Fabricius is granted a patent for land on Manhattan, Mar. 17, 1667; 12 votes in the assembly are cast for and against the patent, containing 60 acres, bounded to the Northeast by the land of Cornelius Mattysen, to the southwest by the lot number fourze and to the northwest by the Commons, as by the return of the survey . . . may appear."—Liber Patents, IV: 116 (Albany). The survey referred to is dated Jan. 27, 1677, and filed in Land Papers, I: 101 (Albany), and is by Robert Ryder, surveyor. See also Turtle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, I: 189-98; 237-47.

Christians are prohibited, by proclamation of Gov. Andros, from trading with Indians at the towns and plantations of the latter. The regulation was renewed by proclamation on Jan. 28, 1665.—M. C. C., I: 89-90.

John Dasielcon receives a patent (Liber Patents, IV: 120, Albany), according to a survey by "Ro: Ryder" (Land Papers, I: 103, Albany), for 30 acres of land lying to the north-east of Turtle Bay, having the East River on the east, land of Jacobus Fabritius on the north; the Commons on the north-west, and land of David Defore on the south-west. On modern maps, this patent was bounded, generally, westerly by a line running from a point on the north line of 57th St., midway between Second and Third Aves., to a point in the middle of the block between 59th and 60th Sts., Second and Third Aves.; on the north, by a line running thence to the river, thence to the line of the street west of 56th and 57th Sts., 208 feet east of Avenue A; on the east, by the East River; on the south, by a line running from a point in the centre of 56th St. at the river, back to the place of beginning. The land later became the property of Thomas C. Pearsall, and was known as the Pearsall Tract.—See Turtle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, I: 179-88.

Dick Seckers (or Sieckem—see Feb. 25, 1672) receives from Gov. Andros a council for a lease on 30 years (not recorded) of the Duke's Bowery or Farm (later known as the Trinity Church Farm).—See recitals in Bogardus v. Trinity, 4 Sandford's Chancery Rep., 609, Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., p. 56.

Jacob Young receives a patent according to a survey by "Ro: May Ryder," dated April 25, 1677. It is described as follows: "Being in breadth by the River side, 43 rods; being bounded to the north-east by the Commons or a certain line of water running beyond, thence to the northwest, into the woods; thence being bounded to the southwest by the land of George Elphenson." It contains in all 324 acres.—Land Papers, I: 110; Liber Patents, IV: 124.

An order of council of this date "concerning lawyers" (Col. Coun. Min., 23) is to the effect that "pleading attorneys" shall no longer be allowed to practise their profession in this province, "but for the defence and keeping of the common portion being left."—Col. Coun. Min., 24.

Ryder returns a survey for Hendrick Hendricksen Bosch, July 8, 1677, for this Island Manhattan lying to the southwest of Mudanies (Mortiey David's?) flay . . . in breadth on Hudson's River 40 rods . . . southeast and by east . . . to the north-northeast by the Commons of Harlem and to the south-southwest and south-East by east by the Commons, containing 30 acres. The document is endorsed: "N Yorke y 11th July 77 allowed making press in virtue of the Land Law..."

A survey is made by Robert Ryder for David Devor (Duflorne Du Four, etc.), by description as follows: "A certain piece of land in the north part of New York, bounded by the land of David Dufor, being in breadth by the water side 80 rods, being bounded to the northeast by the land of John Danielson; ranging northwest into the woods 120 rods, being bounded to the northwest by the Commons and to the southwest by the land of Gabriell Curtiss, ..."

John Beneu receives a patent for a piece of land, which, according to a survey by Robert Ryder, dated July 20, 1677, is described as follows: "Being in breadth by the Water Side, 40 rods, being bounded to the southwest by the land of Jacob Young. Ranging north north northwest by the land of Gabbriell Curtiss, containing hundred and twenty rods, being bounded to the northwest and northeast by the Commons" and containing 30 acres. This survey is endorsed: "N Yorke y 24th of July. Allowed to be confirmed by patent when began to be enfranchised. E. Andron." The patent followed on the above-given date.—Land Papers, I: 121; Liber Patents, IV: 126.

Capt. Nicholas de Meyer obtains a patent for a piece of land "by the edge of the Hill near the Fresh Water, ranging southeast by the edge of the hill, 8 rods square, "to set a wind-mill on."

Liber Patents, IV: 126 (Albany). This lot, lying north of the present Park Row, on the north side of Duane St., was surveyed, and made by Robert Ryder.—Land Papers, I: 121 (Albany). The heirs of Captain De Meyer, in 1691, partitioned the land, including the wind-mill, the cottage and ground belonging thereto, "the Jews burying ground & the De Meyer family vault excepted."—Liber Deeds, XVIII: 134, 137, 165 (N. Y.). William Merritt, mayor of New York, in 1681, had a citation to Michael Rombouthe, town clerk when he conveyed the premises to William Janeway (ibid., IX: 484, Albany), who in turn mortgaged the property, first on Dec. 5, 1699, for £500 to Tenach and Jacobus de key, batters, and John Corbett, mariner (Liber Deeds, XXII: 115); and again, in London, on March 14, 1703, for £150; and John de Peyster, John de Peyster, Jr., and Willy Willey, "Apothecary, of the Parish of St. Michael's Crooked Lane, London."—Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 555; Daly, Settlement of the Jews in N. Am. 39; also Aug. 23, 1728; Dec. 17, 1729. By English law (Act of Wm. & Mary), the last mortgagee could become possessed of the property in fee by paying off the first mortgage, the mortgagee forfeiting his right of redemption by not disclosing the first mortgage. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 934; and cf. More, "The Windmills of Manhattan," in American (Mag.), IX: 564-64.

This wind-mill was demolished some time before Nov. 7, 1741, when the post-road (Park Row) was defined by law to include the straight line "through the Hill by the House of Captain Brown where the Wind Mill stood."—Col. Lawr. N. Y., II: 165. This mill is shown on Pls. 17, 19, 26, 27, and 30, Vol. I. It is not shown on Pl. 12, Vol. I (1742).

Woollett Webber, Hendrick Cornelis, and Bartian Eischen receive a patent for a parcel of land described as "at ye small hills which by virtue of my [Gov. Andre's] warrant hath been laid out" for the above persons, "being in length by ye Highway 72 Rods to ye land of Egbert Wouters, Ranging thence near by west by ye land of said Egbert 60 Rods is length by ye land of Mannuelli Peters and old Francis, 88 Rods and by ye Negroes land to the Highway, 80 Rods, containing 35 acres as by survey." The quint-ent is half a bushel of good winter wheat.—Liber Patents, IV: 127 (Albany).

Abraham Shotwell receives a patent according to a survey by "Ro: Ryder," dated April 25, 1677.—Land Papers, I: 110 (Albany). It is described as follows: "Certain piece of land for George Elphinston [sic] containing 51 rods by ye winding breadth by the River side upon the Island Manhattan, being bounded to the northeast by the land of Jacob Young and ranging northwest into the Wood 120 rods, being bounded beyond by the Commons and to the southwest by the land of John Bassett," and being in extent 38 acres.—Liber Patents, (Albany). Before his patent, "Elphinston had erected a leather mill and other buildings upon his tract, with the assistance of a copartner, Abraham Shotwell, late of New Jersey, to whom (probably in view of what followed) the patent was made out. On Oct. 30th Elphinston sold all his interest in the farm, houses and mill to Shotwell. —Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 383. The patent was actually granted in a grant to Elphinston, as Elke states. It "included within its limits the Saw Kill."—Ibid., 382.

John Bassett receives a patent (Land Papers, I: 124; Liber Patents, IV: 128, Albany) for 60 acres of land whose location, according to modern streets and avenues, was as follows: Bounded on the north by a line beginning at a point on the south line of 75th St., somewhat east of Second Ave.; running east to the East River, a little south of 74th St.; south along the river to a point a little south of 69th St.; west to a point in the south line of 70th St., just east of Second Ave.; and thence to the point of beginning. This tract later became the northern portion of the Lowrie farm.—See Too. Abstracts of Farm Tracts, 379-70.

From this description it appears that the tract was bounded as follows, generally speaking: On the north by a line running from a point on the north side of 75th St., midway between Second and Third Avenues, to the East River; east by the river; south by a line running from the river to a point on the north side of 72d St. just east of Third Ave.; and west by a line running from the latter point to the place of beginning. It afterwards became the property of four large estates: Brevort and Odell, Catherine Livingston, George Yuile, and Thomas Buchanan.—See Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, 1: 141-78.

Matthew Nicolls received, on Oct. 31, 1677, the Warranty of Connecticut that Andros "is bound within fifteen days for Eng'd."—Winthrop Papers, IV: 156. See Nov. 9.

19 The construction of the first insane asylum in New York is ordered by the court of mayor and aldermen, primarily for the proper care of "Peter Frisse, who is a Lunatick..." but not found until 1698. The unfortunate man is ordered to "bee confined into prison in the hold" until the building be completed.—M. G. M. (MS.), Nov. 20, 1677.

5 Michael Hastings, of Woodbridge, N. J., is punished in an unusual manner by the court of mayor and aldermen. He had been convicted of stealing five sheets from beds in James Matthew's about his head and a Rodd under each Arme and to departe this

While he was in England, articles of complaint were "exhibited" against Sir Edmund Andrés, governor of New York, by Thos.
Griffith, Henry Griffith, Thos. Harwood, and others, on behalf of themselves and several other merchants "trading to those territories." One of these complaints was as follows: "To That a 1678 Whipping post is erected in New York after ye Belgick fashion, —far different from ye English manner, by wch ye execution is much more dreadful with many brandings and burns... and thereby more ridiculous to ye netherlanders, & had in great derision by them."—From piece 9 (an early transcript) in vol. of MSS. in Mass. Hist. Soc., lettered, among other titles: "Sir E. Andrés."

In this year, Richard Blome printed in London a work based upon papers received from relatives to the territories in America in which the English were interested. In this he described New York City as follows: "Here is one very considerable town, first built by the Dutch, and called New-Amsterdam, which name is now changed to New York; it is well seated both for Trade, Security, and Pleasure, in a small Isle called Mahattan, regarding the Sea, made so by Hudson River, which serveth it from Long-Island, which said River is very commodious for Shipping, and is about two Leagues broad. The Town is large, containing about five hundred well-built Houses; and for Civil Government, it hath a Mayor, Alderman, a Sheriff, and Justices of the Peace for their Magistracies. For the further security of this Town, here is raised a Fort called James-Fort, which is very strong, and well Defended and Maintained with Men, and Ammunition.
The Town is Inhabited by the English and Dutch, and hath a considerable Trade with the Indians, for the Skins of Elks, Bears, &c.
And for those of Beaver, Otter, and other Furrey, and doth likewise enjoy a good Trade with the English."—Blome, Description of the Island of Jamaica, etc., 76-77.

There are 243 houses in New York. There are only three ships, seven boats, and eight sloops belonging to the port. Net over 400 beeves received in the year.—From RF. C. III, 58, where increases are shown even to the years 1666-8.

While Gov. Andrés is in England, Capt. Brockholls is obliged to plunk the platforms and put new stockades around the fort.
This was done at the country's charge.—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 307.
The town "by the waterside," including Brooklyn, Harlem, and Manhattan Island, and others, were ordered to "cut out three thousand stockades for the use of the Fort, to be in length eighteen feet by seven inches through."—Ibid., XIV: 734.

Ashur (Asser) Levy asks permission of the court of mayor, Janu-

Janson Roos (Gerrit Jansen Roos) to be his partner therein, and that all persons shall "haue Liberty to kill & hang thereat Meat there, paying for the same as formerly to other places." This is granted.—M. G. C., I: 67. Levy reported to the court Oct. 8 that he had built the slaughter-house...—See also Oct. 12; and Cal. Hist. MSS., III: 241, 249-51; Liber City Grants, B: 76 (com-

He is accompanied by several merchants and factors, including William Phipps, James Graham, John White, John West, and others, and by the Rev. Charles Wollas, A.M., recently appointed by the duke as chaplain, the first clergyman of the Church of England to "hold a charge" in this province. The latter remained here until July 31, 1680; on his return to England, he wrote, and published in London in 1701, an account of his experiences, entitled A Two Years Journal in New-York. The extracts here given are from the first ed. (see also that of 1802, Cleveland). Wollas states, in discussing a large variety of subjects:

"The Fort and Garrison of this place lieth in the degree of 40th and 41st of Nort. Lat. and 70th and 80th of W. Long. They bring up their backs to New-York, and other places of Trade, as a barter and exchange for Duffles or Guns, but too often for Rum, Brandy and other strong Liquors, of which they are so intemperate lovers, that after they have once tasted, they will never forbear, till they are inflamed and enraged, even to that degree, that I have seen Men and their Wives Billigate it, through the Streets of New-York, as if they were metamorphosed into beasts, of those beasts whose skins they bartered."

Wampum, made of cockle shells which are found at Oyster Bay, is described; the prices of skins, rum, sugar, wheat, pork, beef, tobacco, and other commodities are given; Indian customs, particularly their food supply, hunting and fishing, are described.—(pp. 7-8).

"I was one with others that have had very good divination and sport with them [beavers], in an Orchard of Mr. John Robinson's of New-York; where we followed a Bear from Tree to Tree, upon which he would swim like a Cat; and when he was got to his resting place, perch'd upon a high branch, we dispute'd a youth after him with a Club to an opposite bough, who knocking his Paws, he comes scrambling down backwards with a thump upon the ground, so we set him against, and having a thing particularly remarkable: Of which I never read any account."—(p. 49).

.. When they [the Indians] travel by water, they have small Boats, which they call Canoes, made of the barks of Trees, ... In which they bring Oysters and other fish for the Market; they are so light and portable that a Man and his Squaw will take them upon their Shoulders and carry them by Land from one River to another, with a wonderful expedition; they will venture with them in a dangerous Current, even through Hell-gate itself, which lies in an arm of the Sea, about ten Miles from New-York Eastward to New-England, as dangerous and as unaccountable as the Norwegian Whirpool or Maclstrom; in this Hell-gate which is a narrow passage, runneth a rapid violent Stream both upon Flood and Ebb; and in the middle lieth some Islands of Rocks, upon which the Current sets so violently, that it threatens present Shipwreck; and upon the Flood is a large whirlpool, which sends forth a continued howling of Roaring; it is a place of great defence against an Enemy coming that way, which a small Fortification would absolutely prevent, by forcing them to come in the west-end of Long-Island by Sandy-Hook, where New-England Government would force them within the command of the Fort of New-York, which is one of the strongest and best situated Garrisons in the North parts of America, and was never taken but once through the default of one Captain Manning, who in absence of the Governor suffer'd the Dutch to take it; for which he was condemned an Exile to a small Island from his name, call'd Manning's Island [Blackwell's Island], where I have been several times with the said Captain, whose entertainment was commonly a Bowl of Rum-Punch."—(pp. 61-65).

He next refers to Indian shoes, etc.

.. Now I am speaking of the Indian Shoos ... I seldom or never observe'd the Dutch Women wear anything but Slippers at home and abroad ... They feast freely and merrily at the Funeral of any Friend, to which I have been often invited and sometimes a Guest."—(pp. 64-66). "The Dutch eat and drink very plentifully at these Feasts; but I do not remember any Musick or Minstrels ... In all their Feasts I observ'd they sat Men and Women intermixed, and not as our English do Women and Men by themselves apart."—(p. 67).

He next describes Indian marriages, burial, and other customs.

I observed them [the Indians] very civil and respectful both in their behaviour and entertainment; I can not remember to meet any company of them, which I frequently did in my walkings in Town, but they would bow both Head and Knee, saying here comes the Sacha-makers Kahi-do-wet, i.e., the Governor Mines, whom I always saluted again with all due ceremony."—(pp. 76-77).

Wolley describes New York at "a place of as sweet and agreeable air as ever I breathed in that latitude"; he remarks that he had never met any company of them, which I frequently did in my walkings in Town, but they would bow both Head and Knee, saying here comes the Sacha-makers Kahi-do-wet, i.e., the Governor Mines, whom I always saluted again with all due ceremony."—(pp. 76-77).

.. I cannot say I observed any scarring or quarrelling, but what was easily reconciled and recantated by a mild rebuke, except once betwixt two Dutch Boors (whose usual oaths is Sacrament) which abating the abusive language, was no unpleasant Scene. As soon as they met (which was after they had alarm'd the neighbour'd) they seized each other's hair with their forefeet, and down went to the sod, their Friends and a flock of the inhabitants, which I have observed."

"The same City of New-York where I was Minister to the English, there were two Minster's or Minister's, whose names I never saw, but were called there, the one a Lutheran a German or High-Dutch, the other a Calvinist an Hollandar or Low-Dutchman, who behav'd themselves one towards another so shily and uncharitably as if Luther and Calvin had been acquainted and entangled their virtuous and pious spirits upon them and their heirs forever. They had not visited or spoken to each other with any respect for six months together before my being there." He described how he brought them together by inviting them and their wives to supper, unknown to each other, and on pledge not to speak in Dutch. Latin being the

Some time prior to 1679, a half-moon fortification, mounting three guns, was constructed on the westerly side of Burger's Path (present location, Pearl St., a little west of Old Slip, as shown on the Labastid View of 1679, Pl. 17, Vol. I). This battery was later replaced by a similar work on the east.—See June 19, 1676. See also World Map Ref. Key, III: 947.

Commissioners are appointed to have a survey made of the land in New York City lying between the gates and the Fresh Water. It is ordered that the lower part of Pearl St. be fenced and that a gate be set up there.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 77. The gates were on Wall St., at Broadway and Pearl St., or Collect Pond lay at about the location of the present (1918) criminal court building.—See Landmark Map Ref. The report of John Lawrence and Johannes van Bruge, dated May 14, shows that, in obedience to the order of "the Governor and Magistrates of this city," dated May 5, for "staking out the new highway," they have staked it out, and have appraised the land contained in it as "twenty guilders per rod, Dutch measure, according to each owner's land brief, excepting that part fronting to the street of Roolsje the Butchers, formerly belonging to the widow of Urin Plakke, which 28 rods or thereabouts stood unto the Carpen. Hogenau, and now taken up in the highway for eight hundred guilders, which we judge ought to be allowed to the said widow."—Ibid., and Hoffman, Treatise upon the Estate and Rights of the Corporation of the City of N. Y. (1862), II: 248, citing a document in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. The street or highway referred to was the present New Street; not the road to Harlem, as Hoffman erroneously supposed. CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664-1703

Land. We came up to the city about three o'clock, where our ship was quickly over-run with people who came from the shore in all sorts of craft, each one inquiring and searching after his own, and his own particular office. The ship came on board as in England, and the ship was all the time free of such persons."—(pp. 35-36).

This happy privilege was, however, only postponed. See below.

Leaving the ship, the two travelers went into the town. "As we walked along we saw in different gardens trees full of apples of various kinds, and so laden with peaches and other fruit that one might doubt whether there were more leaves or fruit on them. I have never seen in Europe in the best seasons, such an overflowing abundance."—(p. 44).

The next day, "As it was Sunday, in order to avoid scandal and for other reasons, we did not wish to absent ourselves from church. We therefore went, and found there truly a wild world. I say wild, not only because the people are wild, as they call it in Europe, but because almost all the people who go there to live, or who are born there, partake somewhat of the nature of the country, that is, peculiar to the land where they live. . . . The church being in the fort, we had an opportunity to look through the latter, as we had come too early for preaching. It is not large; it has four points or batteries; it has no most outside, but is enclosed with a double row of palisades. It is built from the foundation with quarry stone. The parapet is of earth. It is well provided with cannon for the most part of iron, though there be a few of brass, all bearing the mark or arms of the Netherlanders. The garrison is small. There is a well of fine water dug in the fort by the English, [see Feb. 14, 1677], contrary to . . . the Dutch, who supposed the fort was built upon rock, and had therefore never attempted about such things. There is, besides, some store of provisions for along the edge of the water below the fort there is a very large rock extending apparently under the fort, which is built upon the point formed by the two rivers . . . In front of the fort, on the Long Island side, there is a small island called Noten Island [Nut, now Governor's Island], around the point of which vessels must go in sailing out or in, and they are by no means close by the point of the fort, where they can be flanked by several of the batteries. It has only one gate, and that is on the land side, opening upon a broad plain or street, called the Broadway or Beaver way. Over this gate are the arms of the Duke of York. During the time of the Dutch there were two gates, namely, another on the water side; but the English have closed it, and made a battery there, with a false gate. In front of the church is inscribed the name of Governor Killt, who caused the same to be built in the year 1642. It has a shingled roof, and upon the gable towards the water there is a small wooden tower, with a bell in it, but no clock. There is a sun-dial on three sides. The front of the fort stretches east and west, and consequently the sides run north and south."—(pp. 44-46).

Danckaerts describes a visit on this Sunday evening to a tavern, which was also a brewery, kept in another part of town by the daughter of his landlord. "On account of its being to some extent a place of exercise and amusement, we went there on Sunday evening and was a low pot-house." They preferred to walk in the garden, and later retraced their steps in the dark, "exploring a way over which we had gone only once in our life, through a salt meadow and over water, upon the trunk of a tree."

The tavern is again referred to on April 23, 1680, as "a tavern, or drinking house," kept by one Arie and Rebecca, his wife, "having a situation therefor . . . upon a delightful spot at the Vers Water [Fresh Water], a little out of town."—(p. 190).

On Monday morning (Sept. 25) they went on board the ship to obtain the order for any articles for their own stores or for them washed. Their goods were taken ashore and carried to the public storehouse, where they had to be examined; but some time elapsed before it was done in consequence of the examiners being elsewhere. At length, however, one Abraham Lemmon, a good fellow apparently, befriended us. He examined our chest only, with the help of a government officer; and when he had cleared the list of the tin which we had in the upper part of our chest, and he examined it and also the tin, and turned up a little more what was in the chest, and with that left off, without looking at it closely. He demanded four English shillings for the tin, remarking at the same time that the government officers came on board in England, and would not examine them closely[!]. . . . This being finished we sent our goods in a cart to our lodging, paying for the two heavy chests and straw beds, and the other goods from the public store-

Describing the East River, he writes: "There is a ferry for the purpose of crossing over it, which is formed out by the year, and yields a good income, as it is a considerable thoroughfare; this island [Long Island] being one of the most populous places in this vicinity . . . The fare over the ferry is three stuivers in zeeven for each person" (less than half a cent).—(pp. 51-52).

A few days later, the two Labadists explored Manhattan Island. "This island is about seven hours' distance in walking, but it is only a full hour broad. The sides are indented with bays, coves and creeks. It is almost entirely taken up, that is, the land is held by private owners, but not half of it is cultivated. Much of it is good wood land. The west end on which the city lies, is entirely cleared for more than an hour's distance, though that is the poorest ground; the best being on the east and north side. There are many brooks of fresh water running through it, pleasant and proper for man and beast to drink, as well as agreeable to behold, affording cool and pleasant resting places, but especially suitable places for the construction of mills, for although there is no overflow of water, yet it can be shut off and so used."—(p. 64).

"We went from the city, following the Broadway, over the valley, or fresh water. Upon both sides of this way were many habitations of negroes, mulattoes and whites . . . We left the village called the Bouwerie, standing on the right hand, and went through the woods to New Harlem, a tolerably large village situated on the south [east] side of the island, directly opposite the place where the northeast creek [Harlem River] and the East River come together, situated about three hours' journey from New Amsterdam, or old Harlem, in Europe, is situated about three hours' distance from old Amsterdam."—(p. 65). The next day, Oct. 7, they walked from Harlem to the North River which they followed to Sappokanikke (Greenwich) and thence along the shore to the city.—(p. 68).

On Oct. 15, Danckaerts writes: "We went at noon to-day to hear the English minister, whose services took place after the Dutch church was out. There were not above twenty-five or thirty people in the church. The first thing that occurred was the reading of all their prayers and ceremonies out of the prayer book, as is done in all Episcopal churches. A young man then went into the pulpit and commenced preaching, who thought he was performing wonders; but he had a little book in his hand out of which he read his sermon which was about a quarter of an hour or half an hour long. With this the services were concluded, at which we could not be sufficiently astonished."—(pp. 75-76).

The minister was Rev. Charles Wolly, the only English minister then in the province.—See Aug. 7, 1702.

On Oct. 27, "we made acquaintance of a person from Zee-land, or who had lived there a long time, for he himself was a Hollander. He had been an apprentice to Jaques Fierens, priest, at the Globe in the Gi street [at Middleburg, Zeeland, in Holy Ghost St.]. . . He sometimes bound old books, and was the only bookbinder in the city. . . ."—Ibid., p. 81. On Nov. 14, to Jan. 2, the Labadists journeyed to Maryland and Virginia.

Danckaerts recorded on Jan. 15, 1680, that on Jan. 5 "the ships left the harbor in front of the city . . . for Dealt Bay, a cove of Loong Island in the East River, about three miles east of the city, opposite Hellgate, where they lie during the winter, to be out of the way of the Boating ice, which is sometimes very great."—(p. 166). ("Dealt Bay was a small bight in the East River, about at the foot of Forty-seventh Street. The name was later corrupted into Turtle Bay." It was not a cove of Long Island.)—Ibid., footnote by Jameson; see also Bridges Map, Pl. 50, Vol. III; and Chronology Nov. 15, 1680.

In conversation with an Indian named Hans, on March 4, "he told us certain things which we had never heard any Indian or European mention, the opinion of the Indians in relation to the Godhead, the creation and the preservation and government of all things." He is quoted as saying: "we did not have so much sickness and death before the Christians came into the country, who have taught the people debauchery and excess; they are therefore much more miserable than they were before. The devil, who is wicked, instigates and urges them on to all such kinds of unlawful uses and excess, to fighting and war, and to strife and violence amongst themselves, by which many men are wounded and killed."—(p. 174). "I asked Hans, our Indian, what Christians they, the Indians, had first seen in these parts. He answered the first were

On May 30, M. de La Grange, whom they had met in New York a few days after their arrival in September, asked them to go with him to "Wale Bocht" (Wallabout), opposite "Correlaes Hook." It was De La Grange who had taken them during the winter to the "South River" (Delaware River), which, in the autumn, he had landed the Lahadies and the Wenhappees, who had been out all this winter. They accordingly set off in the boat, and landed first on the Mahatan, a little north of the Burnt Mill, on a beautiful farm, having two fine ponds of water before the door, where a mill was standing. Arriving at the "Wale Bocht," they found a ship aground, which had struck on the reef of rocks which juts out from Correlas's Hook towards this bay, and had floated over here and sunk. She was a French privateer, which had taken some rich Dutch prizes in the bay of Campeachy and was going through here to New England, in order to dispose of the goods which would not bring money enough in New York. All the goods which were again sold at New York by French vessels was莲花, (Valentine, without citing authorities, locates Burnt Mill Point at what now Dry Dock St., between 10th and 12th Sts., and states that a windmill was erected here ago on Gov. Stuyvesant's property at an early date, that it had been destroyed by fire and that it is now allowed to stand for many years, so that the locality became known as Burnt Mill Point.—Man. Com. Coun., 1836, p. 474].

Dancæart gives an almost contemporaneous account (see April 30, 1680) of the troubles between Andros and Carteret.—(pp. 239–44, and footnote by Jameson). The city's trade and shipping interests at this time, the manufacturer of flax, and the large commercial interests, especially in "Frederick Flinsey," in which the governor was supposed to have a share, are all described (pp. 244–47), as are also Andros's high-handed methods and ill treatment of various persons at New York (pp. 248–49). Certain pages, now missing, probably contained a detailed description of the town. On June 19, 1680, the travelers left New York for Boston, and returned home to Friesland. On June 23, Dancæart records that "Noten island" was "the first place the Hollanders ever occupied in this bay..." (p. 236). See April 22, 1625.

Three views of New York, drawn in these years by Jasper Dancæart, as illustrations to his Journal, showing the East River front and the city from the north, are reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pls. 17, 18, and 19.

Oct. After a joint meeting of the mayor and alderman and the governor's council, it is proclaimed that fires for the boiling of pitch for the use of vessels shall be kept "against the Island." When the "half Moone house was the Cryte Wall," the fires are to be extinguished every night. No fires for any purpose are to be made on vessels lying within the harbor, "Unless in Extremity of Winter." The fires where the pitch is boiled is to serve all purposes.—M. C. C., I: 73. The "half Moone" was mentioned on Feb. 16, 1677 (p. 5) in connection with the location of the public slaughter-house. See Dancæart and Suttyer View, Pl. 17, Vol. I.

Nov. Gov. Andros appoints the following officers for New York, to serve until October 14, 1680.—Francis Rombout, mayor; William Beckman, Johannes van Brugh, Thomas Lewis, Peter Jacob Marmor, Edward Verplank, and Samuel Wilson, aldermen; and John Archer, sheriff.—M. C. C., I: 74. Beckman acted as deputy mayor.—Ibid., 87. For brief account of the personal history of Francis Rombout (a Frenchman), and the inventory of his household furniture, see Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 586; ibid. (1854), 512–13. His residence is described as "La Grange's house near the Cryte Wall," the estate having a large garden and orchard extending to the river. It lay north of the old cemetery on Broadway (see Feb. 28, 1677).—Settle, Castello Pl., 222–23; Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 512–13.

29 A record is made of the amounts realized from "farming" or leasing of lands from 1675 to 1678. Among these are names of the lessees.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 81; See ibid., 66, regarding its regulations. See also Nov. 25, 1675; April 21, 1691.

Dec. 1 Abraham Corbett is appointed city clerk by Gov. Andros, and sworn in.—M. G. C., I: 75. He succeeds the late Samuel Leete, whose last official act of record was on Dec. 15, 1678.—Ibid., I: 72.

For an inventory of Leete's effects, which included "Thirty-eight books great and small, valued at $13.3.6. in a considerable private collection at that period here," see Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 543.

The council forbids the killing of horses for treading. Orders are also issued regarding the killing of wolves. Wood is to be sold by the cord. (See also Jan. 12, 1677). The use of the steyard is abolished. It is resolved that all Indians are free and not slaves, and cannot be forced to be servants, except those brought from foreign lands; such, brought from abroad within six months, are to be disposed of "out of ye Government," and all brought to New York after that to be free.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 81, 82, 86.

The same surveyor makes a survey for Yeasoll Johnson of land which is described as follows: "Beginning at a certain mark by the land of Peter Jacobson, ranging thence southwestwardly 56° by the longitude ship Isaac, (Valentine) and lying west of land with the title of the said Isaac, 65 rods; ranging thence southwestwardly 14° 80 rods; ranging thence northwestwardly 56° 60 rods to the land of Jacob Peterson the Great; qt. in all 30 acres."—Land Papers, II, 160. Robert Ryder makes a survey of a piece of land for Casper Jacobson (sic), the description being as follows: "At Fresh Kill, beginning at a certain stake set in the rear of the land of Grrar Ramasson upon the Island Manhattans; ranging thence southwesternly 56° by the land of Johannis Couwenhoven 65 rods; Ranging thence southwesterly 34° 75 rods to the land of Peter Jacobson. Robert Ryder also makes a survey of a piece of land for Solomon Peterson, described as follows: "Lying at the rear of the lots at the Greate Kill beginning at the rear of the lot of Johannis Couwenhoven, by the Swanpe, ranging into the woods southwesterly 56° 60 rods; ranging thence southwesterly 34° 80 rods; ranging thence northwesterly 56° 60 rods and thence extending northwesterly 34° by the Swanpe 60 rods to the first station; qt. in all 30 acres of upland."—Land Papers, II, 160 (Albany).

... whenever Spain was at war with any other European power, adventurers of any country found no difficulty in procuring commissions, as privates, to war against the Spaniards, with the express and explicit connivance of the one side, and of the other. It was no different with Spain, they assumed that they were lawful enemies, and they were allowed in the ports of neutral nations, which benefited by being made the mart of the buccaneers' prize-goods; and the buccaneers thought themselves well recompensed in having a ready market and the security of the port.

"It was under the privileges thus afforded, that the 'South Sea Men' organized their several expeditions destined to operate on the west coast of America. In 1680 a fleet of seven vessels, manned by about three hundred and fifty men, mostly of the English nation, and several of them sailing from New York, departed for the South Pacific. The operations of the buccaneers, notably of Morgan, the plunderer of Panama, who became Sir Henry Morgan, a favourite of King Charles II, form an interesting chapter of English-American history.—See "The Red Sea Men," in Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 455–79. New York's connection with this unlawful traffic was none marked by the occupiers of the place. However, although instructions to Dongan, dated May 29, 1686, stated: "And whereas we are informed of great Disorders & Depredations daily committed by Pyrates & others to the prejudice of Our Allies contrary to the Treaties between us & the good correspondence we have sent unto you bee passed within Our province of New York, —" N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 374. Such a law does not appear of record, however, until Sept. 10, 1692 (q.v.), in Gov. Fletcher's time."

Debtors and Creditor as ye Same is Delivered in." The court agrees to "fully freely and Absolutely Release and Discharge him," provided he performs "by beforehanded Engagement." William Burdus is appointed treasurer in his place.—M. C. C., I: 75-76. See Oct. 19, 1685.

It is ordered by the council of mayor and aldermen that the 24 Saturday market (see Jan. 29, 1677) be continued, and that an additional market be held every Wednesday, at "ye usual market place near ye Bridge and Wheel House."—M. C. C., I: 76.

In view of the "Ill Consequence of any Indians to bee Slaves or Servants wthin this Government Contrary to former Custome Practice," the common council resolves that they shall be considered free and not slaves, and not be forced to be servants.—M. C. C., I: 80.

Seven persons are "Lycenced to sell wine & other Liquors." Seventeen additional licenses were granted between this date and Oct. 1 next.—M. C. C., I: 80-81. See also March 5, 1672. Gov. Dongan, in 1683, proclaimed that none could receive licenses without first obtaining a certificate that they were "of good life & Conversation and Fett to keep such a house."—Ibid., I: 100-1.

A license is granted to Abraham Corbett to sell wine and other liquors.—M. C. C., I: 80. Corbett's tavern was at the sign of the Royal Oak on Broadway, on part of the present site of the Standard Oil Company's building at No. 26 Broadway. He continued to keep it as late as 1699.—Of Licens, Beads, XIII: 161; XVI: 377 (New York). See also Castello Plan, II: 233-235; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980.

Adrian Cornelison is licensed to sell wines and liquors.—M. C. C., I: 81. His house was at the south-west corner of Bowery Lane and the Sand Hill Road (Actor Pl. and Fourth Ave.). Adrian Cornelison (van Schack) had married Rebecca, daughter of Teunis Ides; after his death, she continued to keep the tavern on the Bowery Road, and the place became very well known as "Rebecca's House."—"Title Guarantee & Trust Co. records. John Clapp kept a tavern here in 1667 (p. 29). See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980; Pl. 175, Vol. III. See also March 26, 1690.

Andros sends soldiers to Elizabethtown, who break open Gov. Carteret's house at night and bring him a prisoner to New York. Here Carteret is "committed to the custody of Sheriff Collyer, on a charge of unlawfully assuming jurisdiction over the king's subjects." A special court of assizes is ordered to try him, "on an indictment for riotously presuming to exercise jurisdiction and government over his Majesty's subjects within the bounds of his Majesty's letters patents granted to His Royal Highness." Andros presided at the trial. "Carteret protested against the jurisdiction of the New York court; being overruled, he covered his head as governor of New Jersey 'to be legal, and by virtue of power derived from the King.' He was acquitted on May 28, but had to "give security that, if he went to New Jersey, he would not 'assume any authority or jurisdiction there, civil or military.'" Thereafter the authority of New York was held to extend north as far as the Hudson. State of N. Y., II: 331-34 (and authorities there cited). See also the graphic account of this occurrence in the Joa. of Jasper Dancker (1913 ed.), 239-44, with footnote by Jameson.

The magistrates of Harlem authorize the constable (Johannes Vernelje) and Daniel Tournour to employ a carpenter to build a "town house" 22 ft. long by 20 ft. wide. Adolph Pietersen de Groot, carpenter at New York, undertook the work for 250 guilders. The inhabitants agreed to work on the building a certain number of days gratis.—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), II: 420; Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1881), 410. Daniel Tournour, Jan Dumont, Jan Hendricks Brevoort, Arent Heymen, Jan Nagel, Adolph Meyer, Jan Dyckman, and Laurens Jansen all took part in "riding the shingles and clapboards. It took 400 clapboards and 1,600 shingles to inclose the house. There were obtained from Gabriel Leggett of Westchester, "woodshawyer," 430 ft. of sawed planks for flooring the building, and 316 boarding, and other clapboards to fill the windows. The inhabitants had credit for whatever articles they furnished, or extra time they spent; the allowance for a day's labour being five guilders, or two dollars.—Ibid., 415. The house was finished in 1682. A search in the Harlem Recs. (in N. Y. Pub. Lib.) Riker's Hist. of Harlem, and other authorities has failed to discover the site of the Harlem town house.

Docs., III: 379—82. See Oct. 16, 1660; Dec. 31, 1681. Andros is ordered (see Oct. 29) to turn his government over to Lieut. Brockholst, and to return to England by the first ship (see Jan. 7, 1681). This change was made because discrepancies appeared in provincial accounts and because the administration of Andros had been criticised by various men whom the governor had displeased.—Ibid., III: 283—84; and see 1678.

June 30 Officers of the Dutch Church and of the city meet at the house of Oldf Stevensen van Cortlandt to consider ways of raising money to build a new church. They decide on a tax—will offer considerable objections, because of a public tax. Notice is to be given to the inhabitants of the several streets to give in their subscriptions at stated times at the city hall. The country people at the Bowery, Harlem, and on the Island, are to be spoken to also. It is proposed that the new church be somewhat larger than the church in the fort, which was "44 foot wood measure without—but 50 witho.—in breadth."—Doc. Hist., N. Y., (40 ed.), III: 244 (where "June 31" is given).

July 16 Andros gives Rev. Charles Wolley a passport to return to Eng.

Oct. 15 John West is appointed by Gov. Andros to be secretary to the prov. clerk, to the court of assizes, and clerk to the city of New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 657; see also Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 335—36, and authorities there cited. He was sworn in as clerk of the city on Nov. 8 (p. 85).

15 Philip Willers receives a patent (Liber Patents, V, 8, Albany) for several acres of the five houses of the West India Company (see 1685), now belonging to the Duke of York. This property was on the site of the present No. 2 Stone St. See Castello Plan, II: 259—60; C. Pls. 82, 82a, 87, Vol. II. See also Oct. 16.

16 John Lewin, who was commissioned by the Duke of York on May 24, 1660 (p. 5), to inquire into the state of the government and trade in New York, Albany, etc., arrives in New York. Gov. Andros orders that "the Custome House books, Papers, & Accot e[tc.]

8 be delivered to him, but Lewin has difficulty in obtaining them all from Capt. Dyre, the collector, and from Gov. Andros. He is put to the trouble of searching for them; also of getting an order of council to examine "the Patent books for Land." In his report (not dated, but probably made in 1681), Lewin stated: "Most of the patents granted in former Govern[ors'] time make no mention of any Quantity of Acres especially in long Island, where most is granted in Towne shippes without Quitt Rent or any other rent, but services have been demanded from them in Coll. Lovelace's time for repairing fort James. . . . The patents in most places are so imperfect by being so often changed from one person to another, taken from some & granted to others, That I could not take any acc[ot] of them as Instructed. . . . The houses are not fixed in place and Albany, being much more, some less as they judge requisite. . . . But those at New Yorks say they have never had any peri[od] of the Tax of houses with amounts to 170^2 p ann. nor of the dockage, wharfage or Anchorage w[5] is conceived amounts to a great sum anually, and should be accounted for to the City for repairing the bridge and the wharfe running to decay, they likewise say a considerable sume of money was raised upon their stocks both Inhabitants and Merchant Strangers for making the Docks att first, but never any acco[ed] made to them of it. . . . There is no weighe house in all the Govern[ors'] but at New Yorke.

"Writing the Records of New York in the Custody of Mr. West Towne Clarke I demanded them in order to give an Acco of those several fitts & Ameri[can]s imposed upon several Merch. . . . but he told me he . . . could not deliver them without the Mayor's order."

Lewin explains further how his inquiry is hampered; also the details of Dyre's method of collecting and retaining part of the customs revenue. Referring to the custom-house, he states: "the hindermost part of it being a pretty house and 2 chambers, over the fore part all in the Govr's use," etc. His report charges Dyre as responsible for the increase in the frauds in the customs.

He further finds sums charged as expenses against Fort James, which are unaccountably large, unless it be "by pulling down and building up again the kitchen & a shed which hath been repeated several times, and by taking the Dutch tyles from off the great house and covering it with shingles altering the stieres and such other practices, by with Sould be, his own Serv[ent]s and Negroes are Oct. 16, 1681."

"The Old Hospital menciond in the Govr's last acco to be sold for 200l might have been sold as it stood for 300l to Coll. Martinus, but was pull'd down the materials removed to rebuild an Apartment taken down in the fort with hath considerably larrg'd the saidacco but noe mencion of the street ther for sold for 75l more then he was accomplished for of the Old tylles of the Old Hospital sold to Capt. Broocholes." C.f. July 5, 1660; and see Dec. 2, infra.

Lewin closes his report by mentioning the "Conscienc prac[ted] to some few Dutch Merchants viz. frederick Philippus & Stephanus van Cortlandt the Govrs' Trustees," etc., which has caused considerable anxiety. The governors, he says, by him have permitted goods to be brought in contrary to the "Act of Navigation & Trade." The English inhabitants are afraid to prosecute; traders from the Barbadoes and elsewhere have refrained from coming to New York to trade or to settle with their families. Such conditions, Lewin adds, "may be prevented for the future by placing such discreet & honest Officers that Justice may be equally distributed to all men, & ye Roy HIighe not deceived & abused."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 302—8. See Dec. 31, 1681.

Andros commissions Capt. William Dyer (or Dyre) to be mayor; William Beekman (or Bealeman), Johannes van Brugh, Thomas Lewis, Peter Jacobs, Samuel Wilson, and James Graham, aldermen; and Capt. John Collier (or Collier), sheriff.—M. G. C., VIII: 146. Capt. Dyer was Reappointed mayor by Broocholes on Oct. 14, 1681, and Oct. 14, 1684, and Oct. 15, 1685. For a brief sketch of the life of William Dyer, see Man. Com. Coun. (1875), 387; Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. T., II: 52.

Andros's commission to John West to be "Clerke of the City" Nov. 15 bears this date, and he is sworn in. He is given authority to take in his Custody & Keeping all Records Books & Paper of Publice Concerne belonging thereto. Beginning at this time, the city archives contain original papers in considerable quantity. Prior to 1680 there are very few in the files.

Consternation is caused in New York, and elsewhere throughout the world, by the appearance of an enormous comet, one of the most magnificent on record. See Falke, Dutch and Quaker Colonies in Am., II: 59 (where, also, in succeeding pages, is presented an excellent account of the topographical appearance of the city at this time). The supersition of the time was reflected in a poem, written by Rev. Ichabod Wiswall, of Duxbury, Massachusetts, and published in London in 1683, entitled: A Judicious Observation of That Dreadful Comet, which Appeared Upon November 18, 1680, and continued Flourishing till the 10th of February following, Wherein is shewed the manifold judgments that are like to attend upon most parts of the World. This work has been reviewed by Alfred B. Page in "An Early American Poem," in the Colonial Soc. of Mass. Publica-

A piece of ground lying on the south side of Stone St., known as the ground of the five houses, is surveyed and laid out into four lots:—No. 1, for Capt. Brockholst; No. 2, for John Darwall; No. 3, for Stephen van Cortlandt; and No. 4, for Philip Wolles, the surveyor.—Cal. Land Papers, 21. The five houses or old hospital, which had formerly stood in this plot of ground, had originally belonged to the Dutch West India Company. During the English occupation, it was used to lodge officers for want of room in the fort. Gov. Andros took the building down and used the material to erect lodgings for the officers and secretary.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 397, 312. See Oct. 15, 16, Dec. 6, 15, 1680; and cf. Dec. 31, 1681.

Capt. Anthony Broocholes receives a patent (Liber Patents, V, 8, Albany) for part of the ground of "the Five Houses of the West India Company" (see 1666) near the Old Hospital of York. This property was on the site of the present No. 4 Stone St.—See The Castello Plan, II: 259—60 C. Pls. 82, 82e, 87, Vol. II.

A proclamation is issued by the mayor and aldermen forbidding the inhabitants or others within the city "in harbou Intertainment or Maintenance of any Indian Negro Slaves in or about any of the Houses or Otherwise or to sell or Deliver to any one Wine Rum or other strong Liquor, or receive or take from such Indian or Negro slaves any mony or other Goods on any account Whatsoever."—M. Brockholl's, now in charge of the government, writes to Sir John Werden, the duke's secretary: "I have one thing of great moment to acquaint you with, which is the Loos or at least wise a p'sent cessation from payment of his Royall Highness Customs Established here, the time to w^h they were limited to be Received was expired in November last, it being monstrous in the Regulacion of the Customs that is to hold good for three years from November 1677, which being publiquely known to the merchants they all refuse to pay any Customs or Duties and Capt. Dyre, the Collector, being now very ill, a Pinke [vessel] from London hath Voolshed her Goods and carryed them to their warehouses without taking any notice of the Custome house or officers, absolutely Refusinge to pay any Customs." A general confusion in the government followed.—The Council met and advised thereupon but find noe power or authority to continue the same longer, without orders from Home."—O'Callaghan's "Historical Introduction" to Jour. Leg. Coun., (1861), viii.

Capt. William Dyre, one of the council, collector of the duke's revenue, and mayor of New York, is accused of high treason in the mayor's court. By warrant from the commander and council, the general court of assizes met on June 29 (q. v.), to try him.—N. T. Col. Docs., IV: 287-88.

Rev. Caspar Zuuren writes to the classics of Amsterdam that June at present, on account of vacancies at New York and Esopus, there are only three preachers in this whole province of New York or New Netherland. These are at Schenectady, New York, and the conference of the province between these preachers. He states further: "Even the Capital, New York, has no English minister or chaplain."—Eccl. Rec. II: 777-79.

William Dyre, collector of the port (see May 31), is tried before a special session of the court of assizes, held in New York, on the charge of high treason, on the ground that he has imposed unlawful duties on goods passing through the port. He questions the authority of the court, and consequently is sent to England so that the king may proceed against him as he deems best.—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 287-89. This difficulty arose from the fact that these customs duties, which, by reason of a three-year's limit, were about to end, had been arbitrarily ordered continued by the Duke of York. At the same time, Gov. Andros was ordered to increase the duty on imported rum.—Ibid., III: 288; Chalmers, Political Annals, I: 532. However, just at this time, Gov. Andros was recalled to England, and the city, by a vote of May 22, 1685, asked the king to renew the order for the collection of customs duties. Consequently, the merchants of New York refused to pay the sums demanded, and when cargoes were seized, one of them brought suit against Dyre, as he has been stated. Dyre was sent to England for prosecution at his request, and there his prosecutor did not appear against him, and his case was dismissed.—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 321. But the "end of the prosecution was answered. This spirited measure [on the part of the merchant] . . . had the greatest effect in laying in ruins that system of despotism which had so long afflicted the people." The governor's council, the court of assizes, and the corporation of New York united in asking the duke to permit the people to take part in the legislative power. This request was granted in the administration of Dungan.—Political Annals, op. cit., I: 538; Brodburn, Hist. State of N. T., II: 351-55, and appendix, note D. It was the resistance offered thus early by the merchants of New York and their wishes to participate, which eventually led to the representative form of government in the province.—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 283, footnote. See Dec. 31.

The text of the petition to the duke just referred to reveals the intensity of desire at this early day for freedom from oppression; it calls attention to "the great measure and laborious project of his majesty's subjects." They plead for an assembly "of the people" as the only remedy possible for existing conditions,—an assembly established "by a free choice of the freeholders and inhabitants." They express their satisfaction in the appointment by the duke of the agent, John Lewin, and concur in his "grand inquest." They explain that for many years they have "ground under inexpressible burdens by having an arbitrary and absolute power used and exercised" over others, by which a yearly revenue has been exacted without their will; "and trade grievously burnered with undue and unusual customs imposed on the mercedize" without their consent—"our liberty and freedom intrinsi-cal, and the inhabitants wholly shut out and deprived of any share, vote, or interest, in the government, to their great discouragement, their laws, rights, liberties, and privileges, of the subject; so that we are esteemed as nothing, and have become a reproach to the neighbours in other his majesty's colonies, who flourish under the duration and protection of his majesty's unpar-alled form and method of government in this his majesty's plantations."—Brodehead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 685, citing was to sell liquors at retail except those who "would agree with the Farmers or pay Excise as Formerly." The permit for selling wines and liquors (cf. ref. to the former as "the Greate Packt or Excise") is

"let to James" on this day for the ensuing year to five persons named in the order, and any one desiring to sell at retail is required to agree with them upon the terms of the excise.—Ibid., I: 57.

Hemsterhuzen, at "a yearly salary of one thousand Carolus guild-ers" (about $400).—Eccles. Rec., I: 785. He entered into contract in Amsterdam with the commissioners of the Dutch Church of New York on Dec. 10.—Ibid., I: 797-800. He arrived in New York on Aug. 6, 1682.—Ibid., I: 876. See Oct. 28 and Nov. 15, 1683; Sept. 30, 1686.

The deputy mayor (William Beecken) and aldermen, influcenced by Frederick Phillips, one of the governor's council, drew up a declaration protesting against Lewin's taking depositions privately and administering oaths for that purpose. Such procedings were at variance with that order in council of April 9, 1679, which required that no one but the mayor, deputy mayor, or deputy alderman, shall grant any warrants, admit any private heartings, or take oaths, and that no oaths shall be taken except in courts, unless in case of necessity and when the parties are present.
Lewin has allowed the parties named no opportunity to vindici-cate themselves or to make an answer. He has not made application to the city's authorities for assistance; or made known any of the depositions obtained. Since his arrival great disorder and confusion have occurred in the government, due to such irregularities.—M. C.
C., I: 87-88. See also July 25, 1685. The original declaration or remonstrance is filed in metal Bile No. 1, city clerk's record-room.

Oct. 12 The first mention of a settled meeting of the Society of Friends occurs. It is agreed "that the First-day meeting shall remain at Robert Story's, and the Fifth-day meeting at Lewis Morris', until a public meeting house shall be provided, and that William Richomn, and the Rev. Philip Franklin hire a convenient house, to the advice of Lewis Morris, Robert Story and George Masters."—

14 An order is issued by the commander-in-chief (Brockholls) and council continuing present the magistrates of the city in office for a year or until further order. This is in accordance with regular practice to name new magistrates at this time, and also because of the present State and Conditions of the Government in General."—M. C. C., VIII: 157.

Brockholls, the commander-in-chief, is serving in the absence of Andros, who is in England (see Jan. 7). Brockholls observes that Andros has not determined whether Andros is to return to New York, for his wife now sailed in the ship Beaver to join him in England.

Dec. 31 The report of John Lewin, the duke's special agent to audit accounts at New York (see Oct. 16, 1680), having been delivered to Andros, who is now in England (after leaving New York, January 31), Andros makes answer to Lewin's charges. Among other things he states:

'Noe Patents have been altered or changed in my time but at the Request of the owner, or by verdict & judgment according to Lawe, . . . The Revenues of New Yorke of Houses, Wharfrage, Dockage &c hath been ordered & managed by the Magistrates & officers of ye 6th City (as their own) and Imployed to the great benefit & Improvment thereof, particularly in making the Harbo' or Mold,

'The room over the Custome house was ever used by all my Predecessors as a Granary or store room and soe continued since the tale of his Royall Highnes Cargo, and the Cellar left to the Collections as formerly for his Royall Highnes service . . .

'The Dutch having built and fitted an Armory over the kitchen as the most proper room in the forth, it proved extraordinary lacke and too rotten to be repaired as was found by survey, whereupon I was forced to remove the arms to the garrett over the soldier's Quarters, and to avoid charge pulled down both armory and kitchen, making up a shed to serve for kitchen & Hall. But afterwards finding the Armes could not be well kept in the Garret by reason of smoke from the sollurows rooms and moisture from the Tyles both being unclosed, I did resolve upon rebuilding the Armory, Of the walls of the Church, of the great house, of stair case and of the flore the made greatest part of the stone work, w'h hath brought the kitchen againe to what it was, And the Armory (being the only [one] that in those parts) is a worke absolutely necessary to the forth, where I left above a hundred good armes fixt and in good order, and place for more.

'The taking the Tyles off the great house and shiling the was in imitacon of what was done to the Church by the Inhabitants in my Predecessor's time to prevent Leakage by reason the Tyles were usually broken when the Gunnes were fired; The Tyles paying for the shiling the.

'The house was soe leaky tho' lately built and never finished by Govr Lovelace that the staires and some rooms were quite rotten, and soe of necessity to be repaired.

'Some of the plantaffes being in decay were new made during my former voyage to England, but were ordered and part of the materials for the same, and for some new Carriages for the gunns were brought upon the place before my coming away. But Lieut.
Brockholls in my absence not observing my directions left w'h making shippe instead of Land Carriages for the gunns, & buying stockdole to set round the forth, w'other Expenses contrarie and without or as aforesaid occasioned an extraordinary charge, w'h ought to be laid at his dore and not at mine.

'The five houses [see note below] or Old hospital in the towne, in w'h office also used to be lodged for want rooms in the forth being yearly chargeable & deliver'd to the use, and upon no warrant, nor to be by me known, that I caus'd it and the ground to be appraised & then pulled downe, and brought the materials into the forth for the rebuddling of a like old house designed to be built by all my predecessor w'h is rebuild accordingly and therein made very convenient Lodgings for the Officers & secretary &c which was before very much wanted.

'The ground of the hospital and a little part of the streete by cense of the Towne was appraised at 7000 & sold in 4 lots. As to what is objected concerning Coll Morris having offered 7000 & Remembering nothing of it but acted herein for his Royall Highnes' best advantage.

Andros refers to the improvements in trade, population, and the condition of the province since his first coming to New York.
Of Frederick Phillips and Stephanus van Cortlandt he says that neither they nor anyone "was ever particularly countenanced more then they justly deserved," etc., everyone receiving equal justice
"without respect of persons or nation or quality."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 308-15. A footnote states that the quarter "knowne by the name of the ground of the fire houses" was situated between Stoney St. and Bridge St. It was surveyed into four lots (two on Ston t and two on Bridge St.) on Dec. 2, 1680 (I: 309), for Capt. Brockholls.

Andros and Capt. Dyer were both vindicated on the inquiry of commissioners into the charges made by Lewin against them.—
The town house in Harlem (exact location not known; see May 6, 1660) has been finished, and must be paid for. To provide for this and other claims against the town, a meeting is held. “On a careful audit of the accounts, the public debts were found to amount to $110,500, and the sums due from the inhabitants from duty periods 45–52.” To meet the deficiency of $78,850, a tax of $800 per land and $200 per acre was voted.” —Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1841), 417.

The Duke of York writes to Brockholst that he intends to establish such a form of government at New York as shall give all the advantages and privileges to the inhabitants and proprietors of the king’s other plantations in America enjoy, particularly the choosing of an assembly, and other things agreeable to the laws of England. But he expects the colonists to support the government, and clear off the arrears which have accumulated since the obstruction of the collection of duties began.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 117–18. See also O’Callaghan’s “Historical Introduction” in Jour. Leg. Coun. (1861), ix.

The elders and deacons of the Dutch Church agree to rent a house for the new minister. The deacons are to complete the kitchen, cellar, and “bleaching ground.” —Everts, Rec. ii: 805–9. See also Sept. 1, 1681; and Nov. 15, 1682.

William Penn signs the “Frame of Government” for his colony.

The city of Philadelphia is laid out, Penn’s charter for “Pennsylvania” having been signed March 4, 1681. —Winson, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 477, 481, 491; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 286. To 1685, there was published in London A Letter from William Penn Presumptive and Governor of Pennsylvania In America, to the Committee of the Free Society of Traders of that Province, residing in London Containing A General Description of the said Province. . . As Also an Account of the City of Philadelphia Newly laid out . . . with a Portraiture or Platform thereof . . . (drawn by Thomas Holme, surveyor-general). The plan of Philadelphia shows numbered lots, and spaces left for public buildings, and was intended to interest investors. The letter states (p. 8) that, at the time of writing (Aug. 16, 1683), the town “is advanced within less than a Year to about four Score Houses and Cottages, such as they are, where Merchants and Husbandmen are following their Vocations as fast as they can, while the Countrymen are close at their Farms . . . The payments made from this date until Aug. 21, 1683, for repairs on city works (the particulars of which are not specified), and the amounts of dock money received for expenses, are recorded in documents now preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., in folder lettered “N. Y. City 1680–1700 Miscellaneous,” Box 1, N. Y. M. S.

The Duke of York signs a commission at St. James’s for Col. Thomas Dongan to be governor of New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 328–29. Sir John Werden, the duke’s secretary (p. 317), wrote on June 4, 1683, to Lieut. Brockholst, commander-in-chief at New York, that the duke had appointed Dongan, who would “ruling” be in that city.—Ibid., III: 330. Dongan’s instructions from the duke were dated Jan. 27, 1683 (p. 8).

An order is issued against negroes congregating together and engaging in sports, etc. —P. 416. —MS. Records of Court of Assizes, 1661–63, in N. Y. Hist. Soc.; and M. C. G., I: 92–95. William Penn, with a number of immigrants, arrives opposite New Castle. The next day, he took formal possession of the town and surrounding country.—Winson, op. cit., III: 42–83.

The estates of Adrian N. Selys, brother of the above, are sold. “As the number of inhabitants here, together with the people coming in from the vicinity, is too great for the size of our church building, they are contemplating the building of a new church, or else of increasing the accommodations in this one by a large gallery . . .

This date is found upon "a Map of the Raritan River," the first map or plan, indeed the first engraving printed from a copper plate (of which we have any record), made in America. It was engraved by R. Simon (very possibly in New York City) from a drawing by John Reid. But two copies of the map are known, one in the Map Division of the Library of Congress, and the other in the collection of the New Jersey Historical Society. For further information regarding this map, see description of Pl. 27, I: 254, footnote; and Addenda.

Phillip Wells (or Welles) was appointed surveyor-general this year—Hutchins, Civil List (Albany, 1880). He acted in this capacity, in 1684, in running the New York—Connecticut boundary line. Col. Coun. Min. 61 (Oct. 10). He also acted as such in running the New York-East New Jersey line in 1686—ibid., 49 (June 50), and 50 (Sept. 1). His name first appeared of record as a surveyor Nov. 24, 1680—Col. Land Papers, 20. See also description of Pl. 21, I: 232; and May 13, 1686.

During the period from 1683 to 1690, Father Thomas Harvey, of the Society of Jesus, was in New York, and again in 1696, according to the Roman Catholic Catalogue of that society. Father Henry Harrison, another priest of that society, was here in 1685, and returned to Ireland in 1690. Father Charles Gage was employed here in 1686—7; Doc. Hist. N. Y., III: 71. These were English Jesuits—Ecles. Rec. II: 877.

Capt. William Dyre (see July 12, 1674) is commissioned to be "Controller & Surveyor General of all ye rates duties & impositions due & payable in or out of this Manhattoe & with the virtue of ye 5th act [i.e., the act of parliament, cited 15 Charles II, for encouragement of the Eastland and the Greenland trade] in all his Manila Plantations in America:" Winthrop Papers, XIII: 121, in Mass. Hist. Soc.; Mass. Rec., V: 570.

Instructions are issued at St. James's Palace by the Duke of York to Col. Thomas Dongan for his guidance as governor of New York. These state that, with the instructions, Dongan will receive his commission. He is to "repair thither to New York" with all convenient speed. He is to "call together Frederike Phillips, Samuel Courland and many more of the most eminent inhabitants of New York, not exceeding ten," to be members of the duke's council. He is to publish his commission; administer to the members of the council oaths of allegiance to the king and fealty to the duke "as Lord and Proprietor of the place;" and inform the council what transactions require their consent and approval. He is to be Issued with the names of other public officers throughout the province that there is to be a general assembly of representatives of all the freeholders, who are to consult with the governor and council regarding the enactment of laws. All parts of the province are to send not more than 18 representatives, to meet in New York, on receiving 50 days notice to elect their delegates.

All laws passed by the assembly shall be presented to the governor for his assent or veto. Laws which the governor assents to he is to transmit to the duke, signed by the governor and council and under the seal of the colony (which is also to be used "in passing of grants"), that the duke may ratify and confirm them or reject them. Money is to be raised by passage of laws, for the maintenance of the government, both civil and military, and to pay arrears due officers, soldiers, etc. Public monies are not to be disposed of except by the governor's warrant. He is not to impair or remit the duke's revenue, without the duke's command; nor displace high public officers without good cause, nor execute the duties of any such officers, nor suffer anyone to execute more than one office by a deputy.

He is to protect life, liberty, and property; discountenance and punish drunkenness, swearing, etc.; establish courts of justice, taking care that they shall be "as here answerable to ye laws and Courts of Justice in England as may be," subject to the duke's review. He shall grant estates under the seal of the duke's government, at yearly rent or service reserved to the duke and his heirs. He is authorized to pardon and remit any fines imposed by the courts, and also pardon crimes before or after conviction, excepting high treason and willful murder; and even in the latter cases, if he finds the criminal deserving of mercy, he may reprieve the execution. With the advice of the council, he is to "certain and appoint convenient houses and other necessaries, for Customs-houses and matters relating thereunto," where he may judge convenient.

He is authorized, with the advice of the council, "to settle and establish a Militia of the inhabitants, to be mustered and disciplined" by officers of the government's appointment, and to "erect such forts & castles ... as shall be necessary for defence." He is to endeavour to ascertain and agree upon the boundaries of the duke's "territories towards Connecticut" with the governors and inhabitants of that province, and is to send to the duke "new and exact maps of the other." If he dies in office, the deputy governor or the chief officer under him at the time shall succeed him, until the duke appoints another person to be governor—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 315-34.

Permission is granted to Joseph Bueno and other Jews "to trade and travel traffic within the ocean and New York."—Daly, Settlement of the Jews in N. Am. (1893), 27, footnote, citing Col. Hist. Miss., Eng., 154. But see Sept. 12, 1685.

The duke appoints Lucas Santen his collector and recorder of New York and its dependencies, to levy and collect dues and revenues from customs, excise, quit-rents, etc. He is to be paid a salary of £200 per annum out of the monies so collected, or, in default thereof, by the duke's treasurer and receiver-general. His instructions are dated April 28, 1685—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 352-36.

Anticipating the convening of the first representative assembly (see Oct. 17), the Duke of York addresses a letter to that body announcing the appointment of Col. Thomas Dongan as lieutenant-governor of the province. This probably was given to Dongan, with his instructions, to serve as a letter of introduction to the assembly at New York—Col. Hist. Miss., Eng., 102; Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 1-21.

Orders previously made by the governor and council Apr. 17: that noe Bolting Mills be allowed to bolt or flower [be] packed for Exportation butt at New York under penalty of forfeiture nor noe flower to be brought to this City from any place whatsoever, having been violated, a warrant is issued to the sheriff to see that the orders are observed, and "to Seize all such flower as shall be bolted and packed in any Other Place and Bringt into this City."—M. At a meeting of the governor and council held at Fort James, it is determined to summon an assembly, in accordance with the duke's instructions to Dongan, to be held in New York on Oct. 17, 1685. Writs are issued to the sheriffs of the various settlements, directing the inhabitants to choose representatives to meet in the "General Assembly at this time. Each riding on Long Island was entitled to two representatives; Staten Island, one; Esopus, two; Albany and Rensselaerswyck, two; Schenectady, one; Pemaquid, one; the islands about New York, one; and New York (including the boweries and Harlem), four.—Jour. Lake Sancton is appointed by the deputy mayor and aldermen the collector of "Dock money" payable to the city by vessels trading at this port. "The inhabitants of New York now first participated in the legislative power. The Council, the Court of Assizes, and the Corporation of New York having concurred in soliciting the Duke of York to permit the people to have a share in the government, the Duke, by his commission and setting up a Province, had given them leave to establish the same form of government as the other plantations enjoyed [see April 6, 1675], particularly in the choosing of an assembly."—Holmes, Am. Annals, I: 409, citing N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, XI: 247-52. See Jour. Leg. Coun., I: ix. Regarding use of word "legislature," see Oct. 19, 1766.

The representatives chosen by the inhabitants of the province, under the order issued by the governor and council on Sept. 13, now meet in general assembly at Fort James in the city of New York.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 238. The assembly remained in session until Nov. 3, or about three weeks. The journal of its deliberations has been lost, but the 15 acts which it passed have been preserved, and constitute the beginning of the statute law of New York Province and State.—Osgood, The Am. Colonies (1904), I: 166-68. Transcripts of the laws passed at this session, and at the second session, were, in 1853, in the office of the secretary of state, in a book entitled The Duke of York's Charter of Liberties and Privileges to the Inhabitants of New York, anno, 1685. With Acts of the Assembly of that Year, and the Law 1684—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 355, footnote. When The Colonial Laws of N. Y. were published, in 1894, this book was in the state library.—See Vol. I of that work, p. 111.

"The Charter of Liberties and privileges granted by his Royall Highness to the Inhabitants of New York and its Dependecies" is passed by the colonial legislature. It was the first statute law of the province of New York, enacted by a legislature composed of the governor, council, and representatives elected by the people. It provides, among other matters, that the supreme legislative author-

The petition was presented at the court of admiralty in New York City on Oct. 21, 1684, and several clauses of the foregoing act were explicated. The court of Another Act passed at this session was one "to prevent wilful Perjury," and also one "for the Defraying of the publick & necessary Charge of each respective City, town and County throughout this Province & for maintaining the poor, & other clerk vagabonds." The latter law provided for the annual election of assessors and a treasurer in each city, town, and county, to make assessments and receive moneys to pay the public charges.

Another law permitted the killing of swine "found att liberty, in the streets and meadows, or upon any other may property," including those "of the publick use." It also provided that "the first named law was found in practice to be so strict and damaging that, on Nov. 19, 1868, it was repealed, and another passed giving justices of the peace the power to regulate the nuisance according to local ordinance."—Ibid., I: 177.

2. The legislature passes "A Bill for a free and Voluntary P'nt To The Gover'n." This is a gift to Dongan, raised by a tax of one penny per pound on the value of all the real and personal property of every freeholder and inhabitant in the province. Commissioners are appointed in each county to collect the tax.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 174-75. The city owed, on Aug. 15, 1684, an assessment of £200 on the estates of the inhabitants to meet this demand of the government.—M. C. C., I: 154. On Oct. 27, 1684, the time was extended within which payments were to be made as the law required, and it was ordered that those in arrear after April 21, 1685, were to be fined £40 damage on every £100 due. This supplementary legislative act was entitled "A Bill for the More speedy and better Col-lecting the Gover'n free and Voluntary present."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 165.

3. On account of the increase in public houses, the legislature passed a law "to prevent frauds in conveyance of lands." This law establishes a system of registering and recording conveyances of lands. No grants, deeds, mortgages, or other conveyances of lands or tenements within the province are to be valid in law unless entered and recorded in the register of the county in which the lands are situated. Before recording, these conveyances are to be properly acknowledged before a justice of the peace by the persons who sealed and delivered them, or they are to be witnessed by sufficient witnesses before a justice.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 147-48.

4. The various enumerated legislative acts passed since Oct. 30 are "openly read & published before ye City hall in ye presence of ye deputy Mayor & Aldermen."—M. C. C., I: 102.

5. Aldermen, and commonalty petition Gov. Dongan for a new charter. The "several antient Customs priludges & Immunitys we were confirmed & granted to them by Coll Rich'd Nicholls," in 1665, and since enjoyed, are recouted in 12 items. These are, briefly, as follows: 1.—All the inhabitants of Manhattan Island are under the government of the city of New York. 2.—The city, formerly governed by burgomasters and schepens, is now ruled by one mayor, six aldermen, and one sheriff. 3.—The magistrates have power to appoint all inferior officers (as constables, overseers, under-sheriffs, clerks, and marshals) throughout the whole island; they make laws and ordinances; they hold once in 14 days or oftener a court of oyer and terminer in the city hall, to hear and determine all cases, with jury, or, in equity cases, the mayor or chief magistrate has power to determine without appeal all matters that come before him involving less than 40 shillings. 4.—The sheriff executes all writs, summonses, and attachments on Manhattan Island, and serves them. 5.—The magistrates have their own clerk and keep their own records. 6.—The city is "a yeap staple porse of ye whole Province" where "all Merchandize is "shipped and unloaded." 7.—No one is deemed a freeman who has not been so admitted by the magistrates; and no one, before such admission, may be held liable for any damage on every £100 due. And every merchant or shop keeper has to pay "for ye publick use of ye City" (into the city treasury) £3:12, and every craftsman £14, on "being made free." 8.—No freeman may be arrested, or have his goods attached, unless it appears that he is degrading or conveying away his estate to defraud creditors. 9.—No one is permitted "to trade wp hudsons River," unless he is a freeman and has been an actual inhabitant of the city for three years, and a freeman loses his freedom previous to being admitted to practice, and does not keep fire and Candle & pay scott & lott." 10.—All inhabitants "up hudsons Rive" are forbidden to trade overseas. 11.—No flour may be bolted or packed, or biscuit made, for exportation but in the city of New York. "being flor ye Encouragement of trade & keeping yp ye reputation of the City. The new we are now in great request in ye West Indies[.] and ye only support and maintai- nance of ye Inhabitants of this City and if not confirmed to them will ruine & depopulate ye same." 12.—The City has a common seal. An impression of the seal here referred to is found attached to a deed of 1692 from the Corporation to Anna Maria van Horne, now in the possession of the Title Guarantee & Trust Co. There is another in the Paulding collection (No. 5), in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and reproduced on Pls. XXVI and XXIX in Wilde's Civic Antiquity of N. Y., 144, 63, 72.

All these ancient privileges the mayor and aldermen (in behalf of ye citizens) submit to Dongan, and ask that they be confirmed by charter "from his Royal Highness;" and they seek the following additional new ones: 1.—That the city may be divided into six wards. 2.—That the freemen of each ward may annually elect their own aldermen, common councilmen, constables, overseers of the poor, scavengers, etc. This supplementary legislative act was entitled "A Bill for the More speedy and better Col-lecting the Gover'n free and Voluntary present."—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 165.

6. On account of the increase in public housekeeping, the legislature passes "An Act to prevent frauds in conveyance of lands." This law establishes a system of registering and recording conveyances of lands. No grants, deeds, mortgages, or other conveyances of lands or tenements within the province are to be valid in law unless entered and recorded in the register of the county in which the lands are situated. Before recording, these conveyances are to be properly acknowledged before a justice of the peace by the persons who sealed and delivered them, or they are to be witnessed by sufficient witnesses before a justice.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 147-48.

7. The various enumerated legislative acts passed since Oct. 30 are "openly read & published before ye City hall in ye presence of ye deputy Mayor & Aldermen."—M. C. C., I: 102.

9. The magistrates have power to appoint all inferior officers (as constables, overseers, under-sheriffs, clerks, and marshals) throughout the whole island; they make laws and ordinances; they hold once in 14 days or oftener a court of oyer and terminer in the city hall, to hear and determine all cases, with jury, or, in equity cases, the mayor or chief magistrate has power to determine without appeal all matters that come before him involving less than 40 shillings. These privileges, and all others that Dongan or the duke thinks necessary for the welfare of the city, the petitioners ask to have "Confirmed to them in as full & ample manner & forms as his maj[s] hath been graciously pleased to grant to other Corporations within his Realme of England."—M. C. C., I: 102-3; N. Y. Col. Laws, I: 147-48.

On Oct. 19, the governor and council offered certain objections, asked explanation of some particulars, and made suggestions for changes.—M. C. C., I: 105. This led to the asked-for explanations by the city.—Ibid., I: 106. On Nov. 27, after the appointment of a new mayor and aldermen, the petition was resubmitted to Gov. Dongan, with modifications, asking that "ye forms and method therein prescribed may be put in practice until such Time as his Royal Highness pleasure shall be further knowne therein & ye yeor hono[r] will be further pleased to Confirm to this City all ye Vacant Lands within this Island to Low water mark ye benefit of Granting Licensc to all ye keep publick houses ye benefitt of ye dockes Wharfe & bridge market & Market house with ye ferry now between ye yeap City & Long Island or ye other hereafter shall be appointed between ye yeap City and Corporation or any other place or places wherein ye may help To Enable them to ye same or other expense and maintain their publick works."—Ibid., I: 110. The original petition is now in metal file labelled "Filled Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room. For Dongan's answer, see Dec. 6.

A proclamation directs masters of vessels to the collector of the port of New York, for the interpretation of the act of the legislature, and requiring the town of Manhattan to render a list of inhabitants from the city for one year, and does not "keep fire and candle & pay scott & lott."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 153. The act referred to is the Customs Act of Oct. 30.

Cornelis Steenkweck is appointed mayor.—Cal. Hist. MSS., 23 Eng. 153. He was installed in office the next day, with the new aldermen and council, and immediately went to his old trade, or occupation; or other kind of employment, Oct. 30. —M. C. C., I: 106-7. The English Period

1684. The constable and commissioners of Harlem, with Dyckman as president, hold their first court. The old officers are also present. The court is resolved to take up and examine the town accounts, both debts and credits, and to transfer them to a new book, "as the old book C is written full." Adolph Meyer and Resolved Waldron were chosen inspectors of chimneys and fire- wardens; and Baroet Waldron and Isaac Delamar, surveyors of the common fences. These fences were ordered to be repaired and made of four split rails, good and suitable. —Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1881), 437.

14. The first common council in New York City is sworn into office. —M.C.C., I: 120. This name was at first applied to the six assistant aldermen provided for in the Dungen Charter (see April 27, 1686). "Att a Meeting of Mayt Aldermens and Common Council" was the language employed to describe their meeting with the other aldermen in the following week (Feb. 28, q.v.).—Ibid., I: 121. Very soon, however, the whole body came to be called "A Common Council."—Ibid., I: 131. See also Oct. 17, 1675.

15. The common council appoints a committee "to view ye public works of this City & make Reporte what Repairs are Necessary & what may be ye Charge thereof."—M.C.C., I: 120. They made an itemized report on Feb. 23 (q.v.), showing the estimate to be £150 for repairs to the "City Hall and Yards," to "The Wharfe," and to "The Market House."—Ibid., I: 126-27.

23. A committee of the common council is appointed to examine the orders and regulations relating to the ferry to Long Island, and to draw up a suitable order for its future management, and the "Preventing Prizes," or fees paid to ferriage keepers, by the advice and consent of the mayor, at an annual rental to be paid quarterly. —M.C.C., I: 123. On March 1, they reported that no former regulations for the ferry could be found. —Ibid., I: 127.

24. A committee report is recorded showing an estimate of need for needed repairs to public works. The "City Hall and Yardes require an Outlay of £210 for "One New Gutter, 50 good Pine Boards for Doores & Windows;" 46 for "Glazing the Windows & Masons worke;" 18 shillings for "15 Pots 11 foot Long Each;" 9 shillings for "36 Rayles 10 foot Long Each;" and 18 shillings for "300 Payles 63 foot Long Each." The wharf requires an outlay of £210 to be paid by the city, for its repairs. —Ibid., I: 125-26.

25. A committee of the common council appointed to make a list of all "the Barkes, Sloopes, Brigantines And Open Boates belonging to this Porte," makes a report showing the names of the owners of these vessels. There are three "Barques," three "Brigantines," 27 "Sloopes," and 45 "Open Boats."—M.C.C., I: 127-29. The original list is with "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," in city clerk's record-room.

27. For "Vessels navigating the Hudson River in 1684, clearing from New York to the places named," see Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 787.

8. Revenue from "Bridge-money" (i.e., customs duties on certain articles) is transferred from province to city. The commodities mentioned are beef, pork, flour, bread, oil, horses, cattle, molasses, and peas. The rates are to be submitted to the governour and council for approval, as is also the list of goods proposed to be passed without duty.—M.C.C., I: 132. At the next meeting, an order regarding the "Dock, Mold and Bridge" was read and a committee appointed "to examine up and examine the town accounts." —Ibid., I: 135. On March 22, these regulations were reported in detail. Certain specified goods and merchandise, when imported into New York "fri beyond the Seas, That is to Say from any place beyond the East End of Long Island and to the Southward," were to be taxed at the rate of £2 per ton, and the same when exported. —See March 22. On May 19, certain articles not from Europe were ordered admitted free—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 128. Cf. Oct. 17, 1685.

15. Among the laws and orders enacted on this day by the common council is an ordinance regarding "Carmen." There are to be 20 appointed (and no more) by "the Mayor" and Court of Aldermen. Their duties shall be to "fill up Amend And Repair the Breaches in the Streets And Highways in And About this City when Required by the Mayft, Gratifs;" and, every week on Saturday afternoon, they are required to "Carry And Cart the durt out of all the Streets And Lanes, within this City And Convey the Same, to Some Convenient place where the Same, Shall be Deposited." The dirt is to be "set down" for loading or Putting in their Carts by the Owner's or Tenants of the house before wth the Same Lyth." The ordinance also provides a system of charges for carting various goods, such as lime, bricks, "great Cables," and cordwood.—M.C.C., I: 135-36. On April 18, 1691 (q.v.), an increase in the number of carmen to 34 is noted. Another ordinance requires that the constable of each ward shall make inquiry from time to time as to all strangers "that Shall Come Reside or Inhabit" within his ward, and give their names to the mayor, or in his absence to the eldest alderman. If this is not done, "And Any Charge Doe fall on this City thereby," the constable shall pay a fine of 20 shillings for his neglect. —Ibid., I: 135. On Aug. 15, 1684, it was ordered that "all Strang's that Reside within this City for the Space of One Month Shall pay all Taxes Assess'd and doe All other Such things As the Inhabitants from tyme to tyme Shall be Oblig'd to Pay and Performe."—Ibid., I: 134. On April 23, 1691 (q.v.), they were given 21 days, after which the mayor was to be informed of their presence; and the masters of vessels bringing them to the city were required to give notice within 24 hours after their arrival. —Ibid., I: 135.

20. A further ordinance "For the Due Observance of the Lords Day" is in this elaboration by order of a Com. Feb. 29, 1684, and, according to Hinman (see The Blue Laws, 239), may be classed among the strictest codes of law intended to preserve order and morality in the English colonies. It is as follows:

Another ordinance is passed to prevent fires. Inspectors are to be appointed to examine chimneys and hearth; the inhabitants are not to keep combustible matter in or near their homes and books, ladders, and buckets are to be kept at convenient places within the city.—Ibid., I: 139. See also Ibid., I: 178, 211, 255, 370, 392; II: 22, 183, 233; IV: 82–153; VI: 116, VII: 320–311; Chron., Jan. 23, 1648, July 3, 1672, Feb. 17, 1673; and chapters on "Fire and Proportion" to Peterson & Edwards, N.: That an 18th cent. It is further ordered "That there be Sworne Surveyor's Apoynted for this City by whose Advise And Directions, the ground within this City shall be Built and that none doe Build before the froth of their ground be Reck'd & Layd out by them, and as they shall Direct That A Regular Orford, and Uniformity may be kept and Observed in the Streets And Buildings And ye none Pauze before their houses, but in such manner, As Apoynted by the Sayd Surveyor's, And that for Laying out Each house Lott, And gisting Christopher Sayd Surveyor and Renter from the Owner thereof the Summ of Six Shilling."—Ibid., I: 137. The regulation is repeated by ordinance of May 4, 1691 (ibid., I: 226) and again, with a revision, on Nov. 18, 1713.—Ibid., IV: 81–82. See A...

Nor Person Shall Forestall Any Provisions or Victualls Coming to the City, as to buy in Any Private or Other Place then the Markett under Pain of forfeitures of the Same, whether it be ground or not, or the "buyers", and shopkeeper, who is "made free," shall pay £321, and a handicraftsman, £4. (See Jan. 20, 1676.) A freeman absent from the city for a year, who does not "keep fire and Candle, And Pay Scott And Lott," shall lose his freedom.—Ibid., I: 137.

Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday are appointed market days "for the Exposing to Sale at the Markett house all Butchers meat, and flesh whatsoever. Before and after the ringing of the bell, with which the markets shall be opened and closed, "noe butchers meate, or victualls is to be Exposed to Sale in the Sayd Markett, undis the Penalty of forfeiture ... (See Jan. 20, 1676.) A freeman absent from the city for a year, who does not "keep fire and Candle, And Pay Scott And Lott," shall lose his freedom.—Ibid., I: 137.

By another order, bakers and others who sell flour shall pack it in cakes having the maker's brand upon them; also the former order against bringing flour into the city from any other place shall be enforced.—Ibid., I: 131–135.

An "Address and Petition" is drawn up by the mayor and aldermen, to be presented to Gov. Dongan, "Praying Confirmation of the former Orders, Prohibiting Bottling Mills, or flour or Bread to be made in any Other Parts of the Province or Importing into this City." The following facts are present:

That for many years Past, Even from the first Settlement, of the Government! Noe flour or Bisket was, Boulted made or Packed for Sale or Transportation, but in this City till about the years 1679 & 1680. The cause of complaint at that time, and the prohibitions then enacted, are recited, and request is made that these prohibitions be removed for the orders of his predecessors.—M. C. C., I: 141–142. On March 18, Dongan asked for "Reasons att Large why there Should be Any Prohibition for bolting" outside the city.

Ibid., I: 142–43. These reasons were drawn up by a committee appointed on April 6, and are, in part, as follows: "This City being the Matropoly of the Province hath from tymc to tymc, been the Mayne Sujorte thereof the flowerising or Decay of with Doth Influence all its Parts, by its Trade in trade and Traffique myanytained by its Number of Inhabitants hath haght Credit and Reputation Abroade by whose means alone all Foreign's Commerce and shipping, Is Drawn bether. That the Manufacture of flower and Bread . . . hath been and is the Chief Sujorte of the trade, and Traffique to and from this City and Maintenance of its Inhabilgjumpacts of all Degrees, and if used and Practised in Other Parts of the Province most of necessity Lessen Our Trade and Consequently the numb of the Inhabitants Employed therein. All Other Parts of the Province have Some Particular Advantage and way of Luicng As Long Island, their Husbandry and Whaling Erops being the Factory of the Province by Tillage Allround, and husbandry this City noe Other Advantage Or Way of Luicng but by Traffique and Dependance are on Another Chiefly upheld by the Manufacture of flower and Bread," etc.—Ibid., I: 148–50; and see II: 45–54. On May 32, the governor signed a proclamation, which was published on May 31, reaffirming to New York the sole boltign privilege "unto the Will and Pleasure of his Royall Highness James Duke of York And Albany Lord Proprietor of this Province be Knowne."—Ibid., I: 152–55. See also, Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 109, 110; and Jan. 7, 1680.

The ByELaws of the White Lion tavern, at the north-west corner of William and Wall Ste (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981), petition against a seizure of flour on March 17.—From the original petition, kept with papers filed in the comptroller's office; M. C. C., I: 141.

Jan. appears by a presentment of this date to Dongan, that the inhabitants of New York have complained of daily abuses in the sale of firewood, on account of the stigis of being of different lengths and sizes. Moreover, "Often tymes Severall noches put on A Stick whereby they are Defrauded of their due (it being Only att the Pleasure of the thunar, or persons, w're bought), and others One hundred Sticks)." They ask that it be sold by the cord, which shall be 8 ft. in length, 4 ft. wide, and 4 ft. high.—M. C. C., I: 145–46. The same difficulty appeared at an earlier date, 1677 (ibid., I: 41), when an order was issued to sell by the cord. So, now, a proclamation is issued that "no firewood Shall be Exposed for Sale in the city of New York but such as shall be cut after the manner of cordwood, and sold by the cord."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 109. On Oct. 6, the common council ordered "that the Execution of the Ord's about fire wood, be suspended until Provision be made by Act of Assembly."—M. C. C., I: 156. See Oct. 27.

The common council approves of the first set of orders for regulating the affairs of the great dock (here defined as "the Porte Mould [mole] Dock and Bridge of the City"), and requires that they be submitted to the governor for his approval. They are: Vessels not belonging to the port shall pay certain prescribed taxes when anchoring, etc.

Vessels belonging to the port shall pay yearly, according to tonnage, "for Lyeing within the Dock or Mould;" but vessels not belonging to the port, which come within the dock, shall pay "for Every Voyage," and may not lie there longer than one month.

No vessel shall lie "in the mouth of the dock, within the mould, or near the bridge in Inconvenient places," or longer than a convenient time for loading and unloading, except in winter or under stress of weather; and if by accident any vessel run aground in the mouth of the dock, it is to remove as soon as afloat.

Vessels within the mole or dock may make or keep fire on board only from daybreak to "the Ringing of the City Bell at night." No vessel may cast "Any Anchor, Grapnall or Kelleck" within or near the mole or dock, where it may endanger other vessels. None may cast dirt, etc. "to fill up or Annoy the mould or Dock or the neighbourhood."

A vessel may not lie at the outside of the dock or mole except in fair weather, and then not longer than one tide, except by leave of the haven-master.

"Timber, Pipe Staues [staves], wood or Other Lumbers" may not be landed upon the mole or wharf, and carts are not permitted "to Ryde there."

The "baun Master" shall direct the shipmasters to have fit and convenient berths, where they may lie or fasten.

Various fines are imposed for violation of these orders. It is the haven-master's duty to see that the orders are obeyed. He shall pay half the fines collected to the treasurer, and keep the other half. The fees to be collected by the haven-master may be grouped.

under three heads, anchorage, dockage, and bridgemonery. The Mar. 22 importance perhaps of it on such exports as well as imports are not liable to custom duties. Several articles are specified, including sugar, molasses, and tobacco, and on the other hand lumber, straw, heads, and ballast are excepted. Imported merchandise from Long Island is not taxable, it being defined to be "free being in the true sense from any place beyond the East End of Long Island and to the Southward of Sandy Punty."

For the purpose of dockage the ordinance makes a distinction between vessels "belonging to this Fort" and those which do not. For the former there is an annual fee varying according to tonnage from 6d. to 10d. For all vessels a proportionate increase of fees is payable, if they "Lye Above one Month," a liberal privilege that was subsequently changed, Sept. 6, 1699 (M. C. C., II: 84), to a penalty of six shillings for every tide beyond a "Convenient time" for loading and unloading. Fees for anchorage appear to have been fixed at an earlier period and are renewed at this time, namely, one shilling for a vessel of ten tons, or less, and an additional shilling for "Every Tenn Tuns more." Vessels "not belonging to this Fort" are the only ones mentioned in this category, probably because it was expected they would always take advantage of the liberal rates of dockage.—M. C. C., I: 145-46. See June 5, 1675; March 8, 1684; Aug. 28, 1694.

When the city's system of docks and wharves had developed, in later years, these regulations were modified accordingly.—See Sept. 5, 1699; Nov. 18, 1711; March 5, 1725, for other references to the great docks, and other docks and wharves, consult Index. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987-91; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, Addenda, Vol. V.

Fifteen cartmen "strike," refusing to "Obey Observer and follow the rules and Orbit of the City," apparently to be Observed and Kept. They are "Discharged being Any Longe Cartmen" by the common council, which body also issued a proclamation giving "free Lyberty and Lyncence" to all except the strikers and slaves to become cartmen.—M. C. C., I: 146-47. See reproduction in N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipalities, plate VI.

The common council orders that "The Loft Ouer the Slaughter house belonging to Garrin Junson Rossey is Apoynted to be the generall Store for all Powder and he to Take Care and Look After the Same."—M. C. C., I: 150; but see May 31

—John van Gelder is approved by the court of mayor and aldermen as "Jnter to flunyers." For all who shall employ him he is to "Compost himself Civily."—M. C. M. (M.S.), April 8, 1684.

"Some complaints having been made of the abuses in bread, & that Cornel is put into it," the executive council orders "that the bread be inspected, & that the beer be looked after, & the Market place made by the Broadway & King's Highway & brought into the Market." The secretary shall inform Deputy Mayor N. Bayard.—Ex. Coun. Min. (M.S.), V: 80 (Albany). See May 24.

Cornelis Jansens engages Adrianus Weterbourne to build a house for him on his land on Montague's Plat, for which he agrees to pay "See gilders in fat cattle, wheat and rye." In this house, standing near the present junction of 9th St. and Harlami Lane, Jansen established a tavern, later famous as the "Half Way House," which, after his death in 1689, was kept by his wife.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 438-39. See Oct. 15, 1694.

The governor desires (see April 28) "that the Market may be Removed fr[o] the Place where it is now kept" (that is, near the bridge and weigh-house,—see March 9, 1680) "to the Vacant ground before the Fort," and the common council so orders. That is, it is ordered "that hence forward, the Market for Butchers meat be held in the Same Place Accordingly," the butchers bearing the expense of Erecting their nales [stalls in the original] and Other Conveniences. —M. C. C., I: 151. This market became known as the "Broadway Shambles or Meat Market."—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 958. See also April 11, 1691. The old building continued in use, however, principally as a store-house (ibid., V: 302; 2053; Do Ve, Market Book, 70-77). See also Jan. 29, 1677.

The common council orders "that the New-Streete beginning from Edward Taylers Cornour house to the Cornour of Domini Selynes Lott and fr[o] thence to the Warehouse of the Widdow Verplank, the Pavement Sides thereto from the Lottes therewith Each before his Owne Lotte before the 25 July next.

"And the Smiths Streete beginning at the Cornour of Thomas Lewis up to the house of Gerrit Hendricks In Lyke manner. And the beuer gracht beginning from the Cornour house of Simon Romyne to the house of Barrent Court bee Paved On Each Syde Eight foot in Breadth from the houses by the Person Owning the Lotts therin Each Person before his own Lott wth Pauements made by the Surveyor Shall be Approved of or Apoynted."—M. C. C., I: 151. The "New-Streete" here mentioned is the present New St.—See May 5, 1679; Van Rensselaer, Hist. of N. York, III: 356. The tax list of 1677 shows the names of owners of lots on "The Smiths Streete" (the present William St.).—M. C. C., I: 57, "The beuer gracht" in Beaver St.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 997.

The common council resolves that "in Some Convenient Place On the Common A Powder house be Built of Stone."—M. C. C., I: 152. This was not acted upon at this time.—Ibid., I: 400.

Anthony Brockhulls, Lucas Santen, and others are appointed (probably by the governour and council, since the record does not appear in the Minutes of the Common council) to examine the fortifications of the city, and report what repairs are immediately necessary.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 129. See ibid. for their report.

A paid night watch is established, the military officers and troops being excused therefrom. The common council orders that the constables in the five wards on the south side of the "Fresh Water" watch by turns, one each night, and hire eight assistants who shall each be paid 12d. per night out of the city treasury.—M. C. C., I: 153.

Peter Stoutenburgh is appointed overseer of the work to be done on wharf and Warehouse. The work was evidently a large one, as each house was to provide a man to help unload and secure the timber and stockade. On failure to do so, a fine was to be levied.—M. C. C., I: 155.

Virginia becomes a royal province, with Lord Howard作为 governour.—Cal. of State Papers. Am. & W. Indies 1661-1685, 670; Bancroft, Hist. of U. S., I: 471.

From this date until Aug. 5, representatives of Massachusetts, New York, Maryland, and Virginia, and sachems of the Five Nations, meet at Albany, and settle on the terms of a lasting peace.—Winser, op. cit., V: 611; Brodhead, op. cit., II: 396-401.

The "green before the fort" is designated in an order for the place of parade for the several foot companies in New York, at seven o'clock in the morning on Sept. 20.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 151.

The "green" is the "usual place of rendezvous for the companies assemblage for exercise."—Ibid., I: 176. In July 1736, this same space was designated "The Parade."—See Pls. 16, 27, 27-A, Vol. I. There is therefore little probability, and no record, that the "green before the fort" was a bowling green prior to 1733, when leased for that purpose,—See "Bowling Green," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 968, where one of the most distinctive features connected with its subsequent history are indicated. The earliest use of this ground

For the first time, the aldermen, councilmen, assessors, and constables are elected by the freemen of the several wards. A "Return of the Seuerall Persons Chosenn" appears in the Minutes.
The common council establishes the following fines in case the person chosen to serve in an official capacity refuses to serve:
A constable, £5; an assessor, £3; a Common Council Man, £170; an alderman, £10; the mayor, £20.—M. C. C., I: 156-57.
Such action breathes of the time when there was no compensation to attract, and when in a large measure "the office sought the man."
14 Gabriel Mivinelle is appointed mayor.—M. C. C., I: 159. This appointment was made by the governor from a list of seven names presented by the mayor and aldermen.—Ibid., I: 158. In the petition for a charter, Nov. 9, 1683 (q.v.), one request called for the governor to take his choice of a mayor from the aldermen elect.
Curiously enough, only two of the seven nominees referred to above were aldermen elect. Mivinelle himself was an assistant from the West Ward.—Ibid., I: 159. This plan of presenting nominees was a survival of the Dutch practice of choosing magistrates (see Oct.
9, 1669); it was destined to continue only one year longer, the charter placing up such limit on the governor's choice.—Ibid., I:
238. For a brief sketch of the life of Gabriel Mivinelle, see

The first provincial act "for the Settlement of the Militia" is above referred to. It provides for the appointment by the governour of a major "in such County (Capability thereof)" as head of the militia there, and for the appointment and commissioning, also by the governour, of all officers of militia within the province. They are to be "Chosen out of the Freeholders inhabitants in the Respective Townes and Counties where their Companies are." Among the other provisions is one requiring "That one Master of Vessells her exempt from Training but such as are above thirty Tuns." All persons, though freed from training by law, are nevertheless "obliged to Keep Convenient arms and amunition in Their houses as the Law directs To others." All fines collected by the commision officers are to be used "in the buying of Drumes and Colours Italherbs [sic for balderhairs] Trumpets," etc. "Match Locks being not thought necessary in this Country that none bee obliged to provide them." These and a few other brief regulations comprise this leading statute; it being expressly provided that, in other matters relating to military affairs, all persons are "to be

The legislature passes the following acts:

"A Bill For an Annualy salary to the Judges of this Province."
Sarah Burgler, in behalf of her daughter, Elizabeth Shackerley, the child of John Shackerley, deceased, states in a petition to Gov.
Dongan: "That whereas your Honour was pleased to Or'd that

This petition is referred to the mayor and aldermen "who are desired speedily to doe Justice to the said petitioner . . .
Land Papers, II: 65 (sec. of state's office, Albany). A similar petition of Sarah Burgler was recorded about ten years later (see April 22, 1693), but whether it related to the same land does not appear.
The legislature passes the following acts:
29 "A Bill Concerning former Mortgages. This act was necessary because the customs of the Dutch were different from those of the English. The act made all old mortgages effective under the English rule.
An Explanation of the Continued Bill for defraying the

I have written to Mr. Browne concerning in America; with hopes in the advantage which these parts, will augment ye RH High revenue by putting the letters into the post office; it is much desired by all & if it be allowed; I hope ye RH High will let me have the management of it. —From an original autograph letter signed by Governor Dun- 19 gan, preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library, in vol. lettered: New- York-MSS. Letters & Documents. 1684-1773. —See also Aug. 27, 168s. The governor and his council took action to establish the post-office on March 2, 1685 (q.v.), but further proceedings to effect the desired result had to be again enacted on April 4, 1692 (q.v.).

John Sprague is commissioned to be "master of the rolls of the province of New York." —Col. Hist. Mss., Eng., 159. This office is rarely mentioned in colonial annals. In England the master of the rolls is "one of the judges of the chancery division of the High Court of Justice." He is "the keeper of the rolls of all patents and grants that pass the great seal, and of all records of the Court of Chancery. He ranks next after the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, and above the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas." —Century Dict. The office, therefore, appears to be in addition to that of secretary of the province, to which Sprague was appointed by royal commission on Jan. 27, 1683.—Col. Coun., Min., 61.

In this year, an order was issued that no wampum, wampum pipes, Indian jewels, or money should be carried out of the government by trade or traffic, etc.—Col. Hist. Mss., Eng., 159.

There was complaint at this time by the residents west "of the' broadway to the Southward of the alley now called beaver land," according to a deposition made by Jacobus Godet in New York under date of July 12, 1723. The deponent related that when he was an apprentice, "in the years 1684 and 1685... to Oliphart Sueter," he heard him "speak about the Soveraigncy and Regulating of that bayoubdarde, it being Laid out a long the Sd Street or highway with a deep Hollow Core inward, and patents was Granted formerly to the owners and possessers there of in length from the Sd Street westward according to the measures there of." The deponent further said that the condition of the locality was called to the attention of Gov. Andros, who "ordered the bayoubdarde aforesd to ad and advance so much more Ground in the Street as he thought fit to make the fruts more even from Balbus Bayars unto the South Corner of Sd Beaver Land being part of the old berrieyng place and after this manner to build that houses according to his adition and those that did not build they took that ground in their possession and took in there Clabboard fences before there doors. Y., 1853), III: 134-35; citing the letter in possession of Walter Van de Water.

About 1685, Adrian Dirckse petitioned the common council as follows regarding "his ground in ye place, Called Maegde patie:"—The humble Petition of Adrian Dirckson Sheweth most humbly, That this petitioners predecessor of his present wife Elizabeth by name Peter longs, was ordered by ye Gournmer to remove his Van & have his ground in ye place, Called Maegde patie, by order of ye dutch government in time of warr, for w^a^ was granted to them an other house & ground, belonging to Wp patisson, then Counted Confiscated [sic]. But lately this petition was much troubled by one George Lockart attorney of Said Wp patisson, and was forced, to prevent further Contest to allow ye Sd Lockard a Competent sum of money, with the Charges to fifteen pounds Cortant by w^e^ ye Sd house & ground is paid again & nothing allowed for that which is Lost in ye maegde patie, there-fore this petitiv Craves ye^o^ worshipjs please to Consider ye^s^ premises, and to give that allowance of grant again, or mony as ye^s^ worship^s^ Shalt think fitt & he shal always pay &c.—"From the original in city clerk's records. Cf. L.J., New Am. and Its People, 206-5.

An inventory of the wardrobe and other personal effects of Dr. Jacob de Lange and his wife, reveals the characteristic dress of a gentleman and lady of fashion during this period. His wardrobe included a gros-grained cloak, lined with silk; a broad cloak made of a coloured suit, with silver buttons; a coloured waistcoat, with silver buttons; & his wife's contained numerous "petticoats" variously described, including one "with pointed lace," and one "black pottofco petticoat, with black silk lining;" also a "black tartanet samare, with a tuckety;" Three flowered calico samares; "Three black love-hoods," and a white one and a yellow one; "Four Yellow love dreslare;" "Two pair sleeves with great lace;" "Four coronet caps, with lace, one without lace;" "One black silk rain cloth;" "One black plash mask;" "One embroidered purse with a silver bugle and chain to the girdle, a silver Dr. De Lange's name." From the original in the British Museum, and in the purchase of one of the many with silver and with ivory; while his wife possessed, in a "silver thread wrought small trunks," various articles of jewelry, including "One gold boalt, wherein are thirteen diamonds to one white coral chain" (valued at £16; "One pair gold sticks or pendants, in each ten diamonds" (£25), etc.—Man. Coun. (Eng.), 1685, 541-42; see also ibid., (1858), 493; Abstracts of Wills (1892), 280, 281.

In this year, William Bradford established, at Philadelphia, the first printing-press in the Middle Colonies.—Winsor, op. cit., III:493. See below.

The common council resolves that Dongan be "Treated w^b^ to Feb. to Comme to this city, and that the Councill discuss his proceedings and proceedings in the Island to Low Water mate the Ferry and all the Several Patents to the Inhabitants, The City hall & Land thereto belonging Market house & Market Place Dock bridge and Streets w^b^ all Royaltyes and Priviledges thereunto Belonging." A committee is appointed "to manage the Treaty."—M. C. G., I: 160. The desired privileges were eventually granted in the Dongan Charter, April 27, 1686 (q.v.). See, further, Feb. 28, infra.

Derrick Jansen, the ferry-man, buys the "plantation" of William Morris of Flatbush for his house, barns, and boats.—See original bond for unpaid balance on the contract, in N. Y. Pub. Library (MSS., Div. 4).

"King Charles the 2d of Ever blessed Memory departed this life in his Palace at Whitehall After whose decease, at which many of the Lords the Privy Council were present their Lip^s together with the rer of the Privy Councils in town assembled in the Council Chamber in Order to prepare the form of a Proclamation for Proclaiming his Present Ma^s^ K: James the Second." Orders were given to dispatch letters to the governours and proprietors of the several plantations to issue an enclosed proclamation of the accession of James II, and to publish James's proclamation that former officers remain in office until further notice.—Jour. of Cours. for Plantations, 1670-1686 (MS.), III: 15-26. Cf. N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 359; Osgood, The Am. Colonies, II: 167; Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., III: 421-22; Winsor, New. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 406. The reign of King James II ended Dec. 11, 1689 (q.v.).

The Duke of York being the last king's only brother and heir, "his rights as a subject proprietor were merged in his sovereignty; and New York, with her dependencies, having devolved to the crown of England, became a royal government, under the supervision of the Plantation Committee. A few days after the accession of James [see Feb. 17], the records belonging to the secretary of the office of the plantation office Sir John Werden delivered all that were thought 'matter' to Secretary Mathwayt. For a discussion as to how this affected the legal status of the government of the province of New York, respecting the charter, see March 3 (infra), and Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 422. The governor and council ordain "that for the better correspondence between the colonies of America, a post-office be established [see Aug. 27 and Dec. 9, 1684] and that the rates for riding post be per mile threepence; for every letter, not above one hundred miles, threepence; if more, proportionately."—Col. Coun., Ill., 415, and authorities there cited; Smith, Hist. of the P. O. in Britain (No. Am. (Cambridge, 1920), 7. A permanent postal system was not established until April 4, 1692 (q.v.).

To prevent the running away of servants and debtors, the governor and council order that "a scale be made where each Highnesses Cypher in every County at the Charges of the County to be kept by the Chief magistrates of every Town, & [of] all that are lodged w'out the said scale & certificate from [a] Magistrate, notice is to be given of them by the next Magistrate; & the first magistrate that receives the scale from any neighboring Colony, takes that scale & gives another of that Govern[or] in w'h he lives."—From Exec. Coun. Min. (MS.), V: 106, in N. Y. State Library.

At a meeting of the committee of trade and plantations in the council chamber at Whitehall, "The Charter of Incorporation of the Province of New York [passed Oct. 30, 1683] is read, and a number of several powers and privileges therein granted being considered His Majesty doth not think fit to confirm the same."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 357. Brodehead says: "By this action James the Second did not repeal the charter of New York. He merely declined to confirm the same from which it is said he was forced to do it by the interference of the Duke of York, represented in the Senate and Assembly, etc." The constitution of 1684 ordained that this form should be observed in the enacting clause of all bills.—Brodehead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 135.

An order in council from the colonial chamber in Whitehall directs Dongan to proclaim James king over the province of New York.—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 359-60. King James addresses his command to Dongan, to the same effect, on the same day.—Ibid., III: 360-61. A proclamation printed in London "by the assises of John Bill, deceased, and by Henry Hiles and Thomas Newcomb, printers to the King's most excellent majesty, 1685," was sent over to be used in the colony for this purpose. A copy of it is listed in the Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 165-37. A record in Blathwayt's Jour., in Lib. of Cong., dated March 10, says: "A Box directed to Coll Dongan at New York is delivered to Capt. Baxter containing a Packet to Coll Dongan, with the King's Letters, 94th Dec. of the 3rd Instant directing him to pursue all Powers as shall be sent him under His Ma^l Signet or Sign Manual or His order in Council and further signifying that His Ma^l hath committed to 9th Council the Care of the Province."

A proclamation is issued against landing durable goods at any other place than the city bridge, New York, with the exception of hay, wood, and lime. Another proclamation of this date prohibits peddling goods or merchandise within the province when the duties have not been paid; and it grants "one-third part thereof to anyone who shall seize the same."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 175.

25 The council orders that the proclamation be issued against giving information and taking affidavits in a clandestine manner.—Cal. Coun., Min., 43. On Aug. 3, Maj. Wm. Dyre was charged by the governor with having given information in this way. He was examined on Aug. 5.—Ibid., 44. See also the case of Lewin, July 25.

20 A warrant is issued to Philip Wells, surveyor-general, to measure and survey all the house lots on the north side of "Pearle street" and report whether they are in accordance with their patents.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 118.

17 License is given by Dongan to the inhabitants of Manhattan Island to hunt and gather their provisions there upon Aug. 6.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 118; Riket, Hist. of Harlem (1st ed.), 446.

12 Dongan, having caused the general assembly to meet Oct. 17, 1683, and adjourned it from time to time until Sept. 29, 1684, now, "for Several important Reasons," dissolves it, and gives notice to the effect by proclamation.—M. C. C., I: 166-67.

21 "Saul Browne," a merchant from Newport now settled in New York, having complained to Dongan of ordinances of this city which interfered with his trade (see Daly, The Settlement of the Jews in N. Am., 1893, pp. 24, 27), his petition is referred by Dongan to the common council, and the latter endorses upon it the opinion "that see Jew ought to Sell by Retaile within this Citty But may by whole Sale if the Governor think fit to permitt the same."—M.C.C., I:168-69.

14 "The Jews Petition to the Governor for Liberty to Exercise their Religion" is recommended by him to the mayor and aldermen. The board express the opinion "That noe publique Worship is Tolerated by act of assembly, but to those that profess Faith in Christ, and therefore the Jews worshipt to be allowed."—M. C. C., II: 169. The original rough minutes of this action of the common council (dated Sept. 12) are filed in the city clerk's record-room. See also Daly, Settlement of the Jews in N. Am. (1893), 25-26.

18 Dongan writes in April 1685, to the governors of this province, "that the business is so urgent and people extraordinary desirous to have ye King's Seal to their Patents and other papers that concern them." The letter was received in England "22 Dec. 1685."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 365. No new provincial seal, however, appears to have been provided until Aug. 14, 1687 (q. u.).

12 The Edict of Nantes (April 13, 1598), by which Henry IV of Oct. 12-22 France granted toleration to his Protestant subjects, is revoked by Louis XIV. A considerable part of the province of New York, particularly the city of New York, the counties of West Chester and Richmond, and a tract called "the Palas," in Ulster County, was "settled by many of those unhappy People who fled from the Persecution in France upon the Revocation of the Edict."—Doc. Hist. N.Y., (410 ed.), III: 295. See also an account of "The Huguenot Settlers of New York City and Vicinity," by Frank W. Ballard, in Min. Coun. Coun. (1862), 743 et seq.

14 Col. Nicholas Bayard is appointed mayor.—Cal. Coun., Min., 45. The names of the several officers chosen for the ensuing year are found in M. C. C., I: 170, among which that of Nicholas Bayard does not appear. Evidently Dongan did not feel bound to appoint "one of the aldermen."—See Oct. 14, 1684. Bayard was reappointed mayor Sept. 1, 1686. —An interesting brief sketch of his life, see Min. Coun. Coun. (1853), 388; Wilson's Mem. Hist. N. Y., III: 52.

19 The alderman of each ward is required by the common council to certify to the mayor what persons in his ward "are poor and Wanting alms for their Sustenance," that care may be taken at public expense for their relief.—M. C. C., II: 172. This action followed the receipt of a letter from the governor recommending to the consideration of the Common Council the maintenance of the poor. Furthermore, it is the initial step taken by the municipal government in charity. In New Amsterdam it was the church deacons who cared for the poor and looked for voluntary contributions in the "poor-boxes." They were called upon by the court to render an account yearly at a public meeting of how they had disposed of the money they had collected.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 352-53. See also June 12, 1655; Dec. 4, 1661. Cf. "poor farm" mentioned in Selyns' litt, 1686.

25 The common council appoints Peter Delaney treasurer of the city (see Oct. 27), and votes to allow him 12d. in the pound (see June 5, 1676) "for all Receipts and payments of the publicke mony."—M. C. C., I: 171. This commission system of compensation to the treasurer was also in vogue. In the latter part of the year a suggestion was offered by Recorder Livingston that it might be "more for the Interest of this Corporation to Allow their chamberlains a Certaine Sallary than a Commission."—Ibid., VIII: 23.

James Graham is appointed and sworn in as attorney-general of the province.—Cal. Com. Min., 47. Graham had served for (three years (1663-7), and it is now his turn to return to the city treasurer every three months; he received for the same ten per cent. commission.—Ibid., I: 145. Irregularity had caused a special committee of the board, Feb. 16, 1684, to ask Thomas Smith, dock-

They were required to inspect the dock, to the highest bidder, the magistrates doubled believed their troubles would be lessened. It hardly proved so, however. Almost without exception dock-masters either were behind in their payments or failed to keep the dock clean and in repair, or both. Attempts to remedy these things were made in 1694, by framing elaborate "Conditions and Regulations" for farming the docks; to these were added other conditions in 1700.—Ibid., I: 364: II:

104-5. Three men in partnership were the highest bidders in 1703 (Ibid., II: 259), but these proved no better than one. So, finally, in 1713, the city resorted to a third plan, a salaried dock-master who in turn would have the power to engage the dock men. The Dock and Slips Act of 1715 established the dockmen's salaries. This plan proved even less desirable than the others, for the salaried official would collect dockage fees, if convenient, and turn them over to the treasurers. It was, however, a much better plan than the Dock Rent Plan of 1715, and retained for the remainder of the colonial period, although many lessees failed to give satisfaction.—Peterson & Edwards, N. T. at an 18th Cent. Municipality, 111-23, 354-57. See Sept. 28, 1694.

20. To secure liquor licenses on favourable terms, retailers are directed to appear before the governor and council on Oct. 28.— Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 141. A certificate, bearing date of Dec. 9, 1685, showed who the "farmers" of the "Great Packt or Excise" were, and notice was given that biquors were not to be retailed without licenses from them.—Ibid., 142.

23. Three of the bakers of the city, approved by the others, are appointed by the common council to be "Supervisors of bread," and they take the oath that they will give their judgment, on examining "any bread to be baked," whether it is "according to the Standard of this Citty or noe." They are required to "bring in a List of what Bakers are Necessary and fit for that employment within this City."—M. G. C., I: 172. See Jan. 8, 1686, regarding the assize; and Jan. 15, 1686, regarding the appointed bakers.

27. The common council orders that "William Bogardus [see Feb. 24, 1686] the Late in the City of this, doe forthwith delivering up all his accounts belonging to the said City to Mr Peter De Lanoy, the present treasurer thereof."—M. G. C., I: 172. Delonay was appointed on Oct. 19 (q.v.).

ures to be adopted for the security of Canada, which closes: "The first remedy against the English of New York would be to purchase that place from the King of England who in the present state of his affairs, will, without doubt, require money of the King of France. By that means we should be masters of the Iroquois without waging war."—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), I: 126.

Domine Henriicus Selyns prepared this year, in his own handwriting, in a small volume of 170 leaves (or 340 pages), a list of the members of the Dutch congregation. It was not one of the official books of the church, but a private memorandum-book of one of its ministers. It is now (1920) the property of Mr. William L. Brown, of New York, who, in 1914, loaned it to the Holland Society for publication in the society's Year Book for 1916, with explanatory notes, supplied by L. P. de Boor. It was also printed separately. For reproduction of a page of the MS., showing inhabitants including Stuyveycast's widow) "beyond the Fresh Water," see Pl. 19, Vol. IV. Selyns' list may be divided into four sections, as follows: 1. The names issued to the mayor by the governor and council of the city, upon the request of the ministers, and printed in the magazine or newspaper (written on one side only), the first five of which are missing in the original but have been supplied in the printed book from the text by Dr. De Witt (vide infra). 2. Another list, occupying only two leaves (written on one side), which shows the number of persons residing in specified streets. The 100 leaves which follow are written on both sides, excepting blank pages between divisions. Of these, 19 leaves (38 pages) contain historical notes, added in 1794-2 by Garret Abee, a deacon of the North Dutch Church (see July 2, 1769), which are continued in the fourth division. 3. Marriage entries of the Dutch Church from June 14, 1686, to April 23, 1687, written by Selyns, occupying nine pages. 4. Historical notes about the city of New York, from 1609 to 1792, in Abee's handwriting, occupying 72 pages—See Year Book, op. cit., pp. 91 ff. The list of church members (super) shows the names of 666 inhabitants of the city, grouped by streets and other localities where they resided. The list serves practically, to this extent, as a city directory of the period. The streets, etc., referred to are: "Breeke way (Broadway); "Bears Street (Exchange Pl., now State St.); "Pearl Street (Pelham); "Whitehall Sts.); "Lange Straet (along the shore, the water-side, which was the west side of the present Whitehall St., between State and Pearl Sts, the north side of Pearl St., and Hanover Sq, between Whitehall and Wall Sts); "Lange de Val (along the wall, now south side of Wall St.); "Nieuwe Straet (New St.); "Bever Straet (Beaver St., between Broadway and Broad St.); "Mareck-Vel Straet (Marketfield St.); "Brouwers Straet (now part of Stone St., between Whitehall and Broad Sts.); "Brug Straet (Bridge St.); "Heeren Gracht, west syde (Main Ditch, west side, now west side of Broad St.); "Diacomie's Huys (deacon's house for the poor in Broad St.); "Heeren Gracht, east syde (Broad St., east side); "Heegj Straet (High St., now part of Stone St. between Broad and William Sts.); "Slyck Straet (Mud St, now So. William St.); "Princej Straet (Prince's St, now Beaver St. between Broad and William Sts.); "Koningck Straet (King St.); "Smitj Straet (Smith St, now William St. below Wall St.); "Smitj Vallye (Smith's Valley, along the East River shore, above Wall St., now Maiden Lane and the Jacob's Corner, beyond the land gate, on Broadway above Wall St.); "Ove'rs Versch Water (beyond the Fresh Water); "Aen de Grote Kili (by the Great Kili); "Boschwyck (Bosworth); "Armij Bouwerij (poor farm, at Steenwy, L.); and "Nieuw Thuyen (Newtown). For an account of previous printed editions of Selyn's list of the church members, see the Year Book, op. cit., p. 18. These appearances, in various forms, all more or less modifications of the original, have been: 1, an edition by Rev. Thomas De Witt, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 2d ser. (1847), I: 392-99; 2, one by Valentine, in Hist. City of N. Y. (1853), 3:31-31; 3, one by Wilson, in Mem. Hist. Soc. (1853), I: 446-52; and 4, one in the Year-Book of the Holland Soc. of N.Y. (1896), 178-98. See also the memoir and poems of Selyns in Murphy's Anthology of New Neth. (1864). For earlier lists of the inhabitants of New York, see The Nicasius de Sille List of 1660, in II: 349-51; the list of 1665, in Rec. N. Am. Hist. Soc., VII: 221-27; in Cal. Coun., 1676, p. 487, 491; the list of the principal male inhabitants of the city, was embodied in a petition to Lieut.-Gov. Colden on May 2, 1774 (p. 9), and published in Man. Com. Coun. (1850), 247 et seq. About this time Philip Wells, Dongan's surveyor-general, made a general survey of "New York and Beyond." At the death of the town, a claim was entered for this service (which covered seven days), and for the services of two persons employed in the work, besides the "expenses of Mr. Vaughan & Mr. Cortlandt." The original survey has disappeared.—The Hist. Mag. (1st ser., 1865), I: 285, citing the original claim. It was probably during the years 1686-9 that Philip Wells made his survey of the upper and lower bays, showing Manhattan and Staten Islands, the principal sand-bars, soundings, etc. This drawing, which bears the inscription "A sand draught of New York Harbour by (Philip Wells)," is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 31. Wells made also a survey of Boston harbour, and one of the entire coast of New North. (British Museum, No. 434, Roll 19). Gov. Dongan, to acquire an interest in the fur trade, held correspondence with Frontenac's two successors as governors of Canada, Le Fevre de la Barre and the Marquis de Denonville, regarding the trade and his powers. But, in 1687, an expedition in the direction of Michillimackincac to forestall the trade there . . .—Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV, 340-15. On Jan. 21, the mayor signed an order, directed to the Bakers of bread who were appointed on Oct. 23, that the persons named in the order shall "bake Each one batch of white and Course bread at Least for Sale of due Assize On the Respective days herein Specified." The list shows the names of 24 bakers, some of whom are women. The men are all property holders, and several are aldermen or otherwise prominent. 336

old church was no longer adapted to the needs and improved tastes of the community, though still answering the purposes of a 73 schoolhouse... The church was to be built of stone, and upon a new site; an arrangement being made with Laurens Janzen and the 75 Delamater family, who gave up their two north corns for this purpose, and which also afforded ample ground for a new churchyard 77 or cemetery." The community subscribed liberally, and assumed 79 the labour of preparing and bringing the stone, lime, timber, shingles, 81 lathes, etc., all of which was to apply to the subscriptions.
83
On March 29, the foundation is begun, Resolved Waldron, 85 due ceremony, placing the first stone, and Johannes Vermelje 87 the second. The following day the contract was made for the 89 carpenter work with: William Hallacker of New York. The agree-91 ment, which is preserved among the Harlem Records (see Bibliography), reads: "Specification of the Church at Harlem: The site 95 of the church across either way, is 56 Dutch feet; upon which 97
93
William Hallacker undertakes to construct the roof, with an arch 99 therein, and a small steeple upon it, and to cover all properly with 101 shingles, and to make a steeple thither; upon condition that the 103 pews be kept inside it, and shall be painted and grained, and 105 order that the said William Hallacker finishes all the pews and 107
bench shall be obligated to deliver the timber at the building place. For which the City Church M. P. agree to pay the aforesaid William Hallacker, the sum of Seven Hundred

Vans Dongan grants, signs, and seals the second English charter 23 of the city of New York. The first was the Dutch charter of 25
1649 (q. e.). The original document (see Pl. 18, Vol. IV), which is still 27 owned by the city, is in the custody of the New York Public Library, 29
where, with the Montgomerey Charter and other documents, it 31 was deposited for safe keeping by Comptroller Bird S. Coler, in 1699.
33
It is thus described: "Beautifully engrossed on very vellum and 35 thick sheets of parchment, it is so massive, so imposing to the eye, 37 that it seems to have been preserved as a guaranty of the liberties 39 not of a little colonial capital of some four thousand inhabitants 41 of a city like the New York of to-day. Once pernament from it 43 but long ago detached by the hand of time, is an impression of the 45 large provincial seal bestowed when Lovelace was governor in 46
1669, protected by a silver box bearing on its cover the inscription: "N. Bany Esqr Gover. 1686."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 299; cf. Wilde, The Civic Ancestry of N. Y. City and River (1898), 44, pl. XIV, footnote 45. The charter is re-
47 produced for the first time on Pls. 18 a to e, Vol. IV. For reproduction of Dongan's provincial seal, see Frontispiece, Vol. V.
49
Gov. Bellomont, witting to England on Nov. 29, 1700, said of the charter: "... its sealed with the Duke of York's seal, and 51 under the Great Seal of the Province; yet it bears date the 2d year of King James, so that the whole foundation and 53
thongs of parchment is wrong." This led him to declare that it was "not a legal Charter" that "In strictness this is no City, and all the judgments that have been pass'd in their Mayor's Court are void."—N. T. Col. Doc., I: 812.
55
The charter was transcribed into the Minutes of the Common 57
Council (I: 290–106) under date of Jan. 5, 1691.
59 Although Dongan states, in the charter, that he gives it "for 61 and on behalf of his most Sacred Majesty... his Heirs Suc-63 cessors and Assigns," and "by Virtue of the Commission and 65 Authority unto me Given, and power in me reposing," it did not 67 emanate directly from the crown, but from the governor individ-69 ually. It begins: "Thomas Dongan Lieut Governor and Vice 71
Admiral of New York and its Dependencies under his Majesty 73
James ye Second... . Proprietor of ye Colony and Province of New 75 York, and its dependencies in America... to all whom this shall come sendeth Greeting."—M. C. C., I: 390. It was 77 confirmed and extended, however, by the Montgomerey charter, granted by King George II himself.—See March 23, 1730; see also 79
Gerard, A Treatise on the Title of the Corporation, etc. (1873), 31 and 56; a history of the charter by Gerard in Mag. Am. Hist., Vol.

16, XVI: 197–99; see also Randel's Map of the Farms, Pl. 86, Vol. III.
85
The charter recites that the citizens and inhabitants of the city 87 were erected, built, erected, and erected in order proper Costs and 89
Charges, to enroll Publick Buildings Accommodations and Con-91 veniences for the said City, that is to say the City Hall or State-93 house with the Ground thereunto belonging, two Market houses [see De Voe, Market Book, 59], the Bridge into ye Dock the Wharf

97
Settled one Ferry from the said City of New York to Long

These and the benefits arising from them are confirmed.

There is also a grant of the lanes, streets, highways, and alleys
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1686 on Manhattan Island, for public use. The charter confirms to the inhabitants their lands obtained through former governors, lieutenants-governor-in-chief, or by the mayor, or, as far as may be, to the inhabitants otherwise. It gives authority to the mayor, etc., to establish, lay out, etc., or direct the laying out, repairing or amending of all necessary streets, lanes, alleys, highways, water-courses, ferries, and bridges in the city and island; no private lands to be taken herein except by the mayor, recorder, etc., or under town law of the province. On this day, the king also granted a charter to the town of New London, Conn., with a wide charter of autonomy and independence.

July

On the 24th July, 1665, the Duke of York ascended the throne as James II. This period is known as the Interregnum, a time of political uncertainty and economic distress.

June

On the 4th June, 1666, King James II wrote to Gov. Dongan: "We have therefore given strict Order to Our Trusty and wellbeloved William Blathwayt, Esq." Our Surveyor and Auditor General of all Our Revenues in America, Carefully and diligently to pursue Our Service and (to secure his Duty in relation to Our Revenue in that Our Province and Territories committed to your Government." The governor is given special instructions to aid Blathwayt in every possible way, and is informed that "we are genteelly inclined to apply Such of Our Revenues as are now due within Our said Province to the immediate Support and Security thereof." There were measures to be resolved to hold a strict hand upon the execution of the duties of the revenue officials.

Up to the time of King Charles II's death (see Feb., 1665), personal considerations had compelled the duke to consent to the granting of a legislative assembly in the province of New York. See "Historical Introduction," Jour. Leg. Coun., (1896), I. 1, 2. In his accession to the throne as King James II, he now abolishes the assembly by a new commission giving Gov. Dongan "full power and authority to, and in the name of, the council, and major part of them, to make, constitute and ordain Laws, Statutes and ordinances for the Publicke peace, welfare and good government of the Province and of the people and inhabitants thereof;" such laws to be transmitted to England within three months after their enactment, for the Royal approbation, and to be null and void if "at any time, in any manner, not approved of by the Duke, according to Dongan's instructions, see May 29) was received in New York on Sept. 14 (q.v.), and on Jan. 20, 1685, Dongan dissolved the assembly, and set up, in its place, a government, executive and legislative, by governor and council, respectively. —Ibid., 1, xv—xvi, citing N. Y., Col. Docs., III: 370, 378. See Dec. 9; and Addenda.

July

According to a new book by Richard Blome, of London, licensed and published in 1686, the houses in New York were "built with Dutch-brick, and the meanest not valued under one hundred Pounds." The city was "encompassed with a Wall of good thickness to the 'landward,' and fortified at the entrance to the River by a fort called "James Fort," so as to "command any Ship which passeth that way." —Roger L'Estrange (Richard Blome), The Present State of His Majesty's Isles and Territories in Am. The Dongan Charter (see April 27) provided that "they Said Mayor, Aldermen and Common Council of the said City of New York, and their Successors Shall and may for ever hereafter have one Common Seal to Serve for the Sealing of all and singular their Affairs & Businesses touching or Concerning the said Corporation;" and that it shall be lawful for them "as they Shall see Cause to break, change, Alter and New Make their Said Common Seal, when and as often as to them it Shall seem Convenien:="—M. C. G., I: 296. The mayor now presents to the common council "the New Seal of this City with this inscription, SIGLIUM CIITVAT [sic] NOVI [Ebroac—See Pine, op. cit., 8]." The common council agrees upon it, and orders that it "be the Comon Seal of this City," and "Remain in the custody of the mayor for the time being." —Ibid., I: 179. See Frontispiece, Vol. V.

The earliest known impression of this seal, and the only impression known of this "state," i.e., having a ducal coronet instead of an imperial crown, is upon a grant of a water lot by the city to Conrad Ten Eyck, dated Sept. 1, 1659, owned (in 1910) by Mr. Frank W. Demarest, East Orange, N. J.—Pine, Seal and Flag of the City of N. Y. (1915), 38-59. See Frontispiece, Vol. V. [Note: The history and symbolism of this seal are described at length by Dr. R. M. Hagan, in ibid., 38-51, its principal features being the windmill, the two lions, the sailor, the crown, the date, and the Latin name of New York. The seal is reproduced in ibid., on plate 3, opp. p. 18, which shows both states, one with ducal coronet, the other with imperial crown. Of this feature, it is said, "The Crown, forming the crest of the seal of 1686, on the Ten Eyck land grant of 1687, is a ducal coronet. This is surprising, because in 1685 the Duke of York ascended the throne as James II. [Cf. Dongan Charter, 1685, infra.] It was, however, at the present writing [vide infra], the crest on the seal was regarded as having been changed to an imperial crown, showing the distinguishing arches rising from the circlet and supporting the orb and cross. The manuscript section of the New York State Library can give no light on the question of the ducal or imperial crown on the seal. It seems to the imperial crown, owing to the fact that all the seals which appeared on documents in the New York Colonial Manuscripts or other manuscripts in the collection were so melted by heat at the time of the fire in the Capitol in 1911, that the change was made at least as late as 1701, for a base impression of the seal is still known. The imperial crown may be seen at the New York Historical Society or on a document dated October 1, 1701, certifying that Thomas Evans had been made a Freeman of the City."—Ibid., 44-49, and footnote, comparing it with the seal (showing imperial crown) reproduced and erroneously described (as having a ducal coronet) by O'Cullogh in the Dictionary of N. Y. (St. ed.), III: 398. Compare provincial seal with coronet in ibid., IV: 2. See, however, Jan. 7, 1690, from which it now appears clear that the change was made in 1688 or 1689.

The other impression of this seal with the imperial crown, which was used as the corporate seal from 1688, or 1689, to the Revolution, is reproduced by Mr. Wilde, in his Civic Antiquities of N. Y. (Cf. p. 26, from the John Paulding collection, presented to the N.Y. Hist. Soc. in 1844.—See Frontispiece, Vol. V. The seal was also alluded to and partially described by Du Simithière in May, 1769.—See volume lettered "Papers relating to N. England, N. York, etc.," formerly belonging to Du Simithière in the British Museum Library Co. of Phila. (shelf mark, no. 1424 G.); Van Rensselaer, II: 504-5.

Besides the mystery of a ducal coronet on the first city seal of 1686, there is another in the fact that a smaller "common seal" of the city, also having a ducal coronet, was in use at the same time as the other (1687). This is described in Pine, op. cit., 41-51. The earliest known impression of this seal is on the certificate of allegiance of Johannes Kipp (dated Sept. 8, 1687), in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Other impressions are upon a land grant to Anna Maria van Horne (April 21, 1693), in possession of the Title Guarantee & Trust Co.; and on warrants signed by Mayor Ebenezer Willson (1709); Caleb Heathcoate (1711), and John Johnston (1719), now preserved in the city clerk's record-room.—Ibid., 51-52. Of this seal, it is said: "It is not known when and under what circumstances this seal came into existence. Between the granting of the seal of 1669 and the year 1687, when we find this other seal in use, there is record of the making of only one City seal, namely, that of 1686 with the legend: If this were the seal of 1669 still continued in use, the problem would be solved, but that cannot now be established. That the use of both seals was officially recognized is evidenced by the fact that on April 24, and again on October 15, Mayor and Common Councils, besides the Mayor of New York and his successors, are the sealers of documents. "Six shillings for every great seal and three Shillings for a small seal" [M. C. G., I: 222, 249], and on October 14, 1689, ex-Mayor Stephen Van Cortlandt was directed by the Common Council to deliver to the High Constable "6d City Seals" [Ibid., I: 208], showing that there were more seals than one.—Ibid., op. cit., 51-52. The impression of this smaller seal on the Van Horne deed, above referred to, is reproduced by Wilde in his Civic Antiquities, Pl. 29, with accompanying description (pp. 72-73), attributing its origin to Lovelace in 1669 (pp. 43-61).

It is ordered by the common council that the house from the house of Frederick Philips to the house of Lucas Kirstead and from thence to the house of Widowe Mathews and from the house of Thomas Crudell to the said City Hall be by the Severall inhabitannts Paved from the front of their houses nine foote deep into the Streete."—M. C. G., I: 179. This ground, on the modern plan, lay along the easterly side of Whitehall Street, from F to W St., and along the northerly side of Pearl St. from the easterly corner of Whitehall St. to the westerly corner of Coenties Alley.

Negroes and Indian slaves are regularly employed by their masters "to work on the bridge Weighhouse and Market house of this City and their Respectful Service and Assistance tends to the discouragement and Loss of the "Sworne porters" of the city. The common council therefore orders that none of these slaves be admitted to work upon or intermeddle with any goods whatsoever," at these places, whether imported or to be exported; but that such goods "Shall be Received and delivered by 1866. The Sworne porters of this City and Noe others."—M. C. C., I: 183. See Dec. 1, 1674. 1874.

"the common council orders "that the Markett house of this City be and Employed as a warehouse for goods." The charge for "Each tunne of [or] Caske" is fixed at 9d. for 24 hours; and for "each bagey of goods"—"amount not stated," and so proportionally. The order requires that the mayor appoint "a fit person to be Keeper of the same Who Shall for the next Six months Have the half of the profite thereof for his Service."—M. C. C., I: 179. See Nov. 24, 1687.

Aug. 28. Gov. Dongan and the mayor and aldermen of the city deem it "fit and convenient" that a street shall be laid out from Broadway to "the Smiths Vly." For this purpose they ordered the first part of the land of George Heathcote. For public convenience, Heathcote conveys to Dongan, for £12, "A certayne piece of land situate in the King street, Beginning at the land of Jan Vanpee [Vinge] and so along the east side of said street to the Smiths Vly, 16 rods, 4 feet, Dutch measure; And in breadth at the upper end 25 feet like measure, and fronting to the water side, 14 feet like measure."—Abstract of Bills, II: 442, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1895).

In a footnote, Pelletreau explains that this tract, measuring 202 ft. long and 214 ft. wide, English measure, is the last end of Pine St., next west of Pearl St. For the origin of Pine St., see Dec. 17, 1684.

Sept. 30. The general assembly, having been adjourned until Sept. 25, 1686, Dongan prorogues it until March 25, 1687, "for weighty and important Reasons," and gives notice to that effect by proclamation, Oct. 17, 1686.

16 Francisco Bastian, a negro, receives a patent for "A piece of land part of which is improved and is adjoining to the rere of the Bass Bowery upon York Island, beginning at the northeast corner of the land of Solomon Peters the Negro and runs as the Highway or Road, north 24° easterly 56 rods and from the east 18° southerly 44 rods and thence south 24° westerly 56 rods and thence west 18° northerly 44 rods, to the first marked Tree being bounded on the south by the land not laid out and the west by the High Way or Road on the north by the land not laid out and the east by a Swamps, containing 15 Acres and 64 Rods."—Liber Patents, VI: 67 (Albany).

30 The common council orders that public wells of stone be made in specified places, half the expense to be borne "by the inhabitants of every Street proportionably and the other half by the City." There is to be one before each of the following houses: Those of Corbett and William Vermere "in the broadway," "that of William Merrett (location not given, but possibly in "Feld Street," as appears by the tax list of 1677); and before those of James Provoost, Thomas Lewis, Andreas Teller, and William D. Troncure (locations not given): also one to front Smith St. near the house of John J., City of New York to front the Order St. M. C. C., I: 181. Arrangements for the assessment and collection of dues for this work were made on Jan. 13, 1687.—Ibid., II: 185, 186. Regarding the location of other wells and pumps placed from time to time throughout the city during the colonial period, see Index to Addi., VIII: 486-90, titles "Well," "Wells," and "Pumps." See also Feb. 28, 1677; Valentine, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 216.

4 An order is made in common council for a survey of "the Land in the Swamp."—M. C. C., I: 181. This swamp was the Cripple-bush, frequently referred to as Beekman's Swamp and so depicted on Pl. 17, Vol. I. It did not belong to William Beekman, however, but lay behind his land at the river. See Sept. 5, 1728.

Gov. Dongan receives his commission as captain-general and governor-in-chief of the province of New York, and takes the oath.—Cal. Coun. Min., 50. This commission had been signed by King James II on June 10 (q.v.)—N. Y. Cal. Docs., III: 577-82. For his former instructions and commission, see Jan. 27, 1685.

5 Peter King and Adolph Fiestener, the city surveyors, are required "to survey ye Vacant Land within this City near and in ye Dock beginning from ye west house to ye City hall and to lay ye same out in lots of Eighty foot long into the Dock and about thirty foot broad for ye 8th Street as also to lay ye 8th Street ranging with ye Here Graft."—M. C. C., I: 105. This order was not recorded in the minutes until May 4, 1688. See Chron. regarding the action of the common council at that time. The vacant land referred to was the newly filled in land between the custom-house bridge (present Washington) and the city hall (Counties Slip). The street for which sufficient space was to be left was either Dock (present Pearl) St. or the water-side around the custom-house bridge, and the derivation of the name Moore St., see Meine. Com. Coun. (1825), 404; and drawing in Chron. opposite 1700. Charges of fraud and misconduct are made against Luke Santen, the officer of customs. See Dec. 9. On Jan. 10, 1687, an examination was ordered by the governor and council. The assembly was dissolved, Santen suspended, and Peter Delanoy appointed collector pro tem. Santen, when arrested, was ordered to deliver his books to Stephen van Cortlandt; he refused, and Isaac Swinton was ordered to search, and seize them without the help of the sheriff.—Cal. Com. Min., 59, 52. On Feb. 22, Dongan stated in a report that Santen had been so troublesome that he was forced to send him home to England.—N. Y. Cal. Docs., III: 421. See also Feb. 23, 1687. This is "ye feast day of St Michael the Arch Angle," named in the Dongan Charter as the day on which the mayor, aldermen, and sheriff are to be appointed, assistants and petty constables elected, and the chamberlain chosen.—M. C. C., I: 298-300. "Michaelmas Day . . . properly named the day of St. Michael and All Angels, Is a great festival of the Church of Rome, and also observed as a feast day by the Church of England. Nov. 15, Will be learned with some surprise, that these notions of presending angels and saints are what have led to the custom of choosing magistrates on the 29th of September . . . Local rulers were esteemed as in some respects analogous to tutelar angels, in as far as they presided over and protected the people. It was therefore thought proper to choose them on the day of St. Michael and All Angels . . . Chambers, The Book of Days, II: 357 et seq.

An order is issued by the governor and council to the several sheriffs throughout the province to make a return of the number of horn and foot within the respective counties, also the number of inhabitants and merchants, English or foreigners, servants and slaves; the number of marriages, christenings, and burials, for the seven years last past, with the names of persons holding lands from the crown, etc.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 155. For results, see Dongan's report of Feb. 22, 1687.

This day of the month is designated in the Dongan Charter as the one on which the mayor and sheriff are to take their oaths of office before the governor and council.—M. C. C., I: 298. It is likely it was chosen because it was the birthday of King James II (see Chambers' Book of Days, II: 442), as well as because it followed at a convenient interval after Michaelmas Day (see Sept. 20), when elections and appointments to office occurred. In England, the mayor was sworn in on St. Simon and St. Jude's Day.—See The Privileges of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen (London, 1721), 107. A "Court of Lieutenant," or military tribunal, begins in the city of New York in 1675, and the Ward officers are now preserved in the custody of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and have been published in the society's Collections, 1880, where an "Introduction" explains the province and influence of this court. The magistrates of Harlem pass an ordinance forbidding the inhabitants to cut any more wood within the town than it is needed for their own immediate use, under penalty of 200 guilders ($80).—Harlem Recs. (MS. translation), IV: 475.

A treaty of neutrality for America, between France and England, is signed at Whitehall—Winson, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 346; V: 476; N. Y. Cal. Docs., III: 505; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 241-22. William Merritt receives a patent for a tract granted to Wolpert Webber by Director-General Stuyvesant, April 1, 1670. It is described as follows: "One certain piece of land situate and being upon the Island Manhattans on the further side of the Fresh Water lying between the land of Cornelis Jacobs Stibbe and the Valley or Meadow Ground, being in length from Beginning of the run or creek along the High way northeast to the marke which Dividez Cornelis Jacobs Land, 53 rods; thence in leght along the said Stibbe's Land to the Meadow south-west, 40 rods; thence, along the said Meadow to the extreme south, 25 rods; and along the Hills northerly to Beginning 84 rods" (a mistake for 48 rods). Various conveyances (not dated or particularly referred to) are recited from the acts of Wolpert Webber to William Merritt of the city of New York, mariner, who is now in possession; and see A. H. St. John's conference with the organization of the West India Company, Liber Patents, VII: 64 (Albany). The city sells "a Lott of ground near the Dock to Benjamin Blagg."—Water Grannts (1686-1703), I: 1. This was the beginning of the sale of water lots by the corporation, jurisdiction over the sale of which had been determined in the Dongan Charter (M.C.C., I: 294). The mayor had been entrusted by the common council on Sept. 13 "to manage the Coocerne of the Land in the Dock & to him Seemes meet."—M.C.C., I: 181. On May 1, 1687 (y.w), he reported the sale of 14 lots, yielding £7290, the record of which appears under date of July 25, 1687.—Ibid., I: 188. For the beginning of the city's policy of leasing, rather than selling, public lands, see May 25, 1704.

The records of the proceedings of the legislative council under Dongan and his council (after the abolition of the general assembly, —see June 15) begin. "A certain vacant piece of ground formerly designed for that purpose," and "a parcel of clift stone that are at the old fortifications of this City, which would be a good help towards the building of said church." The estimated cost of the church, 120 ft. long by 90 ft. broad, 7 ft. in the ground and 25 ft. above ground, was £95534 florins (or £36776).—Eccl. Rec., III: 290-300. The town council approved this for the purpose, and all other laws made since 1685, except those repealed by the king, are continued.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: xvii.

The minister, elders, etc., of the Dutch church prepare a petition to the common council (but it is not presented) for a site for a new building, requesting "a certain vacant piece of ground formerly designed for that purpose," and "a parcel of clift stone that are at the old fortifications of this City, which would be a good help towards the building of said church." The estimated cost of the church, 120 ft. long by 90 ft. broad, 7 ft. in the ground and 25 ft. above ground, was £95534 florins (or £36776).—Eccl. Rec., III: 290-300. The town council approved this for the purpose, and all other laws made since 1685, except those repealed by the king, are continued.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: xvii.

The mayor appoints William Butler chimney sweep, and requires him "frequently to passe through all the Streets Lanes and Passages in the city, and to make "such noise or Cry" as may "Discover" himself to the inhabitants. The mayor's warrant prescribes his fees.—M. C. C., I: 106.

Dongan makes a long report on the state of the province, in Feb. answer to questions by the lords of trade. The following extracts contain the leading facts relating to New York City:

"There is Likewise in New York & Albany a Court of Mayor & Aldermen held once in every fortnight from whence their can be no appeal unless the Cause of Action bee above the value of Twenty pounds sterling, or by-Laws for ye regulation of their own affairs as they think fit, so as the same be approved by ye Govt & Council.

"Their Majors, recorders, Town Clerks & Sheriffs are appointed by the Governor.

"Courts of sessions are held by the justices of the peace twice a year in each of the counties, except New York where they are held four times, and Albany three times, a year.

Dongan reports that "in Feb. last," with the advice and consent of the council, he established a court of judicature (exchequer), to be held by the governor and council, or before as many of the council as the governor might authorize, on the first Monday in every month at New York.—See Feb. 19, 1686. Heretofore, there had been daily difficulties in these cases, on account of "the great distance betwixt the Cursory settled Courts," the consequent delays, and the hazard of submitting the king's cause to "country Jurers who over and above that they are by ignorant enough & for the most part linked together by affinity too much swayed by their particular humors & interests."

"There are in the province about 4000 foot-soldiers, 100 horse, and one company of dragoons.

"At New York there is a Fortification of four Bastions built formerly against the Indians of dry stone & earth with Sods as a Breast work well and pleasantly situated for the defence of the Harbor on a point made by Hudson's River on the one side and by

THE sound on the other. It has Thirty nine Guns, two Mortarpeces, thirty Barrels of Powder five hundred Ball some Boom, some nine Flanker, the face of the North Bastion, & three points of Bastions & a Courtain has been done & are rebuilt by mee with Lime & Morter, & all the rest of the Fort plind and Rough Cast with Lime since my coming here:—

"And the most of the Guns I found dismounted & some of them yet continue to bee soe which I hope to have mounted soon as the mills can sawe

"I am forced to renew all the Batterys with three-inch-Plank & have spoke for new planks for the purpose

"And the Break-work upon the wall is noe moulder away but its likewise made to make a return therof. The Officers quarters has formerly a flat Roof which I finding to be Chargeable to maintaine & that it could not bee kept, have caused a new roof to bee uponit. As also finding water to run through the Arch of the Gate I have forst to put a Roof over it. I am forst every day by reason of the rotteness of the Timber & Boards to bee making reparations in the Soldiers quarters or my own.

"The Ground that the Fort stands upon & that belongs to it contains in quantity about two acres or thereabouts About which I have instead of Palladoes put a fence of Pales which is more lasting.

"Tho' this Fortification bee inconsiderable, yet I could wish the King had several of them in these parts,—the people growing every day more numerous & they generally of a turbulent disposition."

Dongan asks for an order "to make up a small Fort with twelve gunners & a garde in the Channel there, that noe vessel can goe in nor out but she must come see near the Point that from on board one might toss a biscuit Cake on Shore . . ."

"In this Government look upon that Bay that runs into the Sea near Hudsons River, to bee Storm-shells & the sight of all that noe vessel can goe in nor out she must come near the Point that from on board one might toss a biscuit Cake on Shore . . ."

"The principal Towns within this Government are New York Albany & Kingston at Esopus. All the rest are Country villages, the Buildings in New York and Albany are generally of Stone & brick. In the Country the houses are mostly new built, having two or three rooms on a floor. The Dutch are great improvers of the Land—New York and Albany live whedy upon Trade with the Indians, England and the West Indies. The returns for England are generally Beaver Peltry, Oile and Tobacco when we can have it. To the West Indies wee send Flower, Bread, Pease Pork and sometimes a few of our English."

"There is about nine or ten three Mast Vessels of about eighty or a Hundred Tuns burthen, two or three Ketches & Barkes of about forty Tung and about twenty Sloops of about twenty five or and twenty Tunn belonging to the Government.—All of which Trade for England Holland & the West Indies except six or seven Sloops that use the river Trade to Albany . . ."

"A thousand Ships may ride here safe from Winds and weather, I send herewith to your LORD a Map from the coming in of Sandy-hook to the northernmost end of this Island where the Soundings are market, by which youll perceive the coming and conveniency of this harbor . . ."

"I beleive for these 7 years past last, there has not come over into this province twenty English, Scotch or Irish Families—But on great contrary of Long Island, the people increase so fast that they complain for want of Land . . . But of French there have since my coming here several families come both from St. Christophers and England & a great many more are expected as afoe from Holland are come several Dutch Families which is another great security of the Ministry of adding of this island to the neighbouring English Colonys, that a more equal balance may bee kept here between his Majestys natural born subjects and Foreigners which latter are the most prevailing part of this Governm't."

Dongan also answers questions regarding obstructions to trade, the tariff on certain imports; quit-rents collectors of revenue; the appointment of Thomas Coker to the office of surveyor, and the turning out of John Smith from that position; the difficulty he has in making Sawt home some of the money received; the necessity of adding to the present stock of the revenue; etc. Concluding, he replies seriatim to charges made against him by Santen, stating, among other things:

"Every Town ought to have a Minister. New York has first a Chaplain belonging to the Fort of the Church of England; secondly a Dutch Calvinist, thirdly a French Calvinist, fourthly a Dutch Lutheran.—Here bee not many of the Church of England, Dutch, Romao Catholics; abundance of Quakers preachers men and Women especially; Singing Quakers; Ranting Quakers; Sabbatarians; Antisabattarians; Some Anabaptists some Independents; some Jews: in short of all sorts of opinions there are some, and the more, of none at all.

"The Great Church which serves both the English & the Dutch is within the Fort which is found to bee very inconvenient therefore I desire that there may be an order for their building another, ground being laid out for that purpose, & they wanting not money in Store where with all to build it.

"The most prevailing opinion is that of the Dutch Calvinists.—"

—N. Y. Col. Docs, III: 389-415. In a footnote (p. 415), the names of the ministers referred to are given.

Dongan adds in a postscript to his report that he has caused Santen to be arrested for misappropriating revenues and falsifying accounts, and that he will be sent to England (p. 416). This document is printed in Dec. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), I: 95-118, where the date assigned to it is Feb. 22, 1687.

In aletet to the "Lord President," Dongan states that Mf Santen in the Summer coming been by the Auditors of his accounts very considerably indebted to His Majesty as likewise being convicted by the Judgment of the Council on several articles exhibited against him of other crimes & misdemeanors was by me by the advice of the said Council suspended from the said offices of Collector & Receiver of his Majestys pleasure should be known therein."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 421; and see, further, pp. 424-22; also, regarding Santen's charges against Dongan and Dongan's answers, see pp. 407-14, 492-500.

Gov. Dongan acknowledges that he receaved 5300 from the city for the charter.—N. Y. Col. Docs, III: 495.

Replying to an address from "ye Quakers," the council, after examining "ye acts requiring trayning" (doubtless referring to military training), give the unanimous opinion "that no man can be exempted from ye obligation," and that if any fail to train, "let their pretences be what they will," they must submit to the penalties prescribed in the act.—From transcript of Council Minutes (MS), in N. Y. Pub. Library.

In an ordinance requiring householders to provide fire-fibquets it is stated that "great Damages Have bin Done by fire in this City by reason there were not Instruments to quench ye same."—M. C. Not one of the aldermen puts in an appearance at a regular meeting of the mayor's court. The mayor and recorder went their rage in the following order: "Ordered that Mf Alderman Rum-bouts, Mf Alderman DePeyster, Mf Alderman LeBrulyne, Mf Alderman Courtland & Mf Alderman Cran dall doe each of them pay a fine of Six Shilling for being absent and that ye Court be Adjourned for fourteen days longer."—M. Dongan, as governor, conveys to Thomas Haward a lot 30 ft. long bounded west by the bridge, north by the weigh-house (26 ft.), east by the lot of Peter Dolanoy (70 ft.), and south by the wharf which is to be made. The water front thus was gradually being filled in. The old weigh-house still stood on the north side of the bridge.—Liber Deeds, XIII: 289.

William St. was laid out prior to this date.—See III: 1021; 26 C. Pl. 37, Vol. II.

1687 shows the sale of 1,430 lots to several persons, yielding a “Bulance” of £1,970. His report, not having been entered in the “Council Book” at this time, was recorded on July 25, 1687.—M. C. G., I: 188. See Dec. 1, 1688.

5 Gov. Dongan executes a lease to William Smith, for 99 years, at a yearly rental of £55, of “All that Old Decayed Message or Tenement or Field of Green with all the Appurtenances, situate, lying and being in the City of New York aforesaid, now or late in the tenure and occupation of Thomas Coler, containing in breadth to the west or river 54 feet, and in length to the north 150 feet.”—Liber Patents, VI: 211 (Albany). See Dec. 3, 1685; Nov. 15, 1753; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 949; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

9 The French crown of New York had no hold on to any power and was to be entered in and law, and the native by the “Council Book” was not to know engaged in and by the fact, it incurs fire, James Eng., incurred “Town,” and on the “Council Book.”

13 The “Mayor, Aldermen, etc.” are required by the governor and council to “make an ordinance that all new buildings be uniform and with party walls.”—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 165, citing “Legislative Minutes.” Such an act was passed on June 14.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: xix.

The “Mayor, Aldermen, etc.” are required by the governor and council to “make an ordinance that all new buildings be uniform and with party walls.”—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 165, citing “Council minutes.” On July 25, because the governor thus desires that the mayor shall “take Care that the buildings be made at ye Tone of Unformity,” it is ordered by the common council that the mayor, with others of his choice, shall “Disburse ye several Portions of ye Buildings that Point.”—M. C. G., I: 183.

The business transacted by the governor and council on this day concerns the following: The negotiations of the Bowery to clean the easements behind the fort; proclamation in regard to naturalization ordered; petition of the Lutheran elders rejected, and petitioners referred to the court; Jacobus Vannderwater ordered to deliver the books of the State General or W. I. Company to W. Nicolls.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., June 15, 1664.

The attorney-general is ordered by the governor and council to draw a legislative bill enacting that all bills, bonds, records, etc., shall be in English. The bill was passed the next day.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., June 16; Jour. Leg. Coun., I: xix. See Nov. 17, 1674.

17 In December, Albany, Capt. Van Cortlandt is to take charge of the seals, Maj. Flygraph of the accounts; all the books, containing the books and records, and John Knight of other books, etc., and act as deputy secretary. On July 26, Charles Lodwick, John de la Val, and George Mackenzie were required by the council to take an inventory of the books and records in the secretary’s office, and also to have a view of the printing office. Copies of proclamations and acts of council were to be made. On July 30, these copies were to be sent to the sheriffs of all counties; rules being prescribed for receiving and opening them. On Aug. 1, an inventory having been taken of the secretary’s office, the keys were to be delivered to John Knight.—Col. Coun. Min., I: 25.

A committee of the common council is appointed to “view the streets of the City and Report . . . how they find them that Care may be taken for making Common walks [sewers] and to Pay . . . them as will be found necessary.”—M. C. G., I: 188. They reported, on Aug. 8, that they “think convenient that the Pavement of the Guttering ye. Here Graft be taken up from Cornelius Barness his house to Alderman Crunches and be new paved so that the descent all along may be Equal and that it be paved on both sides for ye. Descent of the water to ye. River as shall be the Desier of the Governors.” It was ordered “that the 2d street be new Paved as is proposed;” also “that the Mill Street be Repaired in ye. same Manner and that ye. Pavement of ye. Brewen street be likewise new Laid from Jasper Nessepat to Brant skylers house.”—Ibid., I: 189.

The common council orders the inhabitants to summon all the inhabitants of the several wards of the city, to appear before a committee of aldermen at the city hall “to Give an account of their fire-accounts.” The aldermen are to determine “who shall be allowed as firemen and who not,” that the names of those allowed may be enrolled.—M. C. G., I: 188. Such an order was again made in 1691–2 (Ibid., II: 218, 248, 254), and again in 1695 (Ibid., II: 373, 389, 393). A later order, Dec. 13, 1695 (q. v.), was more sweeping.

The common council orders “that Alderman Cortland Assisted with the surveyors Make two Drafts of the land by the water-side from Coenraad teneyckes to Maritime Cocks [i.e., from Counties Slip to Burger’s Path] the same to be laid out in lots.”—M. C. G., I: 189. The property of both Ten Eyck and Clock is located on the Burigs View (Pl. 25, Vol. I) by means of the key (I: 132) and the plate description (I: 247). See also Oct. 13.

King James sends to Dongan from Windsor a seal, appointed for the use of the Province of New York. He requests that it be engraved on the one side with Our Royal Effigies on Horseback in Arms over a Landslip of Land & Sea, with a Rising Sun and a Scrole containing this Motto. Alitusque et Idem. And our Titles round the circumference of the said Seal; There being also engraved on the other side Our Royal Arms with the Garden, Crown, Supporters & Motto, With this Inscription round ye. Circumference Sigillum, Provinciarum Nova. Eboraci & in America; which said Seal wee do hereby authorize & direct to be used in the Sealing all Patents & Publick Grants of Lands, and all Publick Acts and Instruments which shall be made & passed in our Name & for our Service within that said Province and the Territories depending thereon. And that it be to all intents and purposes of the same force & validity as any former seal within our said Province, or any other seal whatsoever appointed for the use of any of Our Plantations in America is or hath been.”—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 457. (A footnote suggests that the seal was engraved by Horace “Carm. Seculare.”) See, further, Aug. 11, 1688.

Or on about Aug. 15, Dongan wrote to the “Lord President” of the lords of trade: “A Great part of the Fort & Breast Work which was down 1 have rebuilt, have, and still am repairing the Batteries have them completed & thirty & thirty gun’s there; the Keys of the Officers quarters & am patching & mending ye Soldiers & my own, Dayly the timber & Flank in this Country moultrig away to dust in four or five yeatime.”—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 459.

An order is issued for a draft of every tenth man of the militia of the county, to direct the frontiers of Albany and Schenectady.

11 The council having heard that "the 4th of June at Canada are providing fifteen hundred pair of Snowshews," and letters from Albany expressing apprehension lest the French come "down upon them this Winter," therefore, the militia of the county is ordered to readiness "to go up thither."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), I. 166. Col. Nicholas Bayard is to be in command of the militia here.—Cal. Coun. Min., 54-55.

27 The resolutions of the "Court of Lieutenancy" (see Oct. 16, 1686) are confirmed.—Cal. Coun. Min., 55.

29 The council appointed an alderman.—Cal. Coun. Min., 55. He had held the office ten years earlier.—See Oct. 13, 1677. On Oct. 14, he was installed.—M. C. C., I. 191. With all the other civil magistrates, he was continued in office for 1688-9 (ibid., I. 196-200), a fact which was overlooked in a note by the editor of the Minutes in VIII: 149.

The common council orders "that 5th street to be made by the care of Mr. Van Cortlandt."—M. C. C., I. 190. Formerly, this street was The Strand, or The Waal.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1007.

Andros visits Hartford to establish his authority. He writes the word "liberty" in the bottom of the assembly records of that colony, and demands the immediate surrender of its liberal charter. —See A. Tradition relates that this was secretly taken by Joseph Wadsworth and hidden in an oak-tree.—Winsor, op. cit., III: 335; Bancroft, op. cit., I: 587-88.

10 Hirtherto, Dongan had not succeeded in getting the king to recognize the Iroquois as his subjects; but now a warrant arrives from England authorizing the governor to protect the Five Nations, and to repel the French from their territory by force of arms, should they attack the villages again.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 501-4; Winsor, op. cit., IV: 349; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 326.

24 The common council orders that James Larkin "Deliver the Key of ye 7th City Market house to ye 7th Mayor."—M. C. C., I: 192. This was now the public warehouse.—See July 4, 1686. See, further Feb. 26, 1688.

27 Matthias Nickolls, writing to Maj. Gen. John Winthrop, says: "I was my hap to see at Southold the beginning of this month, at our annual Courts, when the great Guns echoed to us on Long Island side, his Exq's 7th Edmund Andros, welcome back to the rivers mouth, from his progress through Connecticut, where he was accompanied by an honourable suite, amongst whom your worthy name was in his eye. . . . the times are well altered in the reception of Mr Edmund Andros in those parts now, to what they were formerly."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 161.

The consistory of the Dutch Reformed Church, after considering "the great decay of their church building, which there is no hope of repairing," believes "it necessary to inquire after the proper means of erecting a new church." They pass a resolution to solicit contributions, which shall be payable in three installments, on July 1, 1688, 1689, and 1690, respectively.—Ecclus. Rec., II: 930-51. See Dec. 12, 1688; April 4, 1688; Aug. 21, 1688; Dec. 8, 1691.

Prior to this year, a spur or fortification was erected before the gate of the fort—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1827), 170-77. This was called "the 7th New York," 1685, on Miller's plan of "The Fort in New York" (Pl. 23-b, Vol I). It evidently had been removed before c. 1773, as it is not shown on Pl. 46-a, Vol I.

In a memorial to the British board of trade in 1696, Jacob Leiler (2d) and Abraham Gouvenier stated that in 1688 there were in New York province about 1000 fighting men, and that they might be raised 12000 fighting men, from 16 to 60 years of age.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 213.

In or about this year, the French Huguenots (Protestants) had a church "buitting Northward on the Petticoat lane."—Wittmeyer, Hist. Sketch of the Eglise Francaise. There is no record showing that this edifice was erected by the congregation for a church, and the probability is that it was the house of one of the members, so used. Petticoat, Petticoat, or Petticoat Lane was later called Marketfield St.; it extended from Whitehall to Broad St. Part of this street was ceded when the New York Produce Exchange was erecting its building, and that structure now covers the site of the earliest French church in New York. —See The Castello Plan, II: 255-56; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 933, 1007; Man. Comm. Coun. (1862), 679, 682, 743 et seq. This church building was sold, and on July 6, 1704 (p. v.), the corner-stone of a new church, The French Protestant Church, was laid on the north side of Pine St., east of Nassau St.—Greenleaf, Hist. of the Churches, 75; Wittmeyer, op. cit., Eccles. Rec., III: 1528. For the succession of its pastors, see Corwin, A Manual of the Reformed Church in Am. (1902), 1002. Du Similître, writing in or about 1706, asserted that before 1699, the French Protestants, at the beginning of a small number in New York, held their assembly in a certain house in the little street which runs from Broadway to North River past the new house of P. R. Livingston. It was afterwards transferred into the street which runs from Broadway to Broad Street, named Marketfield Street but commonly called Petticoat Lane, from where it was transferred into the present church which was built in 1706.—Translated from a volume, lettered "Papers relating to N. England, N. York, etc., formerly belonging to Du Similître," now in the Kidway Branch of the Library Co. of Phila. Instructions are sent to Dongan to maintain friendly relations with Denunville, the French governor of Canada.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 501-4; Col. State Papers, Am. & W. I. (1688-89), 488.

The common council orders that Anthony Denell: "Shall keep ye 7th Key of ye market house" (the city warehouse—see July 24, 1686) until March 25; and receive 9d. per ton for "Every Night of such Goods as he shall take in the Market house at Wampum" for "Every half Baril." This shall be for the city's benefit.—M. C. C., I: 194. On March 24, Denell's time was extended.—Ibid., I: 195.

Gov. Dongan returns from Albany.—Cal. Coun. Min., 57. See Oct. 25, 1687. Capt. Jervis Baxter, one of the councilmen, had come down from Albany to New York on March 13 with instructions from Dongan "for the Council to consider ways and means to defray the extraordinary charges which the French movement had caused the province. These charges were more than eight thousand pounds; and the Council, finding that New York 'alone is no way able to bear the charge' of supporting the colonies, 'should be invited to contribute.'"—Brohead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 495-96. With the authority of the king's letter of Nov., 1687, Dongan calls on the governments of Pennsyl- vania, Maryland, Virginia, and New Jersey to aid that of New York with money; as New England, "being to help us with six hundred men, and any other assistance cannot be proposed from them."—Ibid., II: 496.

At this council meeting, called by Dongan on his return to New York, and at which he gave an account of his doings at Albany, it was resolved to address the king in support of the appeal to Lord Sandnderland, and to renounce for Dongan from Albany; and in this they stated "that this government has been much diminished by taking 1688 away Pennaquip, the Jerseys, Pennsilvania, and the lower counties of Delaware: that this is the bulwark of all these parts of America; 28 that the revenue is but small, yet the charges very great; that Connecticut in his Majesty's patent from Charles the Second, is added to Boston by the contrivance of the Governor of it and the Clerk of the Colony, and unknown to the major part of the Colony; that the Dutch war has stopped the best endeavors, without some speedy help, this place will be ruined."—Ibid. See A., Feb. 19.

Apr.
The king having issued a proclamation at Whitehall on Dec. 21, last, relative to the queen's expectation of the birth of a child, Dongan issues a proclamation appointing April 11 as a day of public thanksgiving. See "Minister, Elders and Deacons," as representatives of the Dutch Reformed Congregation within this city, petition Dongan that they may be incorporated as "The Minister or Ministers the Elders and Deacons of the Dutch Reformed Church in New York."

The petition states that they "are informed of His Excellency's intention that the church now being built be open within the city," and they desire to be made a "Body Corporate and Ecclesiastical," so that persons contributing to build the church may be safeguarded.—Eccl. Rec., III: 525-53. At the same time, they petition the common council for a grant to them and the church, "to be used for the purpose of a church designed for that purpose, . . . or any other convenient place fit for their church building."—Ibid., III: 525-53. The latter petition is the renewal of one drawn but not presented on Dec. 12, 1686 (q.v.). Although this petition is apparently the one specified as granted by "the power of the Institution of April 21, 1686 (q.v.)," it was again presented on Dec. 8, 1691 (q.v.), and a deed soon executed.

A change in the constitution and government of the province is resolved upon in England. The entire country from the Delaware to the St. Croix, in Maine, is consolidated into one government, and placed under the rule of Sir Edmund Andros. His commission "passed the Great Seal." on April 7, appointing him "Captain Gen'l and Governor in Chief of the Massachusetts Bay, New Plymouth, new Hampshire, Main, the Narraganset Country, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York and East @ West Jersey, and of all the Continent in America from 40: Deg: No: Lat: to the River of St. Croix (Pennsylavna @ Delaware excepted) by the name of formerly of New England."—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 516. By this commission, Andros's authority, which had been conferred upon him in June, 1686 (see A.), and which extended over the colony of Massachusetts Bay, the colony of New Plymouth, and the provinces of New Hampshire, Maine, and the Narraganset country, now bounded on the north by the province of New York and provinces colonized, which are thereby annexed to New England. The powers conferred by this commission are exceedingly broad and strong. For example, he is given authority "to erect raise and build within our Territory and Dominion aforesaid, such and so many forts platforms, Castles, cities, boroughs, towns, and fortifications," as he shall judge necessary; and "any of them to demolish or dismantle as may be most convenient." He is to hold office, or may be recalled at the king's pleasure.—Ibid., III: 537-42.

One of the instructions given by the king to Andros is that the seal which the king gave the province of New York on Aug. 16, 1678, shall be "forthwith broken and defaced," in Andros's presence; and "that the Seal appointed for the said colony of New England be henceforth made use of for all that our Territory and Dominion in its largest extent & boundaries aforesaid." Another instruction is: "You shall transmit unto us by the first opportunity a Mapp with the exact description of all the whole country as far as any discovery shall be made thereof, and of the several fortifications you shall find or erect there." Another is: "And as much as great inconveniencies may arise by the liberty of printing within our said Territory, under your Government, you are hereby by all necessary order to keep any country as far as any discovery shall be made thereof, and of the several fortifications you shall find or erect there." There is: "And as much as great inconveniencies may arise by the liberty of printing within our said Territory, under your Government, you are hereby by all necessary order to keep any country as far as any discovery shall be made thereof, and of the several fortifications you shall find or erect there." There is: "And as much as great inconveniencies may arise by the liberty of printing within our said Territory, under your Government, you are hereby by all necessary order to keep any country as far as any discovery shall be made thereof, and of the several fortifications you shall find or erect there."

1683—88, 532. A parchment, having attached to it the great seal of New England which was recently defaced in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. An historical account of this seal accompanies it, written by Geo. Adlard, of New York, Feb., 4, 1862, and addressed to Luther Bradish, president of the society.
It was published in Man. Com. Coll. (1863), 736 et seq.

It is evident, as Mrs. Van Rensselaer has pointed out (Hist. City of N. Y., ii, 347—51), that the statue is no longer in the old way a capital city.* See, further, Addenda.

Thus Andros began his second government of New York.
He had left it seven years before to be justified with the Duke of York.
In the interval, the province had gained and lost a popular assemblry. Her old governor now revisited familiar scenes to assume almost imperial authority as the viceroy of James the Second.— Brodhead, op. cit., iii; 512; Hist. Mag., 2d ser., i. 1. The loss of the popular assembly is seen in that part of Andros's instructions (of April 16, p. 7) where he is directed "to observe in the passing of laws that the title of every person in New York, Governor and Council be hereafter used and no other."—*Cal. Laws
N. Y.,* ii, 218.

One of Andros's first official acts, after being installed governor at New York, is to write to Minisieur De Denonville, governor placed in the province of Canada, that the king has placed the province of New York and "other parts of his territory," together with the "dominion of New England" (see April 7), all under his command; and he gives notice to Denonville that the king "hath thought fit to own the Five Nations or Cacons of Indians . . . and to protect them as much as he shall think meet."—N. Y. Hist. Coll., i, 552.

The common council orders that a Transport (or conveyance) be drawn "for the peace of Ground formerly appointed for the building of a Church."—M. C. C., ii, 200. The reference here is evidently to the ground petitioned for by the Dutch Church on April 4, 1688 (p. 7). The order appears not to have been carried out, for the same petition was again made on Dec. 8, 1691 (p. 7).

Capt. Francis Nicholson, who is in Boston, having sent to Andros "ye joyfull news of a Princes being borne" (*N. Y. Col.
Docs.,* iii, 552), Andros issues a proclamation at New York announcing the birth of Princess Sophia, sister and heir to the king, as a day of thanksgiving.—M. C. C., i, 199. Dr. Corwin, in annotating the Ecles. Rec. (ii, 935), is in error in stating that a "Princess" was born; it was James Francis Edward.—See memorandum under title "Thanksgiving" in Index of M. C. C., vii, 450.

A slide-light on the character of Capt. Nicholson was revealed by Andrew Hamilton in the course of his argument at the trial of John Peter Zenger, Aug. 4, 1735 (p. 7), when he explained that the first libelling of a governor that he had ever known in America was of Nicholson. He related the circumstances, which, he said,"may look like a romance," and which he presented as an example of the exercise of arbitrary power. The alleged libeller was a parson, whom Nicholson prosecuted, until the proceeding was stopped by order of Queen Anne, "with sundry others set on foot by the same governor, against gentlemen of the greatest worth and honor in that government" (Boston).—Man. Com. Coll. (1856), 477—8.
12
An act having been passed by the Mayor and his council, for raising £2,555 16s. by taxation, before Nov. 1, to pay the charges of the government, and this having been suspended on July 30, it is now ordered by Andros and his council "that ye said act be fully and duly executed according to the tenor and true intent and meaning of ye said act, and that ye persons and respective offices therein mentioned that ye persons and respective offices therein mentioned, are to take notice & conforme themselves accordingly."—Jour. Leg. Coun., ii, xxi, xxii, and xxiv, citing Trumbull's Connecticut Records, iii, 447; also mentioned of this "arbitrary and despotic form of government," overthrown by Leisler in 1690 (ibid.).
The proprietors of West Jersey vote to surrender their government to New-England.—Bacot, op. cit., II: 32.

4. Andrews leaves New York for Boston. "Some days after that Capt' Nicholas delivered in an order" (presumably to the New York council) from Andrews "to view and take an account of the condition of the fort and City fortifications, ammunition of war, &c., the fort being extraordinarily out of repair."—N. Y. Col. Disc., III: 390. Nicholson's report bears date of Nov. 15, 1688 (q. v.).

See A. Also Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., II: 521.

Nov. The assessors' valuation of the several wards is as follows:

2 West Ward, £7,600; North Ward, £7,655; South Ward, £4,954; East Ward, £6,648; Dock Ward, £6,241; Harlem, £1,721; "Bowry," £4140 total, £4,283.1. "Upon which it is Ordered that one and a half & pound shall be forth with Raised upon the people according to the Act."—M. C. C., I: 201. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1689), 520.

15. In pursuance of the warrant directed by Andrews to Nicholson, Bayard, and others, dated Oct. 4 (q. v.), appointing and authorizing them to examine the fort and fortifications of the city, to report what repairs are needed to the buildings within the fort, the palisades and battery, the magazine, munitons, and military stores, and to make an estimate of the cost of repairs, they have taken with them two carpenters, a mason, and a glazier, have made the required surveys, and now report the following conditions:

"The fence about the Fort, the Posts rotten, Several Pannels fallen and according to ye Carpenters now will require to mend ye same 150 Posts at 6d. £3 1s. 5d.

"And for setting up £55, £145.

"Upon the Flag mount there were 6 brass guns, demi Culverins, new Carriages and wheels, only wanting beds and couynes, we guess may cost £12.

"Two brass mortar pieces, the one of 7½ inches, ye other of 9½ inches diameter, the carriages wholly rotten, wants new ones, which will cost £2.

"The whole Platform is rotten and must be made new, for which the will want 600 foot Planck of three inches thick, and 30 sleepers of 20 foot long, which will cost with the workmanship £24. 0s. 3d.

"The wall of the old Battery hangs over, so wants Battresses, to sustain them which will cost £3.

"The old well being fallen in, there wants a new one which will cost £25. [See June 19, 1693.]

"The Magazine of ye fort is six Demi Culverins, upon Carriages. Four half warr, 1 rotten. Are not fit for guns, all wanting beds and couynes, £26. 11d.

This report, containing 14 pages, is hereby offered unto your Excellency by your Humble Servants, Francis Nicholson, Colonel N. Bayard, Wm. Beddick, S. Van Cortlandt, Matthew Plowman, Minvillé.

"Peter King, John and Andrew Muyer, Carpenters, Swert oathers & his son were impelled only to repair the necessary works, making the houses, soldiers' rooms, Courreguards &c. only wind and weather tight which took up the time till the winter and cold weather hindered their works." After that Stephen van Cortlandt got an order from Andros to "furnish all materials for the repaying of the fort, as Cap's Nicholson should order." Nicholson in Oct Van Cortlandt was "sent to make the platformers," and the "said Carpenters" gave Van Cortlandt the dimensions, who "had them sawed and cut by one John Mash & Josiah Halffmar and were ready in the month of March and April" (1689). "The time for the mason's works" Van Cortlandt "had spoken for to be ready when there should be occasion for to use them was reached by new Capt Nicholson to be done out of hand if this unhappy revolution at Boston had not happened."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 599-91.

King James II abdicates the crown and leaves England.—N. Y. Dec. Col. Docs., III: 572. From this day until Feb. 13, 1669 (q. c.), was the "Interregnum," when England was without a government.

"In the year 1688, war broke out in Europe between the French and Spaniards; and in a short time the English joined the Spanish against the French. This war continued nearly to the end of King William's reign—and, during that time, New York became the principal headquarters of the privateers and adventurers from Europe and other parts."—"The Red Sea Men," in Man. Com. Curr. (1897), 461. See also N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 223.

"The first privateer commissioned by the government of New York, which is found to have turned from the legalized capture of enemy's property to the more profitable one of piracy upon the commerce of friendly nations, is William Mason, who received his commission in 1689 [error for May 10, 1690, q. c.], authorizing him 'to sail for Quebec in Canada, to war as to his wisdom and judgment should direct, and to destroy - - - the French interests in Canada, and to seize and make prize of all goods on shore, and vessels at sea belonging to the French king or to Frenchmen, and to kill, slay and injure the people of that nation in any way possible.' Several vessels similarly commissioned sailed from New York about the same time, with instructions to act under Mason as their admiral. Some of these vessels were successful in the design of crippling the enemy's commerce, and brought in several French prizes to the port of New York, which were regularly condemned in the admiralty, and there and no reason to suspect the government, then in power (Lexiter's administration), of any design to countenance any but the recognized system of war. But Mason himself, being less successful in obtaining prize money on the American coast, pushed his adventure to a distant region, then but little known to the commercial world except to slave traders, and cruised along the eastern coast of Africa, near Madagascar, in the Arabian gulf, and in the Red Sea." How he turned pirate, and how his successor in command, Edward Coats, returned to the east end of Long Island in April, 1693, and procured the favour of Gov. Fletcher, who, with his council, benighted by gifts from Coats,—in engaging C. Caw. (1857), 462-65.

In this year, the wind-sail on the Common was destroyed by lighting.—See Nov. 24, 1691.

During this year, or somewhat earlier, the Fly blockhouse, in the Smith's Vly or Valley, was erected.—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (1860), II: 399, 407. Depositions, two years later, recanted the surrender of the Fly blockhouse, in the island of Madagascar, seen Mar. 13, 17, and 18, 1691. Its site was at what now is Wall St. at its intersection with Pearl St. See Pl. 23-a, Vol. I.
The Chevalier De Calleire, of Montreal, gives to the Marquis of Seignelay an account of a project for the conquest of the province of New York—promised by the king of England to the Marquis. William, Prince of Orange, during their lives, and the life of the survivor of them, with the executive power in the princes; after them, on the posterity of Mary only, then on the Princess Anne and her posterity; and then on the posterity of William. New oats of allegiance and abjuration were ordained in place of the abrogated oats of allegiance and supremacy. This instrument—the most important in English annals next to Magna Charta—is known as the 'Declaration of Rights.'

According to the chronological record of the debates in parliament on the "Bill of Rights and Succession," it was under consideration throughout the year 1689.—See Cobbett, op. cit., V. 249-53, 339-41, 345-47, 352, 483, 485. "A Board of Trade and Plantations" is appointed at Whitelock, 16, and ordered to meet Feb. 18 to prepare drafts of proclamations "for Proclaiming their Majesties in the several Plantations and for continuing all persons in their Employments and Offices till further Order."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 572; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Coll. (1869) See A. 12-13.

Information is brought to Linit.—Gov. Nicholson by letter from Philadelphia that the Prince of Orange has invaded England. At the council meeting at Fort James on this day, it is decided to open a number of private letters addressed to persons in New York and Boston, which were bought by the same messenger from Philadelphia, their object being "the prevention off any tumult and the divulging of any strange news." They find the same news is contained in two of these letters. Whereupon it is further resolved "forthwith to send Expresses both by water and land, unto his Excellency Governor Andros Government of the Island of New York, to bring him with this matter." This is accordingly done.—Coun. Min. in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 241-43. This news when given out troubled the Papists.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 591.

The common council appoints a committee to agree with Capt. John Tuder and others about letting "Such Shops in the Market house" as it "may Conveniently Contain; proportionable to the Length thereof."—M. C. C., I: 202. At the next meeting, the committee reported that they had leased to Tuder "a Place To build a Shop on in the Said market House" for the term of three years from March 25, for a rental 40 shillings a year. This appears to have been the earliest attempt to prevent the sale of spirits in the desert kingdom. In this crisis, the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, with other British peers, met at the London Guildhall [Dec. 11, 1688], Broshead observed that there have been the most events about preventing anarchy in the kingdom, and the King declared the present year, 1688, the "Year of the Gendarmerie," and that the King had been in the country for the last three years, and that the King would not go out of the country. This was the first time that the King had been out of the country since the revolution.

"The Convention called by William declared that the throne was vacant by the abdication of James. It was then considered how the vacancy should be filled [Jan. 22, 1689]. The Commons resolved that the "religion, laws, and liberties" of England should be first secured [Jan. 29]. Commons accordingly submitted a report [Feb. 7] reciting the causes of the revolution, and contemplating, among other things, that the forfeited or surrendered charters of the Plantations should be restored. But the clause declaring that all kinds of charters were omitted from the Instrument adopted by the Convention [Feb. 12]. That famous state paper—chiefly the work of Somers—set forth the errors and crimes of James; reviewed his administration; asserted the rights of subjects and Parliament; defined the authority of the sovereign, and then settled the English crown on William, Prince, and Mary, Princess of Orange, during their lives, and the life of the survivor of them, with the executive power in the princes; after them, on the posterity of Mary only, then on the Princess Anne and her posterity; and then on the posterity of William. New oats of allegiance and abjuration were ordained in place of the abrogated oats of allegiance and supremacy. Edward Randolph, writing "From the Common Ga provement that the town made. Bayard remarks on the events in his na

The lieutenant-governor convenes those of the council who are

Boston. He stated that Andros had been secured in the fort at Boston; that they had taken the castle and frigate, and had im prisoned other persons. "This neues was a great surprizall to the Leutenant Governor and Counsell," who resolve, because of the small number (four only) in attendance, "That the Mayor should call the Aldermen and Council Councill forth with to gather together to acquit them with this ill news, and to advise together what is best to be

Upton: Boston and removing any from abroad between England and French and the number of the Council being now few, considering the necessity that all affairs ought to be put in good order, the peace kept and government secured from invasion abroad," it is ordered by the lieutenant-governor and council that the mayor, aldermen, and common council with the chief military officers be called together this after noon, to meet the lieutenant-governor and council at the town hall, to consider what is needed. A letter is sent to the several counties to meet the council in New York on certain days next week.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1689), 246. The news of the war from France, and that the French maltreated the English and Dutch, created "a great fret and tumult in the Towne."—

The four members of the council, Nicholson, Phillips, Van Cortlandt, and Bayard, who are the only ones left out of thirty

At the "General Meeting held at the City Hall," in the afternoon, consisting of the lieutenant-governor, the three mem bers of the council (Maj. Stephen van Cortlandt, Frederick Phillips, and Col. Nicholas Bayard), the aldermen, common councilmen, and military officers (including Jacob Leisler, Charles Ludwick, and others), it is unanimously agreed "that the City be forthwith fortified," and a committee is appointed to see what is needed for this object. It is also agreed "for the more security of the fort since the present garrison is but a very small number that some part of the City militia help the Guard in the fort." It is believed this will "remove all the jealousies of the people," and Col. Bayard is recommended to give suitable orders accordingly.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1689), 272-73. The inhabitants began to keep watch at the fort the following day.—

The justices of the peace and captains of the militia of King's County come to New York to meet the council as requested (see April 27). They promise to do all in their power to keep the people in quietness and defend the country against the common enemy.
They resolve to set sentinels at Coney Island to watch for incoming vessels and give warning.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Capt. Nicholson (the lieutenant-governor), the council, mayor, aldermen, common council, and all the military officers, meet and resolve "upon the fortifying the City," etc. "The City poor and owing to taxes upon the people and the Merchants also beginning to dispute the Customers," Capt. Nicholson proposes that the revenue from the first of May be employed toward the every other of the officers." They add: "We cannot imagine, that any such actions can proceed from any person of quality amongst them, but rather promoted by the rable. And that for the safety off his Excellency's person those measures have been taken, but hope and doubt not before this time the furse of said plejjons may be alliad, and that his Excellency and the rest of the officers may be restored to their former stations, or at least have liberty to remaine in their duties ..."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1689), 251; Hutchinson, Hist. of Mass. Bay. (ed. of 1765), I: 384 and 85. The Boston gentlemen replied that it was not in their power to grant liberty to Andros.—N. Y. Col. Dct., III: 592.

The justices of the peace of the off Citty Borough and East Yaray came and met the [Lieut. Gov.] Governor at New York. As there were no military officers in commission there, a captain, lieutenant, and ensign were given commissions.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc.
Collections (1689), 247-48.

A "Representation," dated Apr. 26, from the committee of trade and plantations, is read at the meeting of the privy council at Hampton Court, regarding the state of the provinces and the war with France. It recommends, among other things, "ye speedy setting of such a government in New-England, New York and ye Jerseys" as will enable the inhabitants of these provinces to oppose their united forces against the French of Canada and Nova Scotia.
It is so ordered by the king and council.—N. Y. Col. Dct., III:
572-74.

All the magistrates and military officers meet to determine where the platffoms shall be made and the guns placed.—N. Y. Col. Dct., III: 595. They resolve "for the safety and welfare of the Governor..." that on "a common place, appointed for the purpose, they find 17 guns throughout the city without carriages. They recommend that four be placed "against the Widow Richardsons;"
three "on a plat forme without the Batterie at the Watter gate to be placed under the flord;" three or four on "the Wharfe by Col.
Dungan House;" and one or two "on the Wharfe Nigh the State house." A committee of carpenters and masons is appointed "to view the places for to make the platforme," and to report what planks, etc., are necessary. They reported on May 6, showing in detail what timber, planks, beams, etc., were needed for stockades, platforms, wheels for gun carriages, breastworks, gates, etc., and a committee was appointed "to provide the materials for the fortifications;" and it was ordered "that the Proclamation for fortifying the City be forthwith published and copies thereof put vp att the State House and att the bridge."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist.
Collections (1689), 275-76.

News reaches members of the council in New York regarding the "Revolutions at the East End of Long Island and of the dissatisfaction of the people there." Letters are sent by the council to Col. Young and Maj. Howell "to pacify the people" as much as they can.—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 592.

A merchant from Boston, one Philip French, is stopped near the French town of St. John about and required to give account of himself. He is told there are sentries on all sides of the town. He is taken to the fort, and on the way the soldiers keep the people back with their bayonets. The commanders, "Mr. Jacob Laylcer and Mr. Charles Lodwick," are sent for, and they examine French "about the present affairs in England, and whether he has any letters for his place."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 578. For Leisler's career, see May 16.

At a general meeting (such as was held daily) of Lieut.-Gov. Nicholson and his council, with the mayor, aldermen and common councilmen of the city, and the military officers, it is ordered "that the Proclamation for fortifying the City be forthwith published and copies thereof put up at the State House and att the bridge" (the customary places for government bulletins).—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 278.

"The Auditor Stephanus Van Cortlandt complaining that the Collector Mr. Matthew Plowman is much backward in making up his accounts, and from information in his hands, the said Collector refuses to pay a Bill drawn upon him by the Leutenant Gouvern. It is ordered that Mr. Plowman be sent for, who coming said he had no money in Cash. Then it was further ordered that the Collector M. Plowman bring in the Secretaries book and papers shewing the revenue both off receipts and disbursements together with his Commission and Instructions and to remain and stay till be hath given an exact account thereof."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 258-59.

Leisler, a farmer, and the council of the province, write from the fort in New York to the lords of trade that the inhabitants of Boston have imprisoned Andros, and several of his council, officers, etc. There is rebellion in Suffolk, Queens, and Westchester Counties. Armed militia have approached as far as Jamaica "in order if they could to make themselves Masters of this City" and for alarming rumours are heard of war with France, "which occasioned a resolution to be made for the new fortifying of this City since all the former [fortifications] ... are suffered to fall to ruine, if not for some part demolish. But how to raise any money for the accomplishing of any such Fortifications no way could be found to resolve us therein as our condition is now." The civil magistrates and military officers of the city have convened, and by their advice it is ordered that all the revenue arising from the customs, excise, and weigh-house be applied toward defraying the expense of fortifications. Plowman's accounts are being examined. Judges appointed for this circuit in the Province.—Nicholas states it has been fatal to the city and province of New York to be annexed to "that of Boston," and if it had continued would have occasioned the total ruin of the inhabitants of said Province."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 574-76.

Certain inhabitants petition the "General Meeting" that "the line for fortifying the said City" be not run "through or before their Lotts of Ground;" but at the next meeting, May 18, there being the rumour of war and the invasion of the French, it was ordered "that the fortifications for this City be laid according to the ancient bounds," as recently ordered.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 258-59.

Jacobs Leisler begins to make his influence felt in the public affairs of the city and province. Col. Nicholas Bayard's narrative of what occurred this year (N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 617) alleged that, while the work on the fortifications was begun with vigour and was soon perfected, it was obstructed by many discords and divisions promoted by the ill-conduct of Jacob Leisler and his associates. Both in convention and elsewhere, they were endeavoring to stir up the minds of the people to sedition and rebellion against the established Authority, and to destroy the Revenue. Upon hopes thereby to be exalted, and raise [heap] some particular benefit.

Leisler, at this time laden with wines on which he refused to pay customs, and "enticed others to do the same." Another narrative (attributed to Bayard) states that the duty on this cargo amounted to more than £100. Leisler contended that the collector (Plowman), being a Papist, was not qualified to act for the Prince of Orange, denying that he had legal power to receive customs. Bayard, however, questioned the sincerity of Leisler's refusal to pay. He intimated that it was for his own private interest; and prefaced his detailed story of the events which followed with the comment, "let the impartial judge."—Ibid., III: 667-68; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. T., II: 382.

To aid the reader in examining the career and studying the character of Jacob Leisler, the following brief summary of his earlier useful life is given. He was a brave soldier, a Protestant German who drifted from the Rhine countries into Holland . . ., the son of a clergyman driven by persecution from the Palatinate to Frankfort-on-the-Main."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. T., II: 184. His name first appears, in records relating to the province of New Netherland, as "Jacob Leister living in Friantfort," in a shipping list of soldiers who embarked April 27, 1660, for New Amsterdam.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 37.

He was then in debt even for his musket (Van Rensselaer, op. cit. II: 184); but he soon began to lay the foundations of an ample fortune. Court records of Jan. 1 (q.v.) and 16, 1665, show him a successful trader in tobacco and other goods at sea.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 47-49; Rec. N. Am., IV: 180. On March 18, 1665, he was married to Elsie Tymens, a step-daughter of Govert Lockerman, a niece of Annetje Janes, and widow of Peter Cornelissen Van derveer, merchant.—Marriages in Ref. Dutch Coll., 28; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. T., II: 182; Hist. N. Y., III: 718-17.

For an account of Leisler's real estate holdings, part of which he acquired by this marriage, see Castello Plan, II: 278-84.

A curious domestic incident stands out in the records of that time and illustrates his manner of living, and his stubborn will. A maid, disinherited and disgraced him by his Majesties revenue both off receipts and disbursements together with his Commission and Instructions and to remain and stay till he hath given an exact account thereof."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 258-59.

When it became necessary to fortify the town, Leisler subscribed, on Feb. 24, 1664, 250 fl. toward this object.—Rec. N. Am., V: 30. He was one of the many signers of the successful remonstrance addressed to Stuyvesant and his council, in the summer of 1664, in which they pictured the expected destruction by the English of the town and its inhabitants, and pleaded that the generous terms of capitulation offered by the foe might be accepted.—N. Y. Col. Doc., II: 248. In October of that year, he took the oath of allegiance to the government of the Duke of York.—Ibid., III: 74-76.

The next year, he contributed 2 fl. toward quartering soldiers (Rec. N. Am., V: 223), and, a few years later, he subscribed 50 fl. toward the ward of Fort James.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 2.

Leisler's name often appeared in court records, as plagiariist, defendant, or otherwise, revealing his enterprise and responsibility. On April 22, 1664, a litigant pleaded that he had paid a debt by drawing upon Leisler to the amount of 312 guilders.—Rec. N. Am., V: 47. That his judgment and fairness in business were greatly respected is indicated by the many times, during those years, that he was made referee or arbitrator by the courts in suits at law. For example, on July 25, 1665, he was appointed a referee to inspect tobacco.—Ibid., V: 281-82. For other occasions of the kind, see Ibid., VII: 70, 162, 246, 259, 376, 401, 406; VIII: 2; Coun. Min., 17. Between 1667 and 1674, besides doing ordinary duty as jurman, (Rec. N. Am., VI: 103, 242, 247), he was one of a committee, on Jan. 7/17, 1674 (q.v.), to render a report on amounts due to workmen at the fort.—*Coun. Hist. MSS., Exp. 21."

He was equally faithful in contributing (Feb. 7, 1667) 12 beavers toward the maintenance of one of the Dutch ministers (Rec. N. Am., VI: 58); and (June 5, 1670) serving as a deacon in the "Reformed Christian Church in New York" (Eccles. Rec., II: 611). Leisler's leadership in opposing what he considered the berys of Domine Rensselaer (see Sept. 15, 1667) was significant of his intensely religious nature, inherited from his father; and significant also of the fanatical role he was later to play so prominently in 1689-91.

The importation of a ship-load of wines indicates that Leisler was one of the heaviest drinkers in the province, revelled that, as early as 1673, he was making large shipments of tobacco, the commodity in which, apparently, he then chiefly dealt. On Oct. 16.

of that year, he was defendant in a suit in which the plaintiff de- mandeed "2000 lbs. of tobacco for freight of 25 hogsheads of tobacco from Virginia, according to charter party." (Rec. N. Am., VII: 16, 18, 19); while, on Dec. 12, he was required to pay the "dead freight" on 25 hogsheads of tobacco, which had not been shipped from Maryland by Leslier's factor as agreed (Ibid., VII: 32).

On Oct. 7, 1689, a commission to make a general assessment upon the "most affluent inhabitants," whose capital was estimated to exceed 1,000 guilders each (wampum value).—N. Y. Col. Doc., II: 685. Their report on Feb. 19, 1694, presented a list of such inhabitants and the amount of their usual wealth. Inhabitants with a fortune of 15,000 fl., was one of the richest men of his time in New Orange. Only six inhabitants were wealthier. These were Fredericks Philipse (sometimes spelled "Philipson" or "Philipson"), 80,000 fl.; Cornelis Steenwyck, 50,000 fl.; Nicholas de Meyer, 50,000 fl.; Oloff Stevens- sen was Cortlandt, 45,000 fl.; Jeronimus Ebbigha, 50,000 fl.; and Cornelis van Ruyven, 16,000 fl. Johannes de Peyster had the same capital as Leslier.—Ibid., II: 699-700.

He continued to fulfill the usual obligations of citizen and man of business. We find his name in the municipal tax list of Nov. 10, 1676, which reveals the fact that only Frederick Philipse and Cornelis Steenwyck had greater estates than his. M. C. Cur., I: 32. The city was his debtor on Feb. 6, 1677, to the amount of $2,100 "in wampum." (ibid., II: 45); and he paid the small real estate tax exacted on July 24, 1677 (ibid., I: 50, 52).

His trip to Europe in the summer of 1675, in his own vessel, when his hogsheads and paid by the Dutch and paid his own ransom, stirred the benevolence of the citizens of New York to pay for the release of his fellow sufferers.—See Aug. 17, 1675. On Sept. 15, 1683, he was appointed by Dongan a member of an admiralcy court to inquire into any piracies or felonies committed by Capt. Nicholas Clough of the ship "Cathamion" of Londo, his officers and men.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 172.

Public and business obligations of considerable importance were duly performed in the succeeding years; it does not appear that he sought these special public duties, which became matters of formal record, when he was chosen a member of the council. He was commissioned captain of militia Sept. 16, 1683.—Ibid., 171. He was appointed a justice of the peace of New York Oct. 13, 1685.—Cal. Coun. Min., 45. He was empowered in 1686 by the inhabi- tants of Suffolk County, L. I., to represent them in a petition to Gov. Dongan regarding their commercial rights and trade prac- tices.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 122, 164. On Sept. 20, 1689 (?), he purchased, as agent employed by Huygenuen about to come from England, land in New Rochelle.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 568. Dongan appointed him, Sept. 21, 1688, as one of several experts to fix damages sustained by Frederick Philipse (the legal owner of the estate, and a member of the council), with his partners, "in the case of the ship 'Beaver.'"—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 159. The records of a contested case, in Nov., 1687, show Leslier concerned in a transaction in salt (ibid., 172); and, in the same month, the governour's council granted him permission "to enter a wreck." (Cal. Coun. Min., 56). One of his various enter- prises was said to be "searching the depths of the sea for treasure from the wrecks of plate ships."—Mon. Coun. Coun. (1689, 758.

For other facts relating to his career (including various family connections and associates), revealing his character and ability with impartial fairness, explaining the trend of events just prior to the actual outbreak of the rebellion, and presenting some of the documentary sources of the history of the rebellion, see Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., Vol. II, Chap. 25; De Peyster, Address before the N. Y. Hist. Soc., Nov. 22, 1884.

One of the ship"Wodderborow delivers to Nicholas verbal instruc- tions given to him by Andros in Boston. Nicholson is required to call the council together and intimate to them the unjust pro- ceedings of the people in Boston by keeping his Excellency prisoner and the other gentlemen upon frivolous pretences off their own without any just or reasonable excuse. They are to go "to send Coll. Hamilton and Coll. Smith to Boston with commission under his excellency and the other gentlemen to be at liberty that they may come amongst you. They are to "take special care to keep Albany in quiet and endeavour not to let the Indians know that his Excell- ency is prisoner," and they are to send a slop to Pemaquid to relieve him as well. There is a communication in a similar tone to the governor which he was anxious to have delivered to the king's business to swear to the truth of his message. They then order that "the Kings Barke should be repaired if occasion should bee to he, and that the Mayor [Van Cortlandt] should see the May- same done."}

Hamilton and Smith are summoned by letter, and come to New York. Both express their desire and willingness to serve Andros, but make the following objections to going to Boston: Hamilton states that he "finds him selfe obliged by a Commission of Edmond and Andros, to be presente in person," and Cortlandt is off Conneticut>[Pla]s in East Yarraz, which are to be kept the first, second and third Wednesday in June and also that the people there is still in quiet and fears that his absence from those Courts might throw the people in mutiny or rebellion and since he came in New Yorke finds himself still in an upruse and disaffected to his Excellency by reason off the rumors they had from people coming from Boston did think it not advisable in these dangerous times to act any further for fear it would bring the place in actual rebellion." Smith, on his part, states that he lives "att Seatalbett the middle of Long Island were the people already absconse of this governour and taking him to be a papist or a friend of them fears if hee should go to Boston that the people in his towne would rise and plunder his house." Nicholson and the council, therefore, "seeing the uprores in all parts of the Govenny," the people being "incensed against his Excellency by the libels and other reports from Boston," and having received letters from Boston that "they refuse to set his Excellency att liberty," and that Brockholts and others "are taken att Pemaquid," decide "to forbear acting in the premises till they see the minds off the people better satisfied and quieted."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1685), 264-66.

During this month, the governor's council, led by Mayor Van Cortlandt, endeavours to suppress mutiny throughout the province, repair fortifications, pay the troops, and collect the revenues. "he people worked hard at the City fortifications, but M'De Peyster having bought the land [at Wall Street] from the Mayor of the Dutch Garden, I: 238[38] where the fortifications lay under which he have not the new fortifications laid where the old ones lay, but would have them laid out further, which caused a great trouble." On May 22, the common people, who were very willing to work to found the town conspiciuous center, presented an incoherent petition to the council, which Van Cortlandt answered as best he could.—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 592-93.

This petition is described in the minutes of the "General Meet- ing" as "A Paper, . . . brought to this Board by Coll[?] Bayard which was delivered ranto him last night in the presence of the Lieut[?] Governo[?] by severall of the Inhabitants of this Towne containing several jealousies and demonstrations of their dis- turbed minds." Van Cortlandt "gave them satisfaction of almost all their desires except the last article concerning Coll[?]. Dunyan who they desired might come and live in Towne as formerly and not to depart this side the Towne constitution or center. The Mayor and Lieut[?] Governo[?] said that Coll[?] and Capt[?] Lodwik return the petition to the people and answer them verbally that two or three messengers shall be sent to Coll. Deygan for to desire him to return to this place to remove all jealousies of his departure provided they doe promise upon Oath to their respective Captains that they will doe no harme to his person."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1686), 284-85.

Nicholas Bayard and Abraham de Peyster purchase from Gov. 25 Dongan land north of Wall Street, known later as "the De Peyster Garden." On Oct. 4, 1693, the land was partitioned.—Libor Deeds, XXV, 61-62; XXXII, 25-27. For description of the De Peyster Garden, see I: 238.

Nassau Street was surveyed and laid out before the conveyance of this date of Dongan's land to Bayard and De Peyster, for this conveyance refers to it as "a certain piece of ground in breadth six and twenty feet laid out and surveyed for [street];"—Am. Rep., Am. Soc. and Hist. Pres. Soc., (1916), 130-31. This deed is recorded in Liber Deeds, XXXI: 25-27. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1006.

Hendrick Jacobsen, a corporal in Capt. de Peyster's company, 30 acting under orders from Lieut. Henry Cuyler, who commands the trained bands in the fort, undertakes "to place a sentinel at the salt-port in the night, and council requests that he may be sent back to the King's Soldiers." Then Cuyler and Jacobsen go to Lint-Gov. Nichloos, who, seeing Jacobsen, threatens him with a pistol and drives him out of the fort.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), May 30. The Relator alleged that Nicholson had sold to overthrown the government at New York, begins. At a meeting of the council, Lieut.-Gov. Nicholson informs them "that most part off the City's militia where in rebellion, That noe commanders, either from him selfe or their Coll. were in any ways regarded or obeyed, That he was Credibly informed some of the officers were insubordinate, and if they were off it, and therefore desired the Mayor to convoynce this afternoon at the City hall the Court of Mayor Aldermen Comon Coucill and all the military officers of this City for to advise with them off this matter off great moment."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1865), 268.

At a meeting of all the magistrates and officers at the town hall, Nicholson informs them "that divers of the Inhabitants were very factious and rebellious." Several of the magistrates, and all the others, "protested against such people," declaring "they would with all their power stand up for the good of the Government and Constitution of the state, the laws of England and the public peace, and that in rebellion, that they would obey neither him nor their colonel, and that some of the officers were "the instigators and inflamers" of it.—N. Y. Col. Dict., III: 593.

Hendrick Cuyler, who had in the fort with half a company of soldiers. Capt. Nicholson would not suffer him to set a sentinell at the Sally Port, and, when he told Capt. Nicholson of it, that he was threatened and his Corporal to be pistolated and that Capt. Nicholson would fire the Town (see May 30). This Nicholson denied, and explained the circumstances as they occurred. What he had said to Cuyler was: "I rather would see the Towne on fire than to be commanded by you." This opened a feud between Cuyler and Nicholson, in which Cuyler's commission as lieutenant was taken from him. Cuyler's captain, Abraham de Peyster, also had a controversy with Nicholson. Van Cortlandt, in describing later to Andros the events of the day, said—

"We heard the drums beat and the Towne full of noise, and seeing the people rise and run together in arme Mr. Phillips and I went to Jacob Leylaker's door where the people met and endeavour'd to allay them but to vain, they marched to the fort where Henry Cuyler received them, in 3 hour's time the fort was full of men armed and inrag'd, no word could be heard but they were sold, betrayed and to be murdered, it was time to look for themselves." Nicholson then, on demand, gave up the keys of the fort. For details see N. Y. Col. Dict., III: 597–94.

"The Inhabitants of New York, Col. Leyller and Lieut. Col. Bayard, observe, in regard to Nicholson's surrender of the keys: "This was indeed an important decision, for it left the mutineers to their own course, men who were not simply civilians, but who were enrolled and in service as militia and were thus properly subject to military discipline. It sealed the fate of the Andros régime in New York as effectually as did the Boston uprising of April 19 in New England."

Another account of the events of the day is given in the minutes of the "General Meeting:"—"The Inhabitants of New York rysing this afternoon have taken possession of the Fort, disarmed the soldiery, and came with a squadron armed to Court, demanding the keys of the Garriton and with force would and will have them they forced Capt. Lodwick to come into the Towne hall and came there armed demanding the keys againe and would have them delivered to Capt. Lodwick, the Lieut. Gen. seeing himself forced asked the advice of this Board what to doe in this case.

"This Board for to hinder and prevent bloodshed and further mischief and for endeavouring to quiet in the minds of the people think it best considering they being forced to itt to let them have the keys." In considering the problem of ways and means to "reduce them from their ainst the city, etc," a great variety of opinion that there is noe way to reduce them by force," and that "they be lett alone for some time." It is thought best, however, to remove the money from the fort to the house of Frederick Phillips.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 288.

Still another account of the revolution is given by the council of New York in a letter to the Earl of Shrewsbury on June 10—

"Fort James was seised by the Rable whilst the Lieutenant Govr and Council with all the Civill Majestates and Military officers except Capt. Leisler were went at the City Hall to commit w'th might be advisable tending to the common safety of the City and allaying of all Up roar and Rebellion."—N. Y. Col. Dict., III: 58.

A statement in writing, made on May 31, evidently prepared but not signed by Leisler, gives his reasons for taking the fort. It is entitled "A Declaration of the Inhabitants Souldiers Belonging under the Severall Companies of the Train Band of New York," Affidavits taken the latter part of February, 1691, brought out other details of the events of May 31 and the days that followed. These are printed in the Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), II: 266–33.

From this time until Aug., 1692, there was no recognized government in New Jersey, on account of conflicting claims.—Bancroft, op. cit., II: 32.

Although William and Mary have not yet been "proclaimed amongst us, no ships as yet being arrived to us from England," the militia of New York prepare an address to the new king and queen, no bearing from Barbadoes of their being proclaimed. This address expresses joy over "our deliverance from Tyranny, popery and slavery." It states that the government here has been lately mostly under Papists, who have "in a most arbitrary way swrverted our ancient priviledges making us in effect slaves to their will contrary to the laws of England." This was chiefly affected by the Papists, who are known enemies to our Religion and liberty." The militia states that they have taken possession of the fort in this city, "disarming some few papists therein and do keep and guard the fort against all your Majesties enemies whatsoever until such time your Majesty's Royal will shall be further known, wholly submitting ourselves to your Majesties pleasure therein," etc. The address further states that "Our late Governor Sir Edmund Andross" exercised "a most arbitrary commission procured from the late King, most in command over us being bitter papists." It also states that "Our Lieut. Gen. Capt. Leisler was by a popular voice of this city contrary both to his promises and pretences, countenancing the Papish party, decyng to exclude both Officers in the custom house and Souldiers in the fort, being most Papists, contrary to the known laws of England," etc.—N. Y. Col. Dict., III: 583–84.

Leisler publishes a proclamation expressing his intention to preserve the Protestant religion and "the fort of this City, to the end that we may avoid and prevent the rash judgment of the world, in so just a design." He declares that on "the safe arreval of the ships that we expect every day from his royall Highness the prince of Orange with orders for the government of this country," etc., he will "execute the said orders punctually."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), II: 3–4. See also Winsor, op. cit., V1: 139–42.

Information is brought to Nicholson and his council that four or five ships are seen in the bay. "Capt. Jacob Leisler comanding in the fort gave the sign of an alarm by firing off guns and beat of drummany and order of the town and Col. Bayard to "act in this juncture by vertue off his commission as Collorell of the Regiment and give suitable orders." He had at first declined to appear in arms except as a private soldier, "Since his comands as well by officers and soldiers had been soe often disobeyed and the government not being in state to support his comission whilst the fort was detained from the Lefien's Gouernour by force."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 169–69.

Armed men board a vessel from Barbadoes of Cooey Island, and seize one John Dinschington. They bring him before Leisler at the fort, and take newspapers from him, including a London Gazette of Feb. 14–15, 1691, containing the proclamation of William and Mary as king and queen. Dinschington has difficulty in recovering them, but as soon as possible delivers them to "his Honour the Lefien's Gouvernour."—N. Y. Col. Dict., III: 586.

Referring to the events of this day, Van Cortlandt wrote to Andros (on July 9):

"Capt. Nicholson sent for Mr. Bayard and me at the house of Mr. Phillips where he lodged, saying that a message was sent by Capt. Lodwick, that an expres was come from Long Island reporting that 4 to 5 Ships were seen within Sound. We sent and I went my board through all the Town, but that could not find the man that brought said news. Immediately Capt. Leyller gave the alarm which created such a tumult that some were ready to fall upon us thinking really that the French ships came.

"The people all mett before the fort, would not obey their Officers, left them and run in the fort to Jacob Leisler."—N. Y. Col. Dict., III: 594.

Col. Bayard relates to the council how most of the soldiers of June four companies, while "in arms at the place off Parade before the 4th day before, had disobeyed commands, had rebelled, and gone to the fort to side with Capt. Layster [Leisler] and committed insufferable insensibilities." He also complains that Leisler, meeting him in the custom-house, used "filthy and scurrilous expressions" to him, calling him "a Coll. [colored] off a tirannical people... he would see him hanged," etc.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 260.

Leisler writes to "the Governor and Committee of Safety at Boston," in part as follows:

The Llevt. Governor Nichols is departed last night without giving leave. It is believed Col. Dongan has layen in the bay this sixteen days. . . . I have made one full Inventory of the fort with guns and ammunition, and found of 33 great guns but fifteen fit to use of 50 barrells powder was but one that could goe 7 degrees . . . the fort is guarded by five companies two watchs 15 company per night, and the Capt whose watch it is for that tyme Capt of the fort, the Collector in the Custome house is a rank papist, I cannot get the other Capitaines to resolve to turne him out but [he] acts still as before . . . sir Edmond Andross & his wicked crew have car ribbed the Records out of this country to Boston," etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II, 3, citing a "Vol. in Sec's Office, endorsed, Papers &c., in Leisler's time."

The council deems it "most safe for the Leften. Governor to depart for England by the first ship, for to give an account of the desperate and deplorable state of the government, and to pray for some succours. It resolves also "that the Court of Mayor, Aldermen and Comon Council be conceaved and to desire their opinions whether it be not advisable to send to the severall Capitaines off the City, or such off them as have encouraged the rebellion of the people, and to protest against them for all the losse, damage, and blood-sheds that shall or may arise by occasion of 8th rebellion." Particular reference is made to several offences already committed, such as "For the detaininge off the Fort James from the Lt Governor," etc. The court of the mayor, etc., was convened accordingly.—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 270-71.

This general meeting, consisting only of the lieutenant-governor the council, and aldermen, but not the common councilmen, met at the house of Mayor Van Cortlandt. They complained of the "many insolencies the people in the fort committed," and Nicholos directed two of the aldermen to ask the officers (captains of militia) to come to the meeting, but some of them would come.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III, 595. Leisler's reply to this summons was that "he would not come neither to the Governor Council Mayor or Aldmen nor had not anything more to doe with them." The board resolved that a protest be drawn against all the captains, excepting the mayor, and blood-sheds that shall or may arise by occasion of 8th rebellion.

The committee of safety appoints Leisler captain of the fort, "Till orders shall come from their Majesties." He is promised aid, when needed and demanded by him, "from the city and county to suppress any inst Yeomy & prevent all disorders."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III, 7.

The lieutenant-governor and council resolve "that the three gentlemen off the Council dispose off the Kings Barcke, woodboat and pinace, either by sale or hire as they shall see cause since the same key upon decay."—Coun. Min., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 271.

The council of New York writes to the Earl of Shrewsbury expressing delight on learning from Barbadoes and Bostor of the Prince and Princes of Orange being proclaimed king and queen of England. They state that "by the means and ill contrivances of some disaffected and dangerous persons all manner of Government is totally overthrown here," as in Boston, "whereby the state of this City (who depends wholly on Trade) is become very desperate, no person being safe either in Person or Estate which undoubtedly will cause its utter Ruin unless prevented by sending some Forces. For on the 30th day of May last [q.v.] the Fort James was seized." The letter of the council continues: "And since we are assured sufficiently that although Orders from his now Majesty should arrive for the continuance of the Persons formerly entrusted in the Government that no such orders would be obeyed. We have therefore thought it advisable that the Lieut. Governor Capt. Francis Nicholson do depart by the first ship for England to render an account of the present deplorable state of June affairs here, most humbly praying that his Majt' will be graciously pleased to order the City & Provint to send you word of the present exigency & necessity requires." The letter is signed by "Fred Flyppes," "St. Courtland," and "N. Bayard."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III, 585-86.

Nicholson leaves secretly for the Netherland, and there meets Dongan, who has gone to sea but been forced to return by rough weather. Nicholson, unable to persuade any of one ship owners or captains to accept him as a passenger, bought an interest in a bargeantine and cargo, and so sailed on June 24. Van Cortlandt, in relaying the event on July 9 to Andros, explained: "He doth of his own accord have left his service to go out on a bargeantine going over there here, for they have several times threatened to fetch him back and put him, firebrand Phillips, Mr Bayrd & me in prison."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III, 595.

Leisler changes the name of Fort James to Fort William, as appear by a letter of this date which he wrote to Major Nathan Gold.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II, 4. This name was retained until the coming of Slaughter.—See March 24, 1691.

Leisler writes to "the Governor of Boston" from "fort wmr":—I am daily working in the fort with sixteen carpenters & twenty men which I shall continuow till it is truly in good posture of defence, I am digging up the old wall [well which was filled up by Coll. dongan I intend to stockaced of the fort round and hope within three weeks if it please God to have it compleat," etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III, 5. Regarding the wall, see Nov. 15, 1688; Aug. 5, 1689.

Leisler puts Peter Delany and George Brewster in charge of the customs-house, and appoints himself the councilman. He also appointed to secure the fort at New York on behalfe of King William and Queen Mary."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III, 596, 668, 695. See also, Dec. 11.

Maj. Nathan Gold (or Gould) and Capt. James Fitch, delegates from the "Court" of Connecticut to Leisler, arrive at the fort. Having some printed papers of news, they give them to Leisler, who, finding amongst them a printed Proclamation to proclaim King William and Queen Mary King & Queen over England & Ireland, requests "the use of that paper for one hour or two," and has "the drum beaten and the King and Queen proclaimed in the forenoon."—From Stephen van Cortlandt's narrative of July 9 to Andros, N. Y. Col. Docs., III, 595.

Of this day's events, Van Cortlandt further said: "About 3 O Clock they sent for me to be at my house, I went home there, the 2 Hartford Gentlemen and our Capt come with their Halberders, being set down Leysslaer asked me whether I would not proclaim the King and Queen, I told him it was done already. He answered if I would not do it he would do it at the Towne hall, I told him he might doe what he pleased: They fell out Call'd me a Papist, or Popullly afflicted, and several abusive words in my house; At that Mayor Gold and Capt Delaury did such much along to the Town Hall where they should proclaim their Matjes. I told them I would acquaint the Aldermen with it which they approved off, and gave one hours time, I sent for the Aldermen, who came and resolved that we would waite upon them. When they came at the Town hall Leysslaer comes and would have me proclaim the King, I answered, He that read it before the fort can read it here, I have no Clarke: Upon which he falls into a rage saying if it was to sett up a Tyrannical King, a Prince of Wales, then he would doe it, Yor a Traitour, a Papist, &c. and made the people just ready to knock me in the head. Others said, 'Tak hold of that Rogue, So I was for to answer for myself, saying, that Leysslaer told a false untruth, I did not hinder the reading or proclaiming of their Matjesyes &c. These Gent. would not let me goe, but kept me fast, and persuaded me to go along to the fort, which I dide; Coming in the fort they and the City & Provint soe much that they fell to the Shriffee, took his sword and abused him sadly. They took Alderman Crundell and turned him out the fort. After that Mr French and Mr John Smith. They sent and fetcht Mr Middleton's sword from his side at Mr Petties. I expected the same. Went through the people out the fort. Going out, one of them asked me if I d'nt want your sword, I said no. See also May 15, 1699. Another proclamation of William and Mary was made by Leisler on Dec. 10 (q.v.).

Mayor Van Cortlandt is given by William Merritt a printed proclamation from William and Mary, dated Feb. 14, 1689, continuing in office all Protestant Gentlemen on the first list of last December. Mis deputys were sheriffs, justices, collectors, etc. He sends for the aldermen
The king, having received letters from Nicholson and others containing reports of Nicholson's faithful services, authorities and friends to take upon himself "the Government of the said Province," calling to his assistance those persons who had refused to inhabit, or as many as he should think fit.—Ibid., III: 606.

The king's letter of July 30, signed also by Nottingham, was sold by Henkel, Phila. (Item No. 766), Oct. 22, 1719.

At the quarterly session of the court of general sessions, the records now before the following variety of cases appearing in succession, the proving of a will, the apportionment of an estate, the report of inquisitions into two deaths by drowning, and the sentencing of a thief to the whipping-post.—General Sessions of the Peace, Vol. I, August, 1689. In general, however, cases appear to have been reserved for this court when the royal authority was in question, the plaintiff appearing as "Dom Rex." One such case is printed by Peterson & Edwards in N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, appendix, p. 409.

Col. Nicholas Bayard, who is still in Albany (N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 610), writes to Capt. Nicholson: "It is greatly feared no sudden orders or reliefe arrives from His Majesty that some great missehe [sic] will befall, for the abuses and threatenings of Leisler and his rabble encrease daily to impressio, plunder and massacre those who will not acquiesce, although they do submit to their illegal proceedings."—II. 472. New Jersey.

Van Cortlandt, writing to Capt. Nicholson, states that Leisler, Churchill, and Stoll have made a new well, using the planks provided by Van Cortlandt and Nicholson; they have also made the platforms and carriages just as Nicholson had ordered; and "are prepared to stockade the State gaol, if it be not too formidable, and have made a battery behind the fort upon the flat rock to the westward." One Mr. Wilson, who had been sent by Leisler to proclaim the king and queen in New Jersey, fell out of a canoe at Staten Island and was drowned; he was "buried in a great state, the whole town inlaid, Every man and woman gueves, all ships and vessels their flagge" while staff, firing all when he was carried to the grave. The Kings flagg at the fort halle staff, all the men upon the Fort in arms, the Drums beating mornfully the guns firing continually till he was in the grave. His death is much lamented by them, as being a man that stood up for the liberty of the people and protestant Religion." Another account of the drowning gives the name as "Mr Cox."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 609, 617.

Continuing, regarding the conduct of Leisler, Van Cortlandt explains: "Their threats, insolencies, abuses, falsities and lies unlawful actions and mischeefe etc are so many and unsufferable that if use speedy releif [sic] and orders doe come from England many of the Inhabitants will leave the city and goe to live in the country, for fear of life and Estate, for they imprison whom they please, and take out of prison those that are there for debt, they take peoples goods and crops and if hindered by justices of the peace, they come with great numbers and fetch it out of the Justices house by force, and doe what they please, that see their Captains can no more Rule them—It troubles them that they did not put you in prison [i.e., Lieut.-Gov. Nicholson] and seized upon your papers, they there would have found the reason, for you are a papist and so is thine zones and have severall witnesses as they say against you both."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 609-10.

In a letter to Gov. Treat of Connecticut, Leisler reports the following preparations for defence:—He has used "all the diligence imaginative" to fortify and repair the fort. The walls (all) is completed (see Aug. 5), and there are some feet of "very good water," which is "16 feet deep." All the platforms are renewed, and all the guns substantially mounted. The powder-house will be ready on this date, and the "pouder" (possibly error for platform) "is made good and elevates the engine from 13 to 26 degrees." There are 6,000 lbs. of the king's powder in the magazine. Too lbs. of "the best spoiled pouder for salutations." About 100 arms are "well fixed." He states that "there was a battery under the fort, which being guise demolished and ruined In place of which I am making an half moon of 100 foot over grass which defends the firing of both rivers & also the coming in, and it is defended easily by the fort." Stockades and sod are being obtained "to stockad & breastwork the fort according to your advice for which I am obliged & hope within fourteen days if it please God to compleat all . . ."

He also states that when Captain Cuyler's company was at work at "the spurre," and wanted stone to finish it, they "resolved to pull down the pigeon house of Col. dongane which was made of the stove soe missing & went armed with collours & drum without order; & they were other wise loaded with loads of stone, & they left of & had done very little damage.

They intended at the same time “to break some wall and stairs at Grahame house made of the same stones” (as those desired), but 56 loads were given for that. He states they are “complet 53 men in the fort.”—Doc. Hist. N. Y., II: 12. The “half moon battery to which he refers was situated within the enclosure of the present Battery Park, a little south of Battery Pl., on the hie of Greenwich St. It is shown on the Miller Plan of 1605, Pl. 23-a, Vol. I. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

Capt. George McKenzie, in a letter to Nicholson, recounts his recent experiences with Leisler and his men. Having returned from Albany at 11 o’clock on the night of Aug. 11, McKenzie requested the skipper to set him ashore “above the wind mills” (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961), in order to save the letters he carried from being opened by Leisler’s men. On the following day, he was ordered to appear at the fort, but refused to obey the summons without proper warrant, “but they & all that was seized were sent to the “in the broad way,” and taken to the fort. Questioned by Leisler, McKenzie denied being a Papist, or “Popishly affected,” and declared that, “in all the six years” he had known New York, he had never “so much as out of curiosity looked into their [Catholic] Chappell.” After a lengthy examination, he was put to him, and answered, McKenzie was allowed to go. He reports to Nicholson that “Sir Edmund [Andros] got out of prison and escaped as far as Rbid Island, but was there seized on, and it is reported that Col: Dongan is likewise kept prisoner, who went thither much about the same time with a design to sell Martin Vineyard, upon which, foolish and ridiculous reports were raised, viz: that they were to join together and with I know not how many men, to come to take the fort.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 612-14.

16 The committee of safety issues a commission to Capt. Leisler to be “Commander in Chief of the said Province to administer such Oaths to the people, to issue out such Warrants, and order such Matters as shall be necessary & requisite to be done for the preservation and protection of the peace, of the inhabitants taking all ways, seasonable advice with Militia and Civil Authority as Occasion shall require.”—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), II: 14-15.

19 Leisler writes to King William and Queen Mary a letter, which he sends “by the express hand Joret Stoill the Ensigne of Your Majesties fort,” giving his account of events since the imprisonment of Andros in Boston. He accuses Nicholson of a design to “lyre the tower,” for which reason the captains seized the fort. He states that on June 22, when he proclaimed the king and queen, they had a “miraculous delivery of a fire which has been kended in three several places upon the Teret of the Church in the fort 6000 lb powder being next under the same roof and suspected to be done by one Papist who had been there before and was discovered by one Neger,” etc. He tells about the committees formed in the neighbouring counties and in New York, the electing of himself and Mr. Andros to the Houses of Assembly together with his Majesties agent, “in authority which he has exercised from the first of July. He says: “I have caused to mend, and make most all the gun carriages, there being not above 8 or 10 able to make use of, all the rest were sunk upon their platforms, which I have caused all to be made new with the最快 and stoutest, and if the better defence have caused one battery to be made at the River side at the west of the fort, where I have planted seven great guns—I am now mending the breast works and palisading the fort round, and the well in the fort, which was filled up by Col: Dongan is made new again and gives proving to good effect, the sally port being quite rotten and ruined is reused and in good condition . . . the city is fortified at the land side with good palisades and in several places there are more guns—I have fifty men in the fort, which the country has promised to pay, and above that, the train boards, mounts every night with one company to the guard, so that we watch for our conservation,” etc. He states that Mayor Van Cortlandt has gone to Albany to join Col. Bayard.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 614-16.

A “List of the Papers delivered to the Ensigne Mr. Joost Stol sent to England” has been translated from the original Dutch, and is printed in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Coll. (1668), 297-98.

The king’s court at Whitehall declared his pleasure “that two Companies of Foot of sixty men in each Company besides Officers, be forthwith raised, for their Mat’s service in New York, to be carried thither on board the ship, which shall be appointed by the Right Honourable the Commissioners of the Admiralty, to carry the Governor of New York to that Government, and His Mat’s further pleased to order that the said two companies be paid out of the Revenue here in England until the Government of New York be settled.” It is ordered, also, by the king that £60 be paid to Henry Slaughter, the governor of New York, for buying presents to be given in the king’s name to the Five Nations of Indians, bordering upon New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 175. Also Addenda, Sept. 16.

In a manuscript record of this date regarding Jacob Leisler, “To ye fort of New York,” complaint is made against Andros; it tells of guns mounted at the fort, and compares the present with the earlier state under the Dutch government.—From a MS. volume in Mass. Hist. Soc., Prince collections (“Letters and Papers 1656-1720”).

One Nicholas Brown signs an affidavit that in July or August, 1696, he saw Nicholson exercising his devotions as a Papist.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), II: 17. On Sept. 26, two workmen named Meyers made an affidavit before Leisler that, 00 orders from Nicho-lon, they helped the Roman Catholic priest. John Sloughter, put the “Images erected by Col’ Thomas Dongan in the fort” to “a better room in the fort,” where they were ordered “to erect all things” as the priest directed. This was after the departure of Andros, when it was supposed Nicholson “would defend and establish the true Religion.”—Ibid., II: 28.

Nothingworth writes to the lord president regarding the new governor for New York.—See Addenda; and Sept. 2, supra.

John Pell, lord of the manor of Pelham, conveys to Jacob Leisler a tract of land constituting the present township of New Rochelle. This is for a consideration of £5,675; 5s. sterling. The tract is described as “lying and being within said manor of Pelham, containing six thousand acres of land, and also one hundred acres of land more, which the said John Pell and Rachel, his wife, do freely give and grant for the French church erected, or to be erected,” etc.—Schart, Hist. of Westchester Co., I: 27. This was in truth for the Honourable Governor Dongan, acting in large command from England.—Mon. Com. Coun. (1862), 752.

In a letter written by Col. Bayard from Albany, it is stated, as the reason why Andros was appointed in Dongan’s place, that:—“Millibourn arriving in New York from Holland it was reported, that the late King James had sold this country to the French, and because Governor Dongan would not be such an ill person as to deliver it he was removed and Andros put in his place who with me and some others had undertaken to surrender it unto their power, but this Iye as all the rest having no root sufficiently vanished so they are daily inventing new ones to keep up the people in their madness but it will not continue.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 612.

An affidavit is entered among the records of the committee of safety showing, by various incidents, the fear which the people of New York and vicinity have of the Papists.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), II: 17-18.

By unusual effort, Leisler succeeds in procuring the election of his son-in-law, Robert Walters, as alderman of the South Ward.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 674; M. C. C., I: 204.

At a common council held at the city hall, new aldermen, assistant, and constables are selected from all the wards, Peter Delany being continued as senior constable.—M. C. C., I: 677. The two meetings of the old board were held, on Oct. 5 and 7, at the house of Alderman William Meekitt, with Mayor Van Cortlandt presiding.—Ibid., I: 205, 206. On Oct. 14 (q. v.), a new city government, under Leisler and his followers, began.

Exposés & dyett for prisoners & for a Treatt to St Edmond Andros.—M.C.C., I: 206. Buckmaster was an innholder, and these payments for services, etc., indicate the interest of various persons, public and private, centring in the taverns. On the same date a payment of £16 0s. 8d. was made "for two Sessions Expenses at ye house of ye Sheriff Party."—Ibid. Buckmaster's house was appointed in 1694 as the place for leasing the dock (ibid., I: 538), at which time he was still an innholder.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (40 ed.), II: 237–39.

Col. Bayard, writing to Andros, who is still a prisoner, states: "To Leyseler tooke yesterday [Oct. 5] his saite in ye Govr pewe at Church, with a large carpet before him; . . . Henry Cuyler y^2 betrayed ye Fort, a silly fool and coward is made Major of ye Regiment and Gorsit y^ Mason [Gregor Dyckingk] Capt in his room. The roome of his Councill it [is] said [is] one Samuel Strotes, P[De] Lanoy, Sam Edsals & Jac. Milborne who is also Secretary. The Committee [committee of safety] being laid aside."—N. Y., Col. Docs., III: 636. For the creation of the council, see Dec. 11.

Leysler, as commander-in-chief (he did not act as lieutenant-governor), now assumes control of the city's affairs as representative of Protestant freemen, and procures the election by popular vote of Peter Delano as mayor, Joanna Johnson as sheriff, and Abraham Gouverneur as clerk. His proclamation, "At Fort William ye 14 octo of 1689 & in ye first Year of their Majesties Reign, it's enacted, etc. Whereas ye Comittee of Safety have appointed Me to Conforme ye Civil magistrates & officers for ye City & County of New York chosen by ye Protestant freemen of S^{2} City & County of NYork According to Returns Made by virtue thereof I doe hereby according Conform Peter De La Noy to Be mayor Joannes Johnson Sheriff & Abraham Gouverneur Towne Clerke for S^{2} City & County of NYork To Continue in their S^n Stations acc̄ording to ye true intend & meaning of ye act of Said Comittee. [The aldermen and assistants are also confirmed by name.] Therefore are all Inhabitants hereby required to give due obedience to ye^2 Magistrates & officers & are to acknowledge the same accordingly."—M. C. C., I: 206–7. Delano's commission as mayor is dated Dec. 12, 1689.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 188.

Up to this time, the mayor had been appointed by the provincial governor and council. After the Leisler regime, up to the Revolution, the mayors were appointed by the city, until 1821, the appointment was by the governor of the state; after which, until 1834, it was by the common council. For a brief sketch of the life of Peter Delano, see Man. Com. Com. (1853), 390.

At the first meeting of the common council under Delano, it is ordered "that ye Late Mayor Stephen Van Cortlandt, with his list of yeirth Comittee & ye City Charter as also ye City Seales with all other Papers & Books with might Be in his Custody Belonging to S^{2} City & County."—M. C. C., I: 258. There evidently was no response, for a more peremptory order was sent on Oct. 16. The high constable reported back that he delivered the order "to ye wife of Mr Cortlandt & that she did throw it away out ye doors."—Ibid.

At the next meeting of the common council, a complaint was drawn up "to Capt Jacob Leisler y^2 Coahnd in chief," reciting these occurrences, and asking "Protection in ye Pmises . . . that ye y^2 Mr Cortlandt may Be Constrained to Performe his duty."—Ibid., II: 209–10.

About this time, Mayor Van Cortlandt, to save his life, is forced to escape to Albany, where Col. Bayard is.—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 645; see also 610. "With this, the last vestige of government as organized in the dominion of New England vanished."—O'Driscoll, The Amer. Colonies, (1907), III: 457.

A ship from Nevis (one of the islands of the Caribbean Sea) arrives at New York with "a parcel of negroes," some of whom have "ye small pox." The common council orders that the sick "Be Landed a Mile or thereabouts from this City," and permits no ship or vessel coming from the islands to be "vexed or affected" by them.—M. C. C., I: 289–91. Small-pox is here first mentioned in city records.

Writing from Albany, Col. Bayard addresses an order to Capt. Abraham de Peyster and Capt. John de Bruyn, commanders of two companies of the train-bands in New York, which is to be communicated to the rest of the commissioned officers, commanding them immediately to "desist from any wayse counselling aiding assisiting or abetting by land or water, or any person, the said Jacob Leyseler and his associates," etc. Bayard explains in this order that he finds this step his present duty to the crown; that he is acting as one of the council and as colonel of the train-bands, under commissions which have not been vacated or superseded, and that Leyseler has not "the lawfull authority" from the king and queen.—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 636.

Writing from "fort william," Leisler informs the governor at Boston that "Collonell Byard and the late Mayor & custome master aмонced themselves & cannot be found."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 23–24.

At about this time, the Present State of New English Affairs, the earliest precursor of the newspaper published in America, was issued in Boston by Samuel Green. See April 24, 1704, and Addenda.

"Gutpoweder Treason Day" is celebrated by Leisler and his party "with bonfires & burning the pope."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 25.

The draft of a commission for Henry Sluoghter, Esq., to be governor of New York, is approved by the king and council at Whitehall. It is ordered that the Earl of Shrewsbury, one of the king's principal secretaries of state, "prepare a Warrant for His Majestie's Signature for passing the said Commission under the Great Seal."—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 629–32; see also Jan. 30, 1695; March 19, 1691. For his instructions, see Jan. 31, 1690.

Essig John Stoll, agent for the committee of safety, has presented an address to the king and queen in London from the deputies and militia officers at New York, on Nov. 9, submits a brief for the information of the Earl of Shrewsbury, who has been made commissioner to examine the condition of the affairs of New York. This brief is a list of declarations, testimony, proclamations, affidavits, etc. One of these is "a printed paper, entitled, An account of the proceeding at New York 1689; printed at Boston by Samuel Green 1689." Another is "An inventory of the fort of New York as it was found when the Trainbands took possession of it."

In an accompanying petition, Stoll asks, among other things, "that His Majestie might be pleased to grant New York a Charter, in the like manner and with the same or more privileges at the city of Boston, being that the contents of that Charter, doth best agree with the humour and constitution, and with the constitution of the said city."—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 639–43.

Leisler writes to the governor of Barbadoes regarding affairs at the fort; about Capt. Blagg's bringing a French man-o'-war into New York harbor; about a council of war, and sending the prisoners from this ship back to Barbadoes; and in reply to a letter from him, there is "no better means to the conducting to their Majesties service interest then a friendly amicable & mutual correspondency between their several government," etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 24–35; Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 184.

Several "merchants and adventurers trading there to and interested in the province of New York and the adjacent Colonies" send a petition to the king, expressing thankfulness for his care of these colonies, "and more particularly in appointing Coll Slater [Slaughter] Governor of New York, whose integrity courage and conduct render him worthy of your Majesty's choice and so important a trust." They ask, for defense against "those insubordinate enemies" to the king's person and dominions, the French, that he will furnish a considerable number of men, with arms and ammunition, and ships of war. In support of this petition, they give several reasons, describing the growing strength of the French in Canada, who have taken away the beaver trade, excepting from the Five Nations of Indians, who are friendly to the colonists, and whose trade is also menaced. They therefore recommend:

1. "That a platform be built at Sandy Hooke or Sandy Bay in East Jersey at the entrance into Hudson's River from the sea which lies so by reason of its situation, so that no ship can pass up into Hudson's river but within musket shot, as will appear by the map, which said platform will require twelve guns and eighty men with arms and ammunition proportionable."

2. "That the Fort of New York be sufficiently repaired and fortified with suitable outworks as it was formerly, or otherwise as shall be found most convenient, and that fifty guns may be allowed to each fort, and that two hundred men be kept in that fort in time of war, and one hundred and twenty men be constantly kept there in time of peace; [as the Town of New York [as liable to be attacked by land as by sea].

They also recommend that certain forts be built in other parts of the province.

6th. That four hundred Carabines with Belts, Saldes, Holsters, and Pistolls be sent over to equip the Militia house of New York and Long Island and one thousand small fire arms with Bandeleers and ammunition proportionable for foot . . .

7th. That the Governor of New York have power to issue out commissions for raising volunteers in New England upon any exigency.

8th. That two fifth rate man of war may be appointed to cruise upon coasts as the Governor shall see occasion . . . — N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 651-55.

Among the records of the committee of safety there is a Memorial [to this period] of what has occurred in their Majesties Province of New York since the News of their Majesties Happy Arrivial in England.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 33-34.

William and Mary are "very solemnly" proclaimed a second time king and queen, etc., by Leisler, who received by way of Boston "two gracious letters the one from their Majesties and orders to doe & performe all things which to the place of residence of his Majesty Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of New York doth or may appertain until further order."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 28, 29-30. But see Bayard's explanation of Dec. 15. The first proclamation occurred on June 22, 1689 (p. 2).

After a due deliberation and consult" with the committee of safety, Leisler, as lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief, appoints the members of his council.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 27. See Oct. 10.

Peter Delany, who was appointed receiver of the revenues of the province by Leisler and his council (Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 29), while still acting as mayor, is now given a commission as collector of the port of New York.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 185, 187.

Col. Nicholas Bayard writes concerning the occurrences in New York since the preceding April 27. Concluding, he states that, on Dec. 8, John Riggs, the despatch-becher, who had been sent to England by Van Cortlandt on May 18 (N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 593), arrived with two packets from the king and queen, directed "To our Trusty and well Beloved Francis Nicholson," etc., "or in his absence to such as for ye time being take care for ye preserva- tion of the peace," etc. Before the council could judge Riggs was commanded to the fort and forced to deliver the packets to Leisler. Since then Leisler "has taken upon him the tuitim of L[ord] Govern[er] and Commander in Chief."—Ibid., III: 648. On Dec. 13, also, "Fredryck Flyspes" and "S. v. Cortlandt" made a certificate that on Dec. 9 they demanded the two packets, "being of the King's Council." They claimed them as their right in the absence of the lieutenant-governor, who had deputed them "to preserve the peace during his absence and until his Maj[esty] pleasure should be knowne therein." Leisler, however, told Riggs that they had nothing to do with the government, that they were Papists, and that the packets were directed to him. He took the packets from Riggs, and told Phillipse and Van Cortlandt, with "many approbrious words," to leave the fort.—Ibid., III: 649.

Leisler and his council order that the customs and excise be collected according to the act of Oct. 30, 1683, entitled "A continued bill for defraying the requisite expenses of the Government."—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 185, citing the council minutes; see also Oct. 30, 1683. On Dec. 16, Leisler issued a proclamation declaring that act in force.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 30. He thereby undertook to enforce a law made by a Papist governor. The incensed Jacob Leisler (as discussed in a London pamphlet Jan. 21, 1690.)—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 676-77, 683. Some "dissatisfied person," as Leisler called him, having taken this proclamation down from the weigh-house or custom-house door where it had been posted, and "in a Contemptuous manner" affixed other papers which, Leisler asserted, contained "false construction on the whole sale Laws of England," Leisler issued another proclamation, on Dec. 20, warning the public against a repetition of such action.— Dec. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 75.

A commission of this date is given to Abraham Gouverneur as city and county clerk.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 188.

Leisler issues a proclamation ordering all persons holding civil or military commissions from Dongan and Andros to surrender them.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 31. Fearing that the French "have a designe upon New York," Peter Revertdey writes to the Bishop of London that there are 200 French families about New York "which will be put to the torture if the French takes it."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 650.

About 1690, the wardrobe of an English officer stationed at New York, Capt. Caesar Carter, included a blue cloth coat with silver buttons, a frize coat, a white feathered jacket, white Holland jackets, a silk flowered waistcoat, green silk breeches flowered with silk and gold, silver gauze breeches, scarlet stockings, black silk stockings, white cotton stockings, embroidered belt with silver buckle, a campaign wig, bob-wigs, silver-bilted sword, laker hat, laced shirts, laced neckcloths, laced handkerchiefs, flannel jackets, and fur cap.—Man. Com. Cour. (1855), 539-40; ibid. (1858), 599-10.

Claiming that "a hellish Conspiracy" to subvert the government "hath been detected," Leisler issues a search-warrant to discover suspected letter-carriers coming or going between New York and Boston.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 32. As explained by Broadhead, "it was office of his Maj[esty]s Lieutenants of the New Good and Ni. England, who have directed that the king had ordered that Andros, Randolph, West, Farewell, and the others whom the Boston insurg- ents who had imprisoned, should be sent to London, letters to some of them were written by Bayard, Van Cortlandt, Nicola, and others, which were given by Colonel Lewis Morris to the postmaster, John Peret, as he passed his house in Westchester."—Hist. State of N.Y., II: 600-1. See, further, Jan., 16.

Leisler, who signs himself "Lieut. Gov." and in the name of the Council," writes to the king that he has undertaken to obey the instructions contained in the packets which came by Mr. Riggs, and that he has made a second proclamation of the king and queen "with due solemnity and the suitable ceremonies."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 654; see Dec. 8 and 10, 1689.

On this day also, Leisler and several of his council write to the Bishop of Salisbury, reviewing matters pertaining to the government of the province, as considered by them. They state: "When Sir Edmund Andros was here with Secr[etary] Randolph, most of the Records, Bookes, papers, and seals which belonged to this province were transmitted to Boston, whereby we are incapacitated to present your Lordship with such a state of things as becomes the case, and our duty, having adventures to make a new seal for the provincial court, now desire that the Council of our coronet, and placing the Crown of England in its stead. Nothing can abate our service, except the want of 25 Canon of 24 lb Calaber, firelock muskets Pistolls, Bandelleys 150 lb powder, match, Handgran- does, Bayonettes. Croweete &c & with 40 lb weight of musket bullets in case the French visit us in the spring."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 654-5.

The answer (dated New York, 1691) to a memorial presented by Captain Blagge to the king stated that Leisler "made to himself a broad Scale with he called ye Scale of ye Province, with ye usual arms of Kings of England, and all the same to such unlawful grants of land within this Province, and commissionated under ye same [same] justice of ye Peace . . ."—Ibid., III: 765. Probably at this time the corresponding change was made in the city seal.—See July 24, 1686; Frontispiece, Vol. V; Fine, Seal and Flags, V, III, and p. 48.

The accompanying Leisler's letter to the bishop is Bayard's order of Oct. 29, 1689 (p. 59); also the depositions of three inhabitants, taken before a justice on Aug. 14, 1689, to the effect that Andros, in April, had agreed with an Indian sachem named Wesecanow (their informant) to attack New York City with a band of Indians, and desired it "in Christian manner," also an affidavit intended to show the violent disposition of Nicholson when the news reached him about the landing of the Prince of Orange in England.—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 683-66. Both factions made wild charges.

1690 a warrant from our Usurper Leyser, & brought back to this place—

18 Leisler issues a commission to any five of a list of named inhabitants, of whom Peter Delanoxy, the "Judge of 0 Court of Oyer & Terminer & Genl Gaol delivery," shall be one, to hold a court on Jan. 22 & hear, try and determine "any cases of crimes and offences committed against the laws and customs of the province and England.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 36.

19 An anonymous pamphlet of protest, bearing date "in New York 21, Jan A. D. 1690," made its appearance some time this year, having the title: A Modest and Imperial Narrative of several Grievances committed by the most Considerable Inhabitants of their Majesties Province of New-York in America Lye Under, By the Extravagant and Arbitrary Proceedings of Jacob Leyser and his Accomplices. Printed at New-York, and Re-printed at London, 1690. Inasmuch as the first printing in New York was set up by Bradford in 1693 (4to), the date of the first page of this pamphlet in New York prior to that date is obviously an error. It is likely it was printed originally by William Bradford at Philadelphia (see Evans, Am. Bibliog., No. 570), and when reprinted in London was attributed erroneously to New York because the subject matter related to this city. A photostat copy (from which the above title is transcribed) is in the N. Y. Pub. Library, made from the printed original in the British Museum, which Brodhead reprinted in N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 665-54. The pamphlet reviews, with evident accuracy, from the standpoint of the regularly constituted authorities of the city and province, the official transactions and the rebellious transgressions that have occurred during the last year. The violations of the "Laws and Liberties of the English Nation" on the part of Leisler are all critically discussed in this narrative, which states it as Leisler's maxim that "The Sword must rule and not the Laws."

20 Various arrests and imprisonments, without due process of law, are described. Finally, Oct. 20, 1690, by Leisler's command, William Churchill and several soldiers, assisted by certain inhabitants, went to the house of Colonel Bayard, and broke open doors to seize Bayard; they followed him to a neighbour's house, laid hold of him, and dragged him to the fort and imprisoned him. They likewise broke open the house of Stephanus van Cortlandt, late mayor of the city, but he escaped. William Nicolls was taken at the ferry-house on Long Island, and carried to the fort. This followed the refusal of several of the inhabitants to pay customs and excise to Leisler. The pamphlet closes with an arraignment of the "principal authors" of the "misdemeanors" suffered by the inhabitants. These are: "Jacob Leisler, Jacob Milbon, Samuel Edall, Dr. Geo Beckman of Flackbus, Peter DeLanoy, Dr. Samuel States, Tho Williams, Iao Cownshoven, Ben Blagg, Hendr Jansen, Hendr Cuyler." The authors of the pamphlet declare their intention to prosecute these men as soon as a fair opportunity offers to do so legally.—Ibid.

21 Col. Henry Slaughter, governor of New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs. (4to ed.), III: 68-91. With these he is to receive his commission. This commission, as recorded in the "Book of Commissions" in the secretary of state's office, Albany, bears date of Jan. 4, 1690.—Ibid., III: 627-29. New York Province is reduced to its former boundaries.—Osgood, The Am. Colonies (1907), III: 464. See further, regarding these instructions, March 19, 1690, in the correspondence of the governor of New York (see March 17, 1688) is commissioned as surveyor-general.—Col. Hist. Miss., Eng., 193.

22 Leisler issues a warrant to "ye Civill & Military Officers & Sheriffs for the Queens County upon Long Island . . . to Secure ye Body of Colonel Thomas Doogan wth a Safeguard wth in his owne house & to apprehend Colossole Thomas Willet Capt? Thomas Hicks, Daniel Whitehead & those he alleges, have done all in their power to advance the interests of James, contrary to their duty to King William.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 41. On Feb. 21, a similar warrant is issued regarding Doogan, Van Cortlandt, Brockdhold, and Plowman.—Ibid., II: 42-43. As to how Doogan escaped arrest, see April 24.

24 Leisler issues a writ calling for the election of representatives who shall meet in New York "to consult debate & conclude" all such matters as are necessary "for ye supply of this Government in this present conjuncture."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 42.

25 Leisler writes to the "Governor of Boston" for "a Catalogue of all the books & papers in your possession relating to the province of New York."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 193. The request was made again on April 7.—Ibid., II: 138. Regarding the return of the New York records, see April 17, 1690; May 8, 1691; Sept. 3, 1691.

26 Leisler and his council issue a commission to Jonnoes de Bruyn, "Jonnas Provost, and Jacob Milborne to command all the forces raised in New York and adjacent counties, and to proceed to Albany and take control of affairs there, to treat with the Indians, take possession of Fort Orange there, etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 100. This was due to the massacre at Schenectady and the burning of that place by the French and Indians, in February.—Ibid., II: 192-95.

It is ordered by the common council that the alderman of the North Ward appoint two fit persons to see that Church Street is paved "by Every $2.00 before there doors as it [sic] done by other inhabitants."—M. C. C., Appendix, VIII: 135, 136.

27 In a letter written "at fort william" to the commissioners from New England (see Feb. 20), Leisler suggests a house out of town for their meeting, on account of the small-pox in New York. The house referred to he describes as "two miles of the town a good & neat [nea] house by Capt. Brian Cornells where no small pox in it."—Doc. Hist. of N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 106. See April 23, 1680. The house was kept by John Clapp in 1679 (q.v.).

28 Robert Livingston, who, prior to the Leisler revolution, had Apr. been town clerk at Albany (see Doc. Hist. N. Y., 4to ed., II: 414-33), writing from Hartford to Andros, informs him that Leisler's faction seeks to have the mayor and other magistrates at New York take commissions from Leisler as lieutenant-governor, but they refuse to do so until Leisler can produce better power from King William to confer commissions. Van Cortlandt has fled. Col. Bayard, Mr. Goer, William Nicolls, and several others are kept in jail. Leisler has also sent soldiers to Albany by land and sea, through the fort in a chair, in chains.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 708-9.

Robert Livingston makes reference to British soldiers as "Red Coats."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 708-9. For an earlier reference of the same sort, see Aug. 29, Sept. 8, 1664. The Militia Law of the province did not prescribe the "Scarlet Coat" until July 24, 1724; however, even at this early date (1690), British law and custom evidently prevailed here.

Robert Livingston, writing from Hartford to Maj. John Winthrop, declares that to relate "ye hardships & troubles we have met withall Since this Revolution would require a whole Volume." He calls Leisler a "rumpster" who "tyrannizes" "over these Majesty's Subjects without any Coller [color] of order or commission from ye King."—Winthrop Papers, op. cit. XIV: 123.

The committee of trade and plantations at Whitehall agrees to "move" (request) the king that orders may be issued to remove the records of New York from Boston and deliver them to Slaughter. At a court at Kensington on April 26, an order was issued that a sloop, built in New England at public charge when the colonies of New York and New England were united, might be delivered to Slaughter; that the great guns brought from Pemaquid by the people of New York might also be delivered to him; and that the records of New York, now in Boston, might be restored. Another order, dated April 29, was directed to the colony of Massachusetts to deliver the sloop, the great guns, and the records to Slaughter, for use of the king's service in New York Province.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 710-1.
15 Judge Samuel Sewall starts from Boston for New York, his entry in his diary reading: "Mr. Mr. Cooper and others in Company."—Diary of Samuel Sewall, in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections (Boston, 1878), 5th ser., V: 317. Judge Sewall and William Stoughton were commissioners on the part of Massachusetts to attend the meeting of commissioners from the northern colonies to concert measures for the common safety. See further, May 1.

20 In the first "assembly" under Leisler, held at the house of Robert Walters in New York, beginning this day, only one act is passed. This contains two provisions, as follows: "to rise [raise] throughout the whole Country Government in New York, well and personal, and to be paid the first of June;" and "that all towns and places should have equal freedom to build and bake and to transport where they please directly to what place or Country they think it fitt, anything their places afford, and that the one place should have no more privileges, than the other."—From Van Cortlandt's letter to Andros, dated May 19, 1690, in N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 717, which is the only source cited in Col. Laws N. Y., I: 218. By an act passed in the next session, on Oct. 2, another tax levy of the same amount was imposed, to be collected in January and March following.—From Leisler's letter, to Governors of New Shrewsbury, dated Oct. 20, in N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 753, and Col. Laws N. Y., I: 219.

25 Col. Thomas Dongan, former governor, in a letter to Maj. Gen. Winthrop at Boston, says: "Cap. Leisler has been soe unknd to me as to inform me, that he offering him for his good behavior, issued out his warrant last February to Sieze me under pretence to have King James his Commission from me it being my ondy thing I have to Justify my former proceedings during my being Governor of New York, Soc I was forced to Scuffle from hole to hole in New York, and at a new contest, I doe intend towards 30th parts next weeke for I doe not doubt to have the ffe of your protection wth the rest of the gentlemen there, 30th broth is very well and says he will be done that way Soon."—Winthrop Papers, XII: 155, in Mass. 1 An intercolonial congress meets in New York, and adopts measures "for the Strengthening of Albany," and for "Subduing ye French & Indian Enemies Continuing in hostility agst their Magisties," New York, Massachusetts, Plymouth, and Connecticut are represented by commissioners. Each of these colonies, as well as Maryland, agrees to send a quota of men and provisions at its own expense. Articles of war are agreed to—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 134-155. The report of this commission, dated May 1, 1690, appointing forces to be raised by the colonies of New York, Massachusetts, Plymouth, Connecticut, and Rhode Island, was signed by Jacob Leisler, William Stoughton, Samuel Sewall, P. Delancy, Col. William Johnson, Nathaniel Goffin.—Mass. Archives, XXXVIi: f. 457; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 731. See A.

2 Judge Samuel Sewall of Massachusetts, having completed his work as commissioner from Massachusetts, remains over Sunday in New York, before starting for home. He records the manner in which he spent the day: "Went to the Dutch Church in the morn. Sung the 69th Ps. 2d. Pause from the 24th V to the end which Capt. Lodowick taught me the evening before. . . . At my Lodging Mr. Mariott & sang the 25th Psalm . . . a Psalm extra very ordinarly fitted for me in my present distress."—Diary of Samuel Sewall, in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections (Boston, 1878), 5th ser., V: 318.

14 An order in council is made "to Secure all pocke with this City to be Brought to his Maties Store hose for his Maties service. Leisler issues a search-warrant accordingly.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 137. Only 180 barrels are found.—Ibid., II: 141.

19 The Dutch traders and merchants go to a court in New York, in an "Address to the King and Queen," report the several acts of oppression and defiance of law by Leisler, and ask for relief.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 748-49. Among the petitioners are Rip van Dam, Stephen de Lancey, Jacobus van Cortlandts, Col. Abra- ham de Brouwer, Nicholas Wim, and Francis de Dietter. Isaac de Forest, and others. For an authoritative sketch of the life of Rip van Dam, at this time one of the most prominent merchants of New York, see Man. Com. Coun. (1867), 220 et seq.

24 William Masson (Massen) and other captains of privateers are commissioned by Leisler to sail for Quebec and war upon French vessels.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 141. See also 1689; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 731-32; IV: 507; 587-86, 644, 665; and N. Y. Col. Docs., Index, titles; "Mason," "Goats," and "Red Sea."—Van Cortlandt, writing from "New England" to Andros, tells who are imprisoned by Leisler, and what they have done. Most of the Albany women are at New York (evidently because of the war waged in the vicinity of Albany by the French and Indians). The remainder were gathering for the defense of Leisler and the other slaves in Turkey which your Excell; gave to build a new Church in New York, our church-warde had it laid out in Amsterdam and gott Osenbridge limouns [Oisabrungh limouns] for it, all which Osenbridge Leisler hath taken and sent to Albany with Millborne."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 745-49.

29 Slaughter is given a seal by the king, for the use of the "Province of New York and the Territories depending thereon." It is thus described: "Engraven on the one side with our Royal Effegies, and Two Indians Kneeling & offering presents unto Us, with our Royal Tides round the circumference of the said Seal, and on the other side with our royal Armes, with the Carter, Crown, Supporters and Motto, and this Inscription round the circumference. Sigilium Provinciae Nostre Novi Eboraci in America." He is authorized to use this seal on all patents, public grants of lands, and public acts and instruments made in the king's name.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 766. Doc. Hist. N. Y., IV: 132.

June

5 Leisler, writing on June 21 from "Fort William" in New York to the Earl of Shrewsbury, states, among other things, that, on June 6, he was assaulted on the streets by "a Rout of Thirty odd persons," one of whom struck him at "with an Adze."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 731. This was the day of the proclamation of Leisler and the again described the assault upon him of June 6. —Ibid., II: 151.

10 The justices, Delany, John Sprat, and another, issue an order to the high sheriff, high constable, and petty constables to take care that "Vagabonds, thieves, Robbers and Strangers abiding in ye City and County without knowledge of ye authority may be seurely examined & proceeded [against] according to Law." The inhabitants, also, are to give an account of persons who disturb the peace. From the original order in metal file labeled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room.

15 Leisler had sent Maj. Milborne to Albany to settle the "great distractions amongst the Forces Raised for the Canada Expedition." Now, instead of sending him to England to give a report of the affairs of the province to the lords of trade, he sends his report to England by Capt. Blagge, one of his council.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 753. This report, dated June 25, is addressed to the Earl of Shrewsbury; it is written by William Johnson, the governor, and the inhabitants, and the riot of June 6 in New York.—Ibid., III: 731-33.

20 Capt. Blagge wrote a petition to the king on behalf of Leisler and his council, soon after his arrival in England, beginning:—"That the Inhabitants of the said Province upon the first notice they received of the late Happy Revolution in England; the more effectually to secure ye said Province and Government for your Maties service Did think themselves obliged to remove the late Lieut Gover Mr. Nicholson." The purpose of this petition was to ask the king's "approbation" for what Leisler and his council had done, and to ask for guns and ammunition.—Ibid., III: 737.

This petition was accompanied by "A Memorial of what has occurred in their Maties' Province of New York," etc. Both of these documents are without date. The memorial explains the circumstances of the removal of Nicholson and the appointment of Leisler and a committee, by the people's choice, "to take into their Hands the care and charge of yo' government and the inhabitants of their Maties Peace," which, as Leisler and his followers contended, empowered Leisler to receive and act upon its instructions. The memorial describes the factional differences that have arisen; the imprisonment of some of the leading opponents of Leisler's government; the calling in of commissions which were issued by Dongan and Andros, and the issuing of others in the name of the present king and queen.
and it closes by stating that the enemies of the Leisler party "have endeavoured all they can to misrepresent us and load us with reproaches," by publishing proceedings of a Dutch Piafters, letters, &c.

The memorial is accompanied by numerous affidavits respecting the riot in New York of June 23 (ibid., III: 733-39). This memorial was answered by Bayard and Nicolls on April 27, 1691. See May 7, 1691, when Slaughter sent the answer to England.

Leisler commissions certain ship captains to cruise along the Sound and endeavour to capture French ships "which are committing outrages," and which "have already taken two vessels belonging to this port & several others, ... so that no vessels can budge."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 154. On July 24, other vessels were ordered to do like service "on this Coast" (ibid., II: 156); and again on Oct. 30 (ibid., II: 174-75).

Leisler’s "assembly" passes an act imposing a fine on persons refusing to serve in civil or military positions under commissions issued by him. The original is in the office of the secretary of state, and is published in Col. Laws N. T., I: 129-20.

After the Shrewsbury of June 23 (N. T. Col. Docs., III: 731), with the petition and memorial of Capt. Benj. Blagge (see June 24, 1690), and also the address of the merchants of May 19, the lords of the council at Whitehall send all these papers to Slaughter, and direct him, on his arrival at New York, to examine into the allegations and give a strictly impartial account for the information of their majesties.—Ibid., III: 750. Slaughter replied on May 7, 1691 (p. v.).

In behalf of "the freeholders of the Towne of Hamsted, Jamaica, Flushing and Newtown," John Clapp writes to the secretary of state (London) describing their condition and the tyranny of Leisler. He states that he has just cause to believe that "these monsters of men, ... will inevitably betray their Maj^s City, Fort and province of New York to the French."—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 754.

By a presumtaneous deed dated of this date, "Fredryck Flyppe" (Phillips) agrees to transfer to Jacobus van Cortlandt and to Eva, adopted daughter of "Flyppe," as a gift upon their marriage, "his house and ground Situate lying and being on the East side of the Dock or Mound of this Cityt fronting to the house that Mr William Merritt now lives in."—From the original indented deed signed and sealed by four freeholders and filed with the New York "Paper," in wrappers of "Miscellaneous Pieces," in N. Y. Hist. Soc. archives. See also July 15, Nov. 25, Dec. 28, 1692.

During this year, a report was made of the quantity of guns, powder, ball, etc., in the fort.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 202.

In the year, Maryland became a royal colony, with Sir Lionel Copley as governor.—Winser, op. cit., III: 552-53.

The ship "Beaver" with one company of foot soldiers, under command of Maj. Richard Ingoldesby, and the "John" and "James" with stores, arrive from England. They came up to New York on Nov. 26th. Four days later, the ship "Cantonbury" arrived with another company of foot-soldiers. Chicheley Brooke of the "Beaver" informed Sir Robert Southwell, by letter of April 5 following, that when the first ships came up to the city, Ingoldesby sent him (Brooke) to request Leisler to admit the stores and forces into the fort. Leisler was willing to receive the stores but not the soldiers. He seemed very angry, and his insolent behaviour put Brooke on his guard. His taste of power had infuriated the "punny usurer." Such was the belief of Brooke, who said they found "the best and greatest number of the people languishing under his oppressions and now overjoyed at the hopes of a deliverer. ... We durst not venture to land our men till we had prepared some well affected persons of ye City to stand in our defence in case he should offer any violence against us upon landing."—N. T. Col. Docs., III: 757. See, further, Feb. 6.

The officers and soldiers "were forced to lodge in the Towne Hall of this City and to keep the stores on board for two months past, and suffering great inconvenience from the said Leisler and his complices, who daily imnastated by writing and discourse to the people especially of the Dutch nation that they were come from the late King James and forged their communications and were enemies to King William and Queen Mary."

After various threats and warlike preparations by those in the fort, about 700 of the train-bands from the country came into town, armed, and the gentlemen of the council gave Leisler written notice that "they intended nothing but their own and the City's security from violence."—Ibid., III: 759-62.

Ingoldesby writes "From on board y^ Beav^r" to Capt'n Jacob Leisler att y^ fort in New York," demanding possession of the fort. He says: "I have seen y^ Copy of his Maj^s letter directed to Lieu' Gov' Nicholson &c but cannot find how you may derive any authority to y^ Selfe from thence."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1885), 500.

Leisler issues a protest against Maj. Ingoldesby, and forbids him "to commit any hostile act against his Majesties fort City or ports of the said Province."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 181-82. He also issues a proclamation calling out the militia.—Ibid., II: 182.

Ingoldesby, on board the ship "Beaver," answers Leisler’s protest of Jan. 31, saying his men were fired upon "last night when they were comming on board," and that he has come "to protect his Majesties Subjects & preserve the peace."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 182-83. The next day Leisler answered that he would make amends.—Ibid., II: 185.

Letters are preserved of this date written by Robert Livingston (see April 14, 1690) from Fairfield, Connecticut, to Maj. Gen. John Winthrop and GodefroyDllius (Dutch minister at Albany, who had gone for safety to Newport, R.I.). The first is written in English, the second in Dutch; the contents of the two are similar. News is given of Gov. Slaughter’s appointment and expected arrival in New York. He tells Winthrop "there is a man of war of 50 guns att y^ hook hes [has] above 100 Red Coats aboard y^ Gov’s is in a Ship of 55 guns, there is a genl for y^ Canad Expedition Sent by y^ king & arrived 500 Red Coats in y^ fleet, ... y^ Council are C^ Dudley fred Phillips Stephenvan Courtland, and Col. Bayard Wm Nicolls Cap^ Minvielle, y^ major [Ingoldesby] was not come ashore but had sent for all y^ town Cap^ & discharged y^m to act by Leynder Commissions; y^ fort is kept close by Leynder but good guards y^ rogue does not escape, Leynder faction hang three cars Prodigalianly.—Winthrop Papers, XIV: 155.

Notice having been received that Col. Slaughter has been appointed governor, and that the fort, etc., are to be surrendered to him, and he being expected daily to arrive, Leisler issues an order that the troops under command of Maj. Ingoldesby, which are for service in this colony and "cannot be otherwise accommodated.

1691 than in this City," may be received by the citizens with due respect.

4 Maj. Ingoldesby having demanded possession of the fort, "without shewing the least order from their Majestyes King William & Queen Mary or his excellency Col. Salttouer for the same," Leisler refuses to surrender it to him and his troops. He nevertheless renews the proclamation of Feb. 3, that the Major and his troops shall be hazarded to imprisonment at the arrival of Col. Salttouer; but adds another prohibition against persons outside the province following Ingoldesby's commands.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 184.

At this time, Joseph Dudley writes from Boston to Blathwayt in his Majesties service that he has arrived in N. Y. and Frigate are daily expected at New York, where he will meet them to assume his duties. He adds that the whole country is in a very bad state in every way; and that the King's delay in settling matters would make the colonies long a prey to their enemies and to each other.—Col. State Papers, Am. & W. I., 156.

At a meeting of the mayor, common council, and militia officers, it is requested by Maj. Ingoldesby that his soldiers may be accommodated in the city hall "until better entertainment is provided." Consent is given, provided there be no interruption of the "Court of Judicature."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 185.

Under command of Maj. Ingoldesby, the soldiers are brought ashore, "with as much caution [as Chidley Brooke stated in his letter of April 5 to Southwell] as if we had made a descent into an Enemies' Country." Continuing, Brooke explains: "We lodged our men in ye Towne House and another House opposite thereto and the reports are industriously spread that we are Papists and disaffected persons fled from England, his [Leisler's] soldiers are encouraged to afront and threaten his Majesties Forces." Leisler fires a warning gun twice or three times a week "to amuse," and gives no reason for doing so but "sac holy."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 757.

Leisler writes to Ingoldesby: "Last night your men took upon them to go the rounds of this City under Character of ye City Hall rounds sundry times passing by this fort which is a province that neither you nor any under your direction ought to tread in." He forbids a repetition of this. Nevertheless, on March 5, he is obliged to write a similar complaint.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 503.

1 Leisler writes to Ingoldesby: "Last night your men took upon them to go the rounds of this City under Character of ye City Hall rounds sundry times passing by this fort which is a province that neither you nor any under your direction ought to tread in." He forbids a repetition of this. Nevertheless, on March 5, he is obliged to write a similar complaint.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 503.

A commission is issued to Maj. Ingoldesby (presumably from the privy council of England) to command the troops at New-York.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 201. This states that the object is to put their Majesties's good subjects in a posture of Defence against the depredations oppressions frequent alarms and Threttes of Jacob Laurenco and other Papists and their friends in this province ... Till such time as his excellency Col'll Hallowell shall arrive," etc.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 192.

In a declaration of protest against Ingoldesby, Leisler explains, more directly perhaps than in his other public documents (all of which are extremely faulty in English diction), the underlying motives for his seizure of the government. He begins: "Whereas Almighty God through his wonderfull mercy hath raised up their Majesties King William and Queen Mary to be ye glorious instruments of delivering their Kingdoms & dominions both Church & State from ye imposition of ye remian religion and illegal and arbitrary power exercized under ye unhappy reigne of ye late King James..." Such abuse of power, says he, was manifest, especially under Gov. Dongan, who was a professed Papist, and who, with seven "counsellors," had power under his "letters patent from ye 4th King" to make laws, levy taxes, and "tread all manner of provincial orders and proclamations, without having any regard to advice or consent of ye representatives of ye peoples and this power was continued and augmented "by Commission from ye 4th King James appointing St Edmund Andros governor of this province as well as New-England.

A commission of ye good inhabitants of this province (Zealous for the protestant religion and rejoicing at so glorious an accession to the throne as that of William and Mary) ... did secure his majestys fortte place and disemblen ye 4th Lieut Governor [Nicholson] & his Council and Militia settled by the authority of said King James ... and to preserve in their loyally did Elect representatives for each county in the province who assisted forthwith to proclaim their Majesties William and Mary..." His narrative proceeds with the statement that he retained possession of the fort "until their Royall pleasure should be known concerning us" and this was made known on Dec. 8, 1689 (q. v.), by letter from the king dated July 30, 1689 (q. v.), directed to Francis Nicholsoon, Esq. In his absence to such [as for y^th time being take carring the arrival of Col. Salttouer] but adds another prohibition against persons outside the province following Ingoldesby's commands.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 184.

That Leisler had demanded possession of the fort, "without shewing the least order from their Majestyes King William & Queen Mary or his excellency Col. Salttouer for the same," Leisler refuses to surrender it to him and his troops. He nevertheless renews the proclamation of Feb. 3, that the Major and his troops shall be hazarded to imprisonment at the arrival of Col. Salttouer; but adds another prohibition against persons outside the province following Ingoldesby's commands.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 185.

Brooke, in his letter of April 3, regarding these events, which he sent to Southwell, explained the situation as follows: "I have, in the limited time we answered this paper in ye most peaceable stile we could contrive, but in vain, we must all submit to be his slaves or by him destroyed." Before Leisler had broken the seal of the answer, he said, in the presence of the messenger, "Come, we’ll go out." In about a quarter of an hour "he fired a great shot at ye King’s Forces as they stood in their parade and made several shots at the house where they lodged and kept guard in hope to batter it down about their ears. These great shot were accompanied with Volleys of small shot." Those "of his rable" in the blackhouse failed to respond to his order to fire, coincidently with the firing from the fort, many of them calling to one another in so rash an undertaking. Several inhabitants, as well as soldiers, were wounded and two were killed in the action which lasted until night, during which time Leisler was "safe immuned within the Fort." By nightfall, this band had surrendered, having heard of a designed attack both by land and water. This so discouraged those in the fort that there was no shooting during the night.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 759.

Sloughter, writing to Lord Nottingham on March 26 about the occurrences of March 17, stated that "Leisler from the Fort discharged a great shot at the guards, and shall be as a signal to the other end of the City that held with him, and immediately many more great and small shot, some of which passed through the stone walls of the house where the guards were kept, wounded one of the King’s soldiers and about seven other of the inhabitants, and one was slain. During which time the guards were dispersed from the scene Laws Statutes & Colo ... Bloodie houses." The several killed failed them, submitting and laid down their arms and went to their houses."—Ibid., III: 760. See also Bayard’s account, ibid., III: 765; and the affidavit of Daniel de Klerck and others, Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 210-53.

18 The few shots fired the next day did no harm. The king’s forces, realizing their inability to storm the fort with their "handful of men," merely "stood still in a defensive posture every minute expecting he would either Sally or Batter ye Town down, but it pleased God to prevent his bloody designe in a great measure by ye happy arrival of Our Governour on the 19th who found all his friends with white ty’d about their left arms for a badge of distinction and their lives in imminent danger."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 759.

Gov. Sloughter having set sail from the Isle of Wight on Dec. 1, 1690, arrives in New York. In reports to the Earl of Nottingham, dated March 27 and May 6, 1691, he explained that his vessel, the "Arch Angel," which started with several ships in convoy, containing soldiers and stores, made for the Bermudas, where she lost 50 feet of her outer keel on the rocks; so that it took 16 weeks, after a rough passage, to complete the voyage. The other ships arrived two months earlier.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 759, 759. See also Sloughter’s answer in ibid., ed. III: 766-67.

Writing on March 26 to Nottingham of his arrival on March 19, Sloughter stated: "I . . . was visited by the Gentlemen of the Council on board, and the winds not allowing the king’s ship, I came instantly to town in the pinnace, and at the Towne Hall in the presence of the people, published their Majesties letters patents for the Government, took the oats, and administered them to the gentlemen of the Council except Col: Bayard and Mr Nicolls who were detained prisoners . . . , and sent immediately in demand entrance into the Fort, that those Gentlemen of the Council should be dismissed, and that Leisler should tender himsef to give an account of all the trouble."—Ibid., III: 760. Col: Council Min., 65; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 203; Wismar, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 193.

In his report on May 7 to the lords of trade, Sloughter stated that on March 19 Col Dudley and some others came in a Brigantine on board us, I purposed not to go to the Town before the Mann of Warr, but understanding the distress the inhabitants labour under, I went up in the Shippes Pinnace, where I found all in Armes, none four hundred men came out of the Country for to defend the City & their Majesties Stores and Forces against Leisler, N.Y. Col. Docs., III: 760.

In the afternoon Sloughter three times demanded the fort but was refused. About eight o’clock, Leisler sent Jacob Milbourne, acting secretary of the province, and Peter Delany ("the two principal instruments of misery to this Province") to the governor to capitulate. The governor "thought fit to secure them, and by that means “broke neck” of Leisler’s project, “for Milbourne was his grace and Delany his great minister of State so that he being really a rash blunderer of trade . . . he stung gone and unable to do more mischief.” Yet, he would not deliver up the fort that night. From Brooke’s letter to Southwell, ibid., III: 758-59; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: Chap. XXVII. By Sloughter’s commission (see Nov. 14, 1689, and Jan. 31, 1690), the right of the people to a representative assembly, etc., was formally acknowledged in these words: “And we do hereby give & grant unto you full power and authority with the advice & consent of our said Council from time to time need shall require, to govern & call gen ... the inhabitants being Freeholders within your Government, according to the usage of our other Plantations in America.”

And our will and Pleasure is, that the persons thereupon duly elected by the Major part of the Freeholders of the respective Counties and places and so returned and having before their setting taken the oaths appointed by Act of Parliament to be taken instead of the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy and the Test [see Eccles. Rec., II: 1021], which you shall commissionate fit persons under our seal of New York to administer, and without taking which, they shall be unable to sitting though elected, shall be called and held the Gen’al Assembly of that our Province and the Territories thereunto belonging.

And that you the said Henry Sloughter by & with the consent of our said Council and Assembly or the major part of them, respectively have full power and authority to make constitute and ordain what other and other Statutes & Ordinance for ye publick Peace welfare and good Government of our said Province and of the people & Inhabitants thereof and such others as shall resort thereto & for the benefit of us our Heirs & Successors.

Which said Laws Statutes & Ordinances are to be (as near as may be) agreeable unto the Lawes & Statutes of this our kingdome of England.” Within three months after their passage such laws are to be sent to England for approval by the king. If disapproved, they shall be void. The governor is also given "a negative voice" (or veto power), and power to adjourn or dissolve the assembly.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: xxv-xlxvi.

Although O’Callaghan refers (ibid, I: xxvi) to three branches which constituted the government (namely, governor, legislative council, and assembly), the word “legislature,” as we use it today, to signify the two interacting legislative branches of the government, was not used at that early date in the journals of the council and assembly, nor the provincial statutes. It appears to have been first introduced in New York’s provincial records on Feb. 6, 1756 (p.12).

Writing on March 26 to Nottingham of his arrival on March 19, Sloughter stated: “I . . . was visited by the Gentlemen of the Council on board, and the winds not allowing the king’s ship, I came instantly to town in the pinnace, and at the Towne Hall in the presence of the people, published their Majesties letters patents for the Government, took the oats, and administered them to the gentlemen of the Council except Col: Bayard and Mr Nicolls who were detained prisoners . . . , and sent immediately in demand entrance into the Fort, that those Gentlemen of the Council should be dismissed, and that Leisler should tender himsef to give an account of all the trouble.”—Ibid., III: 760. At this time, also, the court of lieutenancy adopts "Orders to be observed in each of the City New York." These orders provide, among other things, that "the waths [watch] be sett every Evening by beat of the drum and Continue till the beates of the revaile in the morning;" and "That the gates of the City he locked Every night at the beat of the Taptos and opened in the morning at the beat of the ravelye."

Col. Nicholas Bayard, Stephen van Cortlandt, and William Pinorne are appointed by the council a committee to prepare the evidence against the prisoners (Leisler, etc.), and James Emmott is appointed king's counsel in the case.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 205. The prisoners were arraigned "before Joseph Dudley St., Robert Robinson, Thomas Johnson, and several others who sat as Judges."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Leisler and Milburn having been indicted for High Treason have refused to plead it is supposed the Governor will keep them for His Maj' disposes of them."—Brooke's letter to Southwell, N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 759. See, however, Slaughters report to the lords of trade on May 7.—Ibid., III: 767. A graphic account in Dutch, written by one of the accused regarding the treatment he received at the trial, explains the character of the pleadings. The statement is printed in full (translated) in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 311-33. Mayor Van Cortlandt acted as interpreter at this hearing. It appears likely that the cause of this statement was either Leisler or Milburn; and, judging from their dying speeches on the day of their execution, it seems more likely to have been Milburn.

Regarding Leisler's arraignment, we have Dolstone's affidavit of Feb. 19, 1692, and De Wilde's affidavit of Feb. 23, 1692, indicating that his case was not given proper consideration by the court. Leisler and Milburn both entered an appeal to the king from the judgment of the court, but this was overruled.—Ibid., 347, 353.

The trial was later said to have been "ordered by the Gov't & managed by the Bench Contrary to all the Rules of Justice & Humanity," according to Lt. Gov. "It ought to have been proceeded by Lodging. In Nicholas Bayards house was the more pressed, & sooner prevailed on by Bayards Importunity to sign the Warrant of Execution. And as an infallible token of the share he had in that Council, there was a flag hung out of a Window of his House for two days together, before the day of Execucio, as a Trophy & Signal of the Punishment, gave him on ye' said Gov't, & of the Victory over the Lives, not only of Innocent, but most deserving men."—Governor's affidavit of May 15, 1699, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 413.

The judges of the "Court of Oyer and Terminer" ask the governor and council whether the king's letter of July 15, 1689 (error for July 30, 1689—see under July 29, 1689), directed to Nicholson, and in his absence to such as for the time being take the Care for Preserving of the peace, etc., can be understood or interpreted to have given power or direction to Leisler "to take the Government of the Province upon himself or that the adminstrat possible be to be holden good in Law." The governor and council give their opinion that it cannot be so understood, or direction for the Government to the said Capt. Leisler.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), II: 207. In 1695, when the attainted of Leisler and others was reversed, the contrary view of this circumstance was taken by parliament. It was there specifically held that the letter referred only to the duty of the governor to maintain Leisler as rightful commander-in-chief, and that Engelsden demanded the fort "without producing any legal authority," the

This letter is dated April 1, 1695, and is addressed to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and is a memorial of the necessity of a new charter to the Company, and of the importance of the Bank as a means of finance for the nation. The letter states that the Bank of England is unable to meet the demands of the government, and that a new charter is necessary to enable the Bank to carry on its business. Ordnances more stringent than before (see Jan. 20, 1676) are enacted by the common council concerning strangers in the city. Shipmasters must report to the mayor the names of any strangers "within Twenty four hours after their Arrival upon forfeiture of forty Shillings." Even a private citizen is liable to the same penalty by the "any Stranger for Longer time than the Space of Seven Days without giving Information to the Mayor."—
M. C. G., I: 220. See also March 15, 1684.

A common council ordinance provides that the clerk "make enquiry after and Reconce in the Bookes and paper Relating to the City, and Search the Records of this City to Draw an Inventory of them and to bee charged with them by Indenture Signed with the Mayor of this City and Duplcat Sign [sic] the clerk."—M. C. G., I: 221. The same ordinance was renewed Oct. 15, 1691.—Ibid., I: 246. The clerk is more rigidly obligated than before; cf. commission to John West, Nov. 9, 1680 (q.v.). For earliest inventory of records, see Jan. 14, 1680.

It is ordered by the common council "The Marks of Weights and Measures be affixed as formerly NYWith y^3 addition of a Crowne."—M. C. G., I: 222. This evidently means that, as heretofore, goods which came up to the prescribed standard as to weight and bulk were to be so marked. The mark mentioned is here for the first time described in the Minutes, although English weights and measures were prescribed in Andros's time. See Oct. 6–13, 1675.

An ordinance relating to the admission of freemen is adopted by the common council, stated in simpler terms than those contained in the preceding, this subject, in language almost identical with that of the ordinance of March 15, 1683 (q.v.).—M. C. G., I: 222; compare with ibid., I: 137 and 302-3.

The common council provides that "The Mayor Recuecle for his fees six Shillings for Every Great Scale and three Shillings for a Small Scale."—M. C. G., I: 223, 234, 246.

It is ordered that "the Necessary house he removed and placed further downe upon the Docky," and a committee is appointed for that purpose.—M. C. G., I: 223. Again, on Oct. 20, 1691, it was ordered that "Ehenesar William & Peter King do forthwith build a Necessary house for the Use of the Public upon Wharfe before the City hall."—Ibid., I: 253.

Papers relating to Leisler's troubles are read in the council meeting. —Cal. Coun. Min., 64. These papers are probably the ones referred to on May 7 (q.v.). See also Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 201.

The common council's order of June 14, 1688 (q.v.), that every inhabitant should complete his wharf, fit for use, before Oct. 1 of that year,—not having been observed, and "the warfe" still being unfinished, it is now ordered that the owners of the lots "lying next the Water Side betwixt the State house and the Bridge" shall finish "the said Warfe," and shall fill up and level the holes and ditches thereon that are not filled with sand. The committee is ordered to inspect the work. —M. C. G., I: 225–26. The "said Warfe" to be completed "next the Water Side, betwixt the State house and the Bridge," between Coenties Slip and the bridge into the dock, just where the present Moore St. is, which street was opened between 1700 and 1775.—Cf. Pls. 27–28, 49, and vol. 10. This "warfe" became the present Water St. See Pl. 23-2 (1695), Vol. I, and notice the bridge, running out from Pearl St., in the line of the present Moore St. Moore Street is referred to in 1731 and elsewhere as Weighhouse Street. —Landmark Map Ref. Key, I: 161.

The order of April 29 further requires that "Every Male Negro in the city, with Wheel barrows and Spades," shall do a work's day's work at their lots, under penalty of one shilling sixpence, payable to the city by the owner of the negro neglecting to work. The inhabitants "by the said Negroes from the City hall to the Slip" were required to assemble at 7 a.m. the following Saturday, "at Bell Ringing," to settle a time for building the wharf that is to extend in front of their lots.—Ibid., I: 225–26. This wharf (the present Water St.), which was to be built "by the Water Side from the City hall to the Slip," was therefore to extend from Coenties Slip to Hanover (then called "the Slip")—See Pl. 27, Vol. I.

The inhabitants having met, it was resolved that the owners of the lots "upon the Water Side betwixt the State house and the Slip" should finish the wharf before Nov. 30 next, under penalty of £20 for failure.—M. C. G., I: 247.

On July 7, the committee was enlarged for finishing the wharf "upon the Water Side betwixt the Statehouse and the Bridge." Apr. 29.

This committee was also instructed "for the better shaping up a frame for what lands belong to the City betwixt the Statehouse and the Slip."—Ibid., I: 250. The location "betwixt the Statehouse and the Bridge" (as already stated) was from Coenties Slip to Moore St.; and "betwixt the Statehouse and the Slip" was northward as far as Howen Sq. A new committee on inspection was appointed Oct. 16; and another, to complete the wharf, was appointed Oct. 20.—Ibid., I: 250, 252. On the latter date, it was ordered that the treasurer pay the last-named committee such money as it "Shall be in disburse to accomplish the Same."—Ibid., I: 257.

Of a pictorial representation of the development of Water St. and this water front, see the Burgis View, Pl. 25, Vol. I, in the description of which it is stated (p. 245): "The Burgis View depicts the water front along the East River from the turn in State Street west of Whitehall to a point a little north of Catherine Street. The thre line, which, in 1679, corresponded to the north side of Pearl Street, had at the time of this picture [c. 1716–8] been extended a full block into the river, so that the street or wharf on which the houses in the foreground of our view are aligned is the present Water Street, which, in 1679, was the Low-water line." Gov. Sloughter, writing from "Fort William Henry," relates May to Lord Enchiquin the condition of affairs as he found them on his arrival, and as they have been adjusted since. He states that he is not willing to execute the sentence of death against Leisler "until his Majesty shall have advised him to his pleasure known therein."—

Bayard submits to the council an account for repairs to the fort, ordered by Leisler, and it is referred to a committee. —Cal. Coun. Min., 64–65.

It is ordered by the common council "that there be Sworne Surveyors appointed for this City by whose advice and Direction the Ground within the City shall be built," and "That a Regular Order and Uniformity may be kept and observed in the Streets and Buildings And that none Pave before those houses but in such manner as appointed by the Said Surveyors... Peter King and Adolph Peters are appointed Surveyors."—M. C. G., I: 246; see also ibid., I: 137.

It is ordered by the common council "that the Owners of the Seueral Lotts of Land Lyeing upon the Water Side betwixt the State house [Coenties Slip] and the Slip [Old Slip] doe finish and Complete the Wharfe that is to bee built before the Said Lotts betwixt this and the Last day of November next ensuing."—M. C. G., I: 227. This was Dock St., and later became part of Pearl St. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1007). On Sept. 21, 1691, time was extended "till Midsummer day Next" to complete this wharf.—Ibid., I: 255. The Miller Plan of 1695 (Pl. 23–2, Vol. I) shows the wharf completed.

The first act of the legislature ("Chapter I") to be passed on the restoration of peace is entitled "An Act for the Quieting and Selling the Disorders that have lately happened within this Province and for the Establishing and Securing their Majestyes present Government against the like Disorders for the Future." This act refers to the "late hasty and inconsiderate Violacen of a true faith and Allegiance" to the crown. It compels that this "hath vitiated and debauched the Minds of many people & hath also brought great waste, trouble and Destruccon upon the good people of this province," so that it "recognizes only the crown as the source of authority in the government; and that no one ought or can exercise any power over the subjects of the province, upon any pretence whatsoever, except by authority derived from the king and queen (William and Mary)" under Their Broad scale of The Realm of England, and any one who shall endeavour by force of arms "to disturb the peace good and quiet of this their Majestyes Government" shall be deemed "Rebells and Traitors," and incur the pains penalties and forfeitures as the Laws of England for such Offences made and provided."—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 213–24.

The legislature passes "An Act for the Establishing Courts of Judicature for the Ease and benefit of each respective City Town County within this Province."—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 216; Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grolier Club reprint, 1894), ev. note. The act expired in two years (April, 1693).—Ibid., I: 295.

May 6 Milt, 27, 1764. For

This act requires that "the present State and Condition of this Province Deth of necessity require that The Inhabitants thereof Should be well armed and Trained up in Art military as well for the honour and service of Their Most Excellent Majesties as the preservation of their own lives and fortunes." The troops of horse of New York and Albany shall also carry one horse each, from the person listed in the New York City regiment, except a commissioned officer or sergeant, may furnish an approved substitute to act in the nightly guard and watch in this city.

Within one year after the publication of this act, all captains of foot companies and troops of horse shall provide their respective commands with "Drumms and Colours Trumpetts Trumpeters and Banners att the proper Charge of the respective Officers Troops and Companies." Obedience to the laws and articles of war is enjoined. The wounded are to be cared for at public expense. Punishments are provided for various infractions of this law, at the discretion of a court-martial to be appointed by the captain-general or commander-in-chief. The fines and forfeitures imposed upon any person under the degree of captain go to the captains, to "defray the charge of their Companies or Troops." They are to be levied "before the next Exercizing day By distress and Sale of the Offenders goods the Captains warrant to the Sergeant or Corporall And if no distress be found the punishment to be by riding the wooden horse or being tyed neck and heels not exceeding an hour . . . ."

No one is allowed "to fire any small arms after Eight of the Clock nor any Gun upon any other unlawful Occasion." In such cases, the firing of four muskets or small arms, or (where there are great guns) the firing of one great gun and two muskets or small arms, distinctly in each case, and the beating of a drum, "shall be taken for an alarme." In case of such alarm, "every Soldierr is immediately to repair armed to his Colours or Court of Guard," under penalties for failure. Persons, including shipmasters, giving false alarms are to be punished and fined; but this does not apply to any captain or officer of ships of war when "firing att setting of the watch." Trumpeters and drummers are to receive annual salaries, the former of 40 shillings and the latter of 20 shillings each. All members of the provincial council, justices of the peace, sheriffs, coroners, officers of courts, ministers, schoolmasters, physicians, and "Chirurgeonous," are exempt from military service.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 231-56. See also referring to this act in Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grolier Club copy, 1843), p. 159.

This act, and an additional one of Oct. 18, 1705 (Col.Laws N. Y., I: 454), were repealed by an act of Nov. 27, 1707 (v. 9), which, however, re-enacted many of its provisions.

Under this law, Ingledesh's grenadiers and footiers are said to have been organized.—See article by Chas. S. Clark in The Env. Pol., 26, 1916.

Slaughter recommends to the Earl of Nottingham (principal secretary of state) that "If his Matiee Shall please to grant his pardon for all except Jacob Leiser and Jacob Milbourne it will be a favour, and all care shall be taken of their estates to be at his Majesty's disposal, tho' some of them are scarce worth anything."—May 6 N. C. Col. Docs., III: 766-67.

Slaughter replies to the lords of the privy council regarding the petitions, memorials, and affidavits, and against Leiser, which they sent him, on Oct. 17, 1690 (p. 9), to investigate. He says: "I have examined and inquired into the Allegacions contained in the address of May 19, 1690, in which Leiser is referred to as an Insulent Alien from the Merchants, Traders and Principal Habitants of New York to their Majesties [see N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 748], and do find them severly true." He sends, with this reply, a copy of the memorial which Blagge (Leiser's delegate to England) had written to the king (see ibid., III: 738). This memorial Slaughter had received among the documents he was required to investigate; and he returns it with an answer prepared by Bayard and Nicolls.

This answer of Bayard's, which Slaughter evidently intended as an expression of his own opinion also, reviews the facts and circumstances as seen by the opponents of Leiser, showing many alleged errors, falsehoods, and illegal proceedings which he is said to have been guilty of. Among the many allegations are the following: That Leiser "made to himself a Broad Seale with he called ye Seal of ye Province, with ye usual arms of Kings of England, and affixed the same to unlawful grants of land within this Province," that he commissioned, under this seal, justices of the peace, "in whose hands were miscellany;" that he constituted "Courts of Oyer and Terminer," and tried several subjects for alleged treason, murder, and other crimes; that he taxed and levied money upon the king's subjects "to their grievous oppression and great impoverishment" that he "For each and every horse; for each and every man, woman, and child on land and sea, and all other goods and goods and to the value of thousands of pounds," and all this after the best Protestant subjects in the Province; that he "imprisoned whom he feared . . . ; some of them after a tedious confinement without coulour of law he whipt and branded, and some he kept in doresse so long as he held ye foot."

Referring to more recent events, the answer recites that Leiser "gave orders to ye 26th blockhouse (a fortification at ye opposite corner of ye City where he had a strong guardion commanded under him, by one of his Lieut. Basset) to suffer no soldiers nor others to appear armed before ye same, and if otherwise to fire at them; said he would do ye same from ye Fort, and at length contrived to sail out upon ye town and kill all ye should be found in the streets or elsewhere in arms, and accordingly orders and a sign was given to ye 26th Blockhouse. He shott a karrman throw the shoulder being in sight of ye Fort with his karrton loaded, and refusing to carry his load on his tithiter, and karr'd the karrmen horse; fired great guns through several houses of the Cityt, particularly throw the house where he understood their Majesties soldierr and ammunition was lodged; karr'd one Josiah Browne an old soldier, one negro with a sodierr, four horsemen, and a great many subject of any station, for any other unlawful Occasion." In such cases, the firing of four muskets or small arms, or (where there are great guns) the firing of one great gun and two muskets or small arms, distinctly in each case, and the beating of a drum, "shall be taken for an alarme." In case of such alarm, "every Soldierr is immediately to repair armed to his Colours or Court of Guard," under penalties for failure. 8 Gov. Bradford of Massachusetts writes to the Earl of Nottingham that he has received "His Majesty's commands of the 30th of April 1690, forwarded about eight days since by the Honl. Henry Sloughter Esq' Governor in Cheife of their Majesties Province of New Yorke to deliver the same to the Governor of New Yorke or such as should be appointed by him to receive the same, the Records of that Province, the great guns belonging to Pemaquid Fort that were brought to Boston and one of the sloops. . . . In observance whereof we have caused the Records to be delivered and given order according to his desire that the great guns be in a readinessy to be disposed of according to his commands. As to the plains that His Majesty has been misinformed, and that there is not any such available.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 769. Bradford writes the substance of this letter to Sloughter also.—Col. 9 The common council order, "that Mr Schuyler and Mr Coler bee appointed to Enquire of M' Cortlandt what Security was given by M' De La Noy att his Entry into the Treasurers office."—M. C. C., I: 227. Peter Delanoy was appointed city treasurer by the common council Oct. 19, 1695, and was specifically named as such in the Dongan Charter. He continued to be treas-urer even after he was elected assistant alderman in 1697, and as one of the Leisler faction became mayor in 1698. "With Leisler's fall it was a completely altered municipal government that began to "Inspect the Revenues" in 1691, and try 'particularly' to learn about the money that had been spent, apparently with little satisfaction. After his death, his widow claimed £170, 'by him disbursed for the publick Benefit.' A search for accounts to audit was again made by four different committees, apparently without avail. Very likely it was the widow Delanoy, rather than the city, that suffered because the old order of business was guarded by no rules.

See Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. at an 18th Cent. Municipality, 30–31, citing M. C. C., II: 83, 99, 113, 199: III: 52. It was not until 1710 that the treasurer was obliged to give bond, after a committee had reported that the "disorder of the City Affairs and Act... hath Cost the Corporation the Law- mits &c; (besides all other Grievous Charges and Damages and Losses), upwards of £200."—M. C. C., II: 401-2. Also see May 13, 1710.

11 The council orders that arms taken from citizens of New York during the late troubles are to be returned.—Col. Min., 65, 15.

14 The entry in Ledger No. 1 of the chamberlain's office bears this date (see Pl. 20, Vol. IV). The original volume is now on deposit in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and its text was published in the society's Collections, in 1909.

13 The legislature passes "An Act declaring what are the Rights and Privileges of their Majesties Subjects inhabiting within their Province of New Yorke." It refers, perhaps semi-jokingly, to the assembly as an "assembly of no power. The assembly is to meet once a year. Every freethinker in the province and Freeman in any corporation shall have a vote in electing representatives. New York City and County are allowed four representatives. The act also defines the character of the laws that shall not be passed, and thereby defines the rights of indivi-duals.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 244. See also note in Laws & Acts, Bradford ed. (Grolier Club reprint, 1894), p. cxii. This act was the Charter of Liberties of 1683, with modifications relative to churches. It met the same fate as before. The king vetoed it in 1657. The real reason for this was that this bill of rights vested supreme power and authority, under the king, in the governor, council, and by the people by their representatives.—Winner, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 195.

15 The legislature passes an act to defray the charges for maintaining the poor and preventing vagabonds.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 257. Edmund Watts of New York, Bradford ed. (Grolier Club reprint, 1894), p. cxi, note. It was revised Oct. 18, 1701.—Ibid., I: 456.

14 The council advises that it is necessary that the sentence against Leisler, etc., be carried out.—Col. Min., 65. This was "At a Council held at Court Willi' Henry," at which were present Gov. Sloughter, Thos. Tyrrell, Asst. Gov., Adm'r of New Yorke, John Bayard, Stephen Van Cortlandts, William Nicolls, and Gabriel Monville. They resolve unanimously "that the sentence pronounced against the prin-cipal Offenders Leisler and Milbourne be forthwith put in Execu- tion." This is deemed "as well for the satisfaction of the Indians as the assurance of the Government & Authority residing in his Excellency & preventing insurmountable & disorders for the future."

The dying speeches of Leisler and Milbourne have been preserved in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40th ed.), II: 215-15, having been printed on the original paper in the possession of Leisler’s granddaughter, Mrs. Farmer, who was the daughter of the widow Milbourne and Abram Goumeneur. These speeches are deeply affecting and are full of expressions of Christian piety and devotion to the king of England.

One Thomas Jeffers made affidavit on Feb. 19, 1692, that he "did see the said Capt. Leisler & Mr. Milbourne put to death being first hanged and then their heads cut off; and at the place of Execution this deposit did hear the Capt. Leisler declare his innocence and that he died a martyr for King William."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 521, see also the petition of Leisler, 2nd, inDoc. Hist. N. Y. (40th ed.), II: 27; his history of the Dutch Church (Eccles. Rec., II: 127) that a detailed account of the execution was given fully “by certain women a short time after its occurrence, who went hence to Amsterdam,” but who they were or where their account was recorded is not stated. Another woman who wrote a letter from New York to A. Dawson on Aug. 6, 1691, describing the distress that the followers of Leisler were suffering, and expressing the loyalty of all to the king and queen. Her letter was published by Dawson in The Historical Mag. (3d ser., 1872-3), I: 18-20.

A third woman, one Mrs. Latham, made a statement which was reported to Du Simüller, who recorded it in 1696, describing details of the execution, at which she helped to lay out the body of Leisler. See also May 14.

This woman stated, among other things, that Leisler and Milbourne "were buried in a ground belonging to Leisler to the east of the Commons of the city near the corner of a street called George Street in the new Plan of the city.”—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 425. "George Street is the present Spruce Street. The exact burial spot is thought to have been near the corner of Park Row and Spruce Street, or between Spruce and Frankfort Streets, back of the Tribune building of to-day. Frankfort Street, it is believed, was named later for Leisler’s place of burial.."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., III: 558; see also map by David Grim showing location of Leisler’s grave, in Man. Com. Coun. (1860), opp. p. 426; ibid. (1860), 543; and ibid. (1866), 594-97.

It is interesting to observe here that both Brodhead’s Hist. New York City (1883), and Van Rensselaer’s Hist. City of N. Y. (1909) were conducted "for the benefit of the public, with the object of preserving the history of the city, the city government and the experiences of the individuals who have lived in the city for the last two centuries."

It is also apparent from the references given above that the city of New York has a rich and varied history, and that the city’s residents have had a profound influence on the growth and development of the city, as well as on the nation as a whole. The city’s history is filled with important events, such as the American Revolution, the Civil War, and the construction of the Long Island Railroad, which have shaped the city’s development and contributed to its wealth and prosperity. The city’s history is also marked by the contributions of many outstanding individuals, such as George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Abraham Lincoln, who have played a crucial role in shaping the course of American history.

The city of New York is noted for its rich cultural heritage, with a diverse array of cultural traditions, including African-American, Asian, and Latin American cultures, as well as a vibrant artistic and literary community. The city is also known for its numerous museums, galleries, and cultural institutions, which offer a wide range of activities and events, from art exhibitions and concerts to literary readings and dance performances.

The city of New York is also home to a number of important administrative and governmental institutions, including the City Hall and the State Capitol, which house the offices of the mayor and the governor, respectively. The city is also home to a number of important academic institutions, including Columbia University, New York University, and the City University of New York, which offer a wide range of educational programs and opportunities for students from around the world.

Col. Bayard, Judge Johnson, and Mr. Lyndale are named "to make arrangements for the governor's burial in Stuyvesant's vault."—Cal. Coun. Min., 66.

Maj. Richard Ingoldsby is sworn into office as commander-in-chief (N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 791); and proclamation is made to that effect.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 215. The council administered the government from July 23, when Slougher died, to July 27.

Aug. 8. In an address by Gov. Ingoldsby and the council to the king, the English provinces are described to show the territory drawn upon for revenue. Of this city they state: "New York is the Metropolis, is situate upon a barren island bounded by Hudson's River and the East River that runs into the Sound, and hath nothing to support it but trade, which chiefly flows from flowers and fruits of the corse the west end of Long Island and Zopus produce; which is sent to the west Indies, and there is brought in return from thence amongst other things a liquor called Rumm, the duty whereof considerably encreaseth Your Majesties revenue."—N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 776-800.

13 Ingoldsby commissions John Ashton to be store-keeper of Fort William Henry.—From the original document, sold by Heincle, Phila. (item No. 392), Oct. 22, 1719. This appears to be the only record of this appointment, the first mention of Ashton in the council minutes being on March 17, 1692.—See Cal. Coun. Min., 79. The office of store-keeper, however, was a recognized part of the military establishment of the province.—See Blathwayt's jour. (transcript, Lib. of Cong.), I: 503, under date of May 4, 1688.

17 The council decides that a prize taken by Capt. Kidd ought not to pay customs duties, because the ship and goods are already "paying the Kings tenth and the Government Fifteenths."—Council Minutes (Albany).

Sept. 3. There is a record of this date of an audited account of Thomas Newton, for expenses for bringing the New York records from Boston.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 215.

17 Dec. 3. The lotts belonging to the City from Burgers path to the foot of the hill by Mr Beekman be Exposed to Sale."—M. C. C., I: 233; and see Dec. 3, 1668. The annual election was approaching and no steps were taken, but a month later when a new mayor and common council "perused" former resolutions "in order to a further proceeding in the business of this City," they confirmed this same order.—Ibid., I: 247, 249. "In Order to the Sale of the Said Lotts" they were ordered to be surveyed on Nov. 26.—Ibid., I: 257.

18 The common council orders that a lease be drawn to Robert Stapleton for "a certain pl of land lying beyond the Smith's ferry at the foot of the hill bounded Southwest by the Land of M. Beekman." It is 46 ft. in front and 22 ft. "Backward into the hill." Stapleton is to pay six shillings a year, and leave "a Conveniend Road between his house and high water mark." The term of the lease is to be during the life-time of himself and wife, at the expiration of which time "the Deed is not to revert to the city."—M. C. C., I: 233. Stapleton's land was probably between Beekman and Ferry Sts. Its relation to Beekman's house is indicated; but recent research has failed to locate definitely Beekman's house (the old house and brew-house of Thomas Hall). The "Convenient Road" seems to have been fitted (Pearl St.), as Water St. was not yet opened.—See Pl. 25-8, Vol. I.

19 The common council orders that £61 be paid by the treasurer "for Stockdakes and works for the Wharf."—M. C. C., I: 233. On Sept. 21, it was ordered that "the Stockdakes bee brought into the City yard and Secured for the City Use."—Ibid., I: 255.

Sir William Phips was appointed governor. As explained by Winsor, "N. Y. Col. Docs. The ordinance prohibiting the slaughter of animals within the city limits (see June 7, 1676) is repealed, for some inexplicable reason.-M. C. C. I: 244, 249. One is prepared to hear subsequently (June 23, 1676) that "Slaughter houses in Queen Street near the Stagg Gate, A Great Nuisance to the Inhabitants Adjacent by the Noisome Smell of ye fifth thereof." Butchering there was stopped.—Ibid., I: 408.

"Merchants, traders, or shopkeepers are required by the common council, when made freemen, to pay £5, the maximum charge allowed by the charter, instead of £5:12 and fees, as previously charged.—M. C. C. I: 246.

The violent factional differences which developed after the execution of Leisler and Milbourne now become focused upon the question of pardon for those who had been condemned with them. The documentary sources for this information are voluminous. The following references present the main lines of inquiry. A memorial is sent to the king and queen from Holland on Oct. 15, by relatives and agents of those imprisoned in New York, asking that the latter may be provisionally liberated on bail, until they can inform their majesties regarding their connection with the Leisler rebellion.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 809-12.

Jacob Leisler, 2d, also petition the king, reviewing the events in which his father and his brother-in-law, Milbourne, figured, and asking "for the preservation of the Six condemned persons & the relief of Your Petitioner & other Poor Sufferers, as also for the preservation & future good Establishment of the said Province." He mentions Ingoldsby, now the commander-in-chief of the province, who "doth continue to exercise great Violence and barbarity against your Maj[esty's] loyal Subjects there."—Ibid., III: 825-26. Vide infra.

Leisler's followers constitute of any means of support for herself and family "for the approaching Winter," petitioned Ingoldsby, about November of this year, for the release of certain property belonging to her late husband's estate.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), II: 224.

On Jan. 7, 1694, "Att the Court at White Hall," London, the petition from Jacob Leisler, 2d, was read, complaining that his father and Milbourne were unjustly put to death, six others being condemned but reprieved, and all their estates confiscated. On his plea for relief, the king referred the petition to the lords of the committee for trade and foreign plantations, "to examine the whole of the said report & to report y' same to his Maj[esty] at this board & then his Maj[esty] will declare his further pleasure."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 331-32.

Several affidavits from Feb. 19 to March 7, 1694, were made by mariners and merchants of New York, intended evidently to be used in laying claims for damages and losses in the Leisler rebellion, and showing how circumstances favourable to Leisler. The deposition of George Dolstone is especially noteworthy.—Ibid., 314-31.

On March 11, 1694, the queen-in-council, on hearing the report of the committee for trade and plantation which had examined the petition of Leisler's son (referred to this committee on Jan. 7), decided that Leisler and Milbourne "were condemned and have suffered according to Law," but she declared that, "Upon the Humble application of the relations" of Leisler and Milbourne, she "will order the estates" of Leisler and "Milburne "restored to their Families as objects of her Majesty's mercy."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 827.

The date here given, March 11, may have been misread by some copyist, as it is given elsewhere as: A Letter from a Gentleman, etc. (pubh. by Bradford in 1694), 34.

On May 13, 1694, by the advice of a committee of the lords of trade, the queen ordered that the recognizances taken from those condemned with Leisler be vacated and set aside by Gov. Fletcher.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 313-14.

On Sept. 1, 1694, four adherents of Leisler, who were in prison under sentence of death for treason, petitioned the governor and council for pardon and the restoration of their estates. They were Gerardus Beeckman, Johannes Vermylde, Thomas Basher, and Abraham Guernouer.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 239, N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 313. Fletcher declared that they were "set at liberty by virtue of Her Majesties Order in Council dated ye 13th May last."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 5. He wrote to Nottingham on Sept. 10 that the king's service in the province was suffering on account of suits for damages brought by those who suffered on both sides of the Leisler rebellion; and added that, "unless a pardon will come over," the province would become a prey to the enemy (the French and Indians).—Ibid., III: 847.

In writing to Blathwayt (sec. of board of trade), on Oct. 4, 1694, Fletcher gave a different version of the petition for pardon. It was his advice that they "apply for pardon, and offered to assist them procure it, but they continued "positive not owing their liberty [to] a favour" and did not alter "Justification of their Crimes." Some of them were even elected to the assembly, an event which Fletcher opposed, and which led them to say that he was "setting up the Arbitrary Power." They "will not own [that they committed] a crime but persist," Fletcher stated, "that what they did was for King William and Queen Mary." He "desires they may be pardoned or Executed."—Ibid., IV: 54-55. This letter was read at the meeting of the committee of trade and plantations at Whitehall on March 12, 1694. The lords agreed "to lay this whole matter before his Maj[estie] in Council," and to move that, for the quieting of these differences in New York, the king should "order a Pardon for the said Persons." This the king granted on March 15.—Ibid., IV: 85.

A new struggle, on the part of Leisler's widow and son, and of the six who were pardoned, now began, to secure a reversal of the attainder whereby their estates had been forfeited and their blood "corrupted." Many affidavits, petitions, and pleas were made, containing statements of fact and arguments for this purpose.—See the printed papers in the N. Y. Pub. Library entitled Captain Leister's Case; Reasons for a Reversal of Leister's Attainder; Reasons . . . against the Passing the Bill for the reversing the Attainders and An Answer to the Reasons against Leister's Bill. See also the documents in the case printed in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 334-45. For a brief account of the personal history of Leisler's widow, see Man. Comp. C. 1863, p. 225.

On Feb. 28, 1695, the petitioners were permitted by the king to apply to parliament for reversal of the attainder. Leisler (2d) and Guernouer then addressed themselves to the house of lords (ibid., 337-38, 339-40) and on May 3, 1695 (q. v.), the attainder was reversed by parliament. In 1696 (q. v.), however, Leisler's followers were kept out of all employment in the government service, and his son was kept out of part of his estate. In 1698 (q. v.), Bellomont took a bold stand in upholding the rights of Leisler's heirs and adherents, his predecessor, Fletcher, having refused to obey the act of parliament respecting them. As late as 1702, Leisler (2d) had not been fully paid.—See summary, under May 15, 1699.

A committee of the common council is appointed to inspect and determine whether the former order (see M. C. C., I: 196, 225, 234, 235, 249) has been complied with "for the Compleating and finishing the Wharfie and filling up and Levying Levelling all the holes and Spaces between the City board and bridge."—Ibid., I: 250. On Oct. 20, this committee reported "that the Wharfe before the several Lots following are not Complated," the list being given. Time was extended to Nov. 20, and a committee appointed for completing the work.—Ibid., II: 251-52.

An offer of £150 is made for seven years for the privilege to 20 Long Island is rejected by the common council as not being "the yearly Value of the Same."—M. C. C., I: 252. On Nov. 6, John Arentson offered £147 yearly for seven years "at Publick Out Cry" and became the ferry-man.—Ibid., II: 253. See June 13,
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

The income from this source was the largest item in the city's annual credit column at this period. In 1728, the rental was £58, which resulted in a "virtuallizing" privilege at the ferry-house on the Brooklyn side.—Ibid., III: 430. See 1715.

"The common council orders that the treasurer pay the committee appointed for finishing "the Wharf from the City Hall to the Bridge" whatever sum the committee has disbursed for this object.

It also orders "that the Sherriffe immediately cause a Ducking Stoole to be built upon the Wharf before the City hall and goe to the Treasurer for his pay." See Oct. 7.

It also directs the mayor and chief of the two assistant aldermen, Wilbon and King, "to do forthwith build a Necessary house for the Vse of the Publicq upon the Wharf before the City hall where they think most Convenient," and that the treasurer pay the committee for this disbursement.—M. C. C., I: 253.

Nov.

The ferry is "ordered att a Publick Out Cry" to John 6 Aristen for seven years.—M. C. C., I: 253. See Oct. 20.

A Quaker minister, Thomas Wilson, arrives in New York by ship from abroad. He records in his journal: "We...had a meeting there, and from thence went to Long Island, where we had several good meetings with friends." Wilson visited New York again in 1714, noting that this event as follows: "From Shrewsbury we travelled to Woodbridge and New-York, and thence to Long Island, where we staid the yearly-meeting, which was a large and blessed meeting; from whence we went by water to Rhode Island, and was at their yearly-meeting in the fourteenth month...From Long Island we went to New-York, where we had a large and blessed meeting; the people who were not friends, confessed to the truth."

From A Brief Journal of the Life, Travels and Labours of Love, in the work of the Ministry, of that Eminent and Faithful Servant of Jesus Christ, Thomas Wilson, who died this Life, at his own habitat near Edenderry, in Ireland, both of the third month, 1735. London, 1784 (in the John Carter Brown Library, Providence; not in Evans' Am. Bibliog.). This very scarce work appears to supply a missing record in Quaker annals, for Thomas Wilson is not indexed in the Ecles. Rec., State of N. Y.

25 The common council orders that every house in Towne that hath three fire places provide two Leather Buckettes and every house of fewer fire places one Leather Bucketti. The ordinance also requires that every brewer shall have six and every baker three of these fire-buckets "ready in their houses."—M. C. C., I: 255.

It is ordered by the common council that Twenty foot further into the Dock at the End next the Bridge and Twenty five foot at ye End of y wharf be Exposed to Sale...the price Set of Said Land before each man Lots is one Shilling p'foot & the purchaser to make a good and Substantialt Street att the front of their lot 5 foot broad at the direction of the Surveyor." It is also provided "that no buildings be built in the front towards ye Waterside from the Dock at ye Street House but what shall be whole 50ft. high and the Gabrell end to be brick or stone upon the penalty of Such buildings being pulled downe."—M. C. C., I: 256.

4 The common council appoints overseers of the poor for the next three months. They were "Impowered to receive Such persons as they Shall deem Objects of Charity and to draw bills upon the Treasurer for Such moneys as they Shall disburse for Such Ends."—M. C. C., I: 258. This represents a change of policy in the care of the city's poor. The new officers assume the burden that had fallen previously on the alderman and assistant of each ward.—See Oct. 19, 1685; Oct. 20, 1695.

A committee of the common council is appointed "to Cause the land before Mr. van Broghahn &c. to be Surveyed and laid out into Convenient Strips and high ways and to divide the Same into convenient Lots and make a reporte thereof to the Common Council and the Mayor."—M. C. C., I: 258. On Feb. 1, 1693, complaint was made that a fence was being set up "in the Highway and Street...before the door of Mr. Broghahn." A committee of aldermen was appointed to stop "any Such trespass," and another committee "to Inquire of ye Ancient Inhabitants of this City how long ye Said ground [the present Hanover Square] hath been Vacant & High ways belonging to ye Said and by what right or pretence any person lays Claim to it."—Ibid., I: 308-9. On March 30, 1693, this report was referred to, and among the persons, including Mr. and Mrs. "van Broghahn," that for at least 30 years "it hath always been Vacant and High ways for the use of the City," and "there hath been nor fence or any thing in that nature about the Said Ground."—Ibid., I: 310. On March 31, 1693, "Upon the Petition of the Heirs of Govert Lockerman deceased Concerning the Ground Opposite Mr. Van Brougahns door," a committee was appointed to "view the Ground in Controversy and to Continue the Streets to the former breadth of forty foot."—Ibid., I: 320.

Regarding purchase and survey of adjoining land, see Feb. 4, 1696.

The common council orders that buyers of land between the bridge and the dock (between the present Moore St. and Whitehall Slip), who are obliged to make the street (the present Water St.) shall be allowed to do so in the following manner: They shall build a good and substantial stone wall, 31 ft. in height at the bottom, "to batter one foot inwards on the Outside." They shall protect it from "the rubbing of boats" by driving "Spolys or Stockadoes" every 5 ft., and these shall be 7 in. in diameter, bound together at the top and a plate. When finished this wall shall be kept in good repair by the owners of the lots fronting the street or wharf, who, nevertheless, are not to claim any property or interest in the street or wharf, which, instead, is "to remaine to the use of the City." The owners of this land, to fill up their respective lots, are obliged to use "the Dutch Mudd Twenty foot wide" to complete it in 12 months. The city building that shall be built in front of these lots.

The common council also orders that the land between Burger's Path and the blockhouse shall be laid out into 13 lots, the first being the blockhouse lot, the 6th and 7th, between to the slip (at Burger's Path), 59, 60, 61, 62, to 67 lots to each 24 ft. wide. A condition upon which the lots shall be "So Exposed to Sale" is "that they [each buyer of a lot] shall fill up ye front of the Said Land with one intire house &c. Shall be Two full Storys high above the ground and the front to the Street to be Either brick or Stone. The same form of building shall be built in the Street next the Seaward; if any other sort of buildings are erected fronting either street they shall be pulled down.—M. C. C., I: 259-60. See also May 6 and Aug. 10, 1692.

A petition from "the Minister Elders Deacons and Congregation of the Dutch Reformed Church in the City of New York" to the common council, "desiring that a certaine vacant p' of ground Situate to the Northward of the dwelling house of Cornelius Pluier might be granted unto them to build and Erect thereon a Church for the publick Worship of Almighty God." It is ordered that a grant be given accordingly, and the entire common council, or the major part of them, are made a committee to execute the order, it being provided that all of them who are in town shall be summoned for the surveying and laying out of the land, and shall have power to grant the patent to the church.—M. C. C., I: 260.

In Perunsance of an Order of Comon Counc. bearing date the Eight of December it is appointed, that a committee, whose duty is "to Examine, Lay out and Sell a certaine Tract of Land lying in Garden Street," reported, on Dec. 17, that they found the land measured 175 ft. English measure on the north side, and 180 ft. more or less on the south side. This land was accordingly "Ordered for the Dutch Church." The consideration is stated to be "one hundred and Eighty Currant p' of Eight Six Shilling p' to be paid upon Sealing the Patents." Aldermen Johannes Kipp and Brandt Schuyler accepted the proposal on behalf of the Dutch Church.—Ibid., I: 261.

An abstract of the records of the Dutch Church, dated Dec. 22, 1691, shows that the church resolved to buy this ground for a new church, and to hasten its erection by appointing building masters and persons to prepare a plan. The church in the fort was decaying, and no longer fit for public service. The constitory and great consistory chose the Holland masters, between Mr. van Cortland, Mr. Jan Sibbens. The plot was 80 ft. long, and belonged to the city, by deed from Josa Lawrence and Sara, his wife. The price was £154, to be paid out of the "Trouwosh and the Deacons' treasury." The building masters appointed were John Kip, Brandt Schuyler, and Tunis de Key, whose duty was to procure materials and urge on the building. In 1692, Stephen van Cortlandt, Nicholas Bayard, and Adolph Pietersen, were given full power.—Ecles. Rec., II: 1030. The following year the land was conveyed to the church.—See Feb. 19, 1692. The South Reformed Dutch Church, in Garden St., was built here.—See Landmarks, New York, Key, III, 101-2.

In this year, the Chevalier d'Aux, an emissary of Frontenac to the Iroquois, drew a plan of New York and its surroundings, as far north as the Collect Pond. This drawing, which is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 22–3, is particularly interesting as giving a good idea of the fortifications existing at this period, and of the road system outside of the walls of the city.

M. Lamothe-Cadillac described Manhattan Island, in memoirs of this time, as follows (translated):

"Manate, so called when in the possession of the Dutch, is a trading post on the island. The fort is situated on a triangular point of land, and on the banks of two rivers, one called the South River and the other the North River. It has four Bastions, and is faced with stone and terraced on three sides; on the North, South and East. Some barracks and the gate are on the west side: the ditch is but a miserable affair, and is almost filled up on the East and North. There is a very fine arched gateway which is in good order; good muskets, fusils, pistols, halberts, pikes, swords, cuirasses. There are 27 pieces of iron cannon around the fort, and four small brass pieces at its gate. It is surrounded by houses on all sides except the South. The roadstead cannot be compassed about razing and throwing down almost one entire street. The same is the case on the side of the town which is built of brick and stands on the banks of the two rivers. It is not inclosed either by walls or palisades. There is one wooden wharf but smaller than that at Boston. The Vessels enter the port and are aground at low water. There may be in the town five hundred men capable of bearing arms, but they could muster 3,000 men in a short time. Here it must be remarked that there are several Quakers or Tumblers who are non-combatants. The Dutch church is in the fort. The garrison consists of 60 men. The population is composed of Calvinists, Lutherans, Anabaptists, Jews, Quakers, Abenakis, French Protestant and Mohawks, and all the men of the Church and freedom of religion. Their trade is made up of beaver and peltries which they buy from the Iroquois; whale oil, pork, staves, horses and tobacco. The people are almost all Dutch; there are about forty English families, and a great many French. This Island is almost entirely cleared. They have Negroes as in Boston. East Northeast, within 120 rods of the fort, lies an Island, on which cannon can be planted to batter the fort or the town. It is clear of wood, and easy of access. This town is much richer in money than Boston. Its principal currency consists of Spanish coin. They have considerable merchandise there also." —N. Y. Col. Doc., 1692.

In this year, William and Mary College, at Williamsburg, Va., was chartered.

In this year, persecution for witchcraft culminated at Danvers, Mass., in the judicial murder of several persons of blameless lives. Sir William Phipps, governor of Massachusetts Bay, organized, by the advice of his council, a special court for the trial of the accused. By the organization of the superior court, the special one for "witch" trials was suspended. The general court having by an act made witchcraft a capital offence, the king vetoed it, but convictions did not end, under the prevailing force of public opinion, in the face of efforts by the clergy to arrest and to influence the minds to sustain the frenzy, until more than twenty persons had been executed.

In this year, William Kidd, captain of the Antigua packet ship, trading between New York and London, married Sarah, widow of John Oort, a sea captain in regular trade. Immediately after, he resided in Hanover Sq., then one of the busiest portions of the town. "The domestic furniture of the house occupied by Captain Oort had been purchased in bulk from the representatives of the estate of William Cox, one of the leading flour merchants of the city; and upon the marriage of the widow Oort with Captain Kidd, the object of a lawsuit was happily compared with that of any household establishment in the city." For inventory of the furniture, see Man. Com. Coun. (1695), 415.

To this year, George Keith, in Philadelphia, having charged the Friends with a departure from their pacific principles by aiding in the execution of a capital crime, wrote in this year a pamphlet in which William Bradford, who supported his doctrines and had printed his pamphlets, became involved. His press and materials were seized, and he, with McCobb, his associate, was imprisoned, but released after a trial. In the next year, after Bradford came to New York (see April 10, 1693), he published, without revealing the author, an account of the trial, which took place in December, 1692. This was entitled New-England's Spirit of Persecution Transmitted To Pennsylvania. See copy of this scarce work by Mr. Dudgeon, of this city's Free Library.

From it we learn that "on the soil of Pennsylvania, the latter of our press asserted, in 1692, with a precision not since surpassed, a principle in the law of libel hardly then conceived anywhere, but which now protects every publication in much of our Union country." —From Hildebrand's chapter in Mem. Hist. of N. Y., p. 356; and see his Sketches of Printers and Printing to Colonial N. Y. (1855).

A letter from Ingoldby and the council to Lord Nottingham refers to the arrival of "the Albany Post." —N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 813. Another letter of this date refers to "the Land Post from this county." —Ibid., III: 814. These letters indicate that a post-rider was in regular operation between Albany and New York.

Although the old water gate was reported to be "all down" in 1688 (N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 1: 170, 173), it is still referred to as a familiar landmark in official records. For example, inhabitants of the city "from the Widow Lewis house to the Water Gate" are required by the common council to prove the validity of their patents to "their ground before their doors unto Low Water Mark." —M. C. C., I: 262. The location of the water gate is shown in the Labadist View (Pl. 17). —See outline key, Vol. I, opp. p. 133, and description, p. 225 (landmark No. 71). See also Landmark Map Rel., Key, III: 946.

The custom-house is out of repair; on Feb. 22, the council ordered that it be repaired. —Col. Coun. Min., 69–70.

The committee of the governor's council appointed to inspect the city's fortifications endeavor to secure the co-operation of the Board of Almoners. The latter appoints a committee which, in conjunction with Col. Bayard and some captains of militia, report that the charges "may amount to the Sume of Two hundred pounds besides great Guns powder and Ball." A proposal that the common council contribute "Twenty or Thirty pounds towards the repairing Said fortifications" is rejected, but a report is also made of efforts to have each house build a fort. —M. C. C., II: 265, 267, 268. The governor's council decided (March 19) to appropriate the revenue of the weigh-house to this purpose. —Col. Coun. Min., 70, 71; M. C. C., I: 269–71. By an order of the common council, on April 4, all inhabitants from 13 years upward "not listed in the trane hands," also all servants and negroes, are required to appear, upon notice from the captain of each ward, "at the time and place appointed by the Military officers and afford their labour with Shoelves pick; 8 Wheel barrow and other needful Instruments towards the repairing and mending of the fortifications of this City or under another man in his room to be apprehended by the Captain in the penalty of three Shillings," etc. —M. C. C., II: 267.

A committee of the council is to view the fort on Aug. 31 regarding the repairs. —Col. Coun. Min., 75. "The Accounts of Several Disbursements to the fortifications of the City New York," from March 29 to Oct. 3, 1693, signed by N. Bayard, show the expenditure of £80211111 for stockades, stove, iron, etc. (See April 3, 1693). These original accounts are preserved in metal file No. 1, city clerk's record-room. On Nov. 12, the account of Henry Ford, for carpenter work in the fort was ordered paid. —Col. Coun. Min., 78. On Dec. 15, Nicholas Bayard was paid for gun-carriage wheels. —Ibid., 79.

A petition of Arian Cordelinel, regarding land "lying nigh the Borce containing about five or Six Acres," is referred to a committee. —M. C. C., I: 264. The Borce or Boree was a part of the Bowery Road. —Man. Com. Coun. (1836), 476. See also Sept. 16.

The common council, Oct. 9, 1693, "to be a Pillory Cage Ducking Stool forfeitly built," and it appoints a committee with the sheriff "for finishing the Same," with power to draw upon the treasurer for the charges. —M. C. C., I: 267. See, further, March 3.

On examining "Danieli Van Vus his Patent," the common council is of the opinion that "all the land without the Wall belongs to the City." —M. C. C., I: 264.

Royal letters patent are granted to establish post-offices. —See Addenda.

The old and new market-houses are to be let. —See Addenda. At "the late fire in the ferry" several barrels were lost. An order of the common council is issued for the town crier to give notice that barrels be restored to the owners through the mayor, on pain of prosecution for neglect. —M. C. C., I: 266–67.
Steps are taken for building a Dutch church in Garden St. "In Persuance to a former Order of Common Council bearing date the 17th December 1691" (see Dec. 5, 1691), Mayor Abraham de Warr, in his meeting conveying the said area to the said congregation for Erecting of a Church for the Service of Almighty God. Bayard's bond is taken for $100, binding himself and heirs to use the lot only for building a church or houses for pious and charitable uses, not to assign it to any other person or persons, excepting "on the Tenour" that it shall be so used.—M. G. C., I: 266. The date of the conveyance to Bayard is elsewhere mentioned as Feb. 4.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1012. Bayard conveyed the land to the church-masters on Feb. 27, at a nominal yearly rental, to be held in tenure by the following church. This conveyance describes the lot as 84 ft. deep, north of the orchard of Elizabeth Drissian, widow, and bounded on the west by the lot of John Henry Bruyn, and on the east by the lots of John Syprens and David Hendricks.—Ibid., II: 1012-13. The location was on the north side of Garden St. (now Exchange Pl.), about midway between the present Broad and William Sts.—Man. Com. Cen. (1868), 545; see also Pl. 23-a, Vol. I. There is no record of the date of laying the corner-stone. On March 9, it was resolved by the church authorities that the moneys of the constitution, of the deacons, and of collections made at any church meetings be brought into the same in the name of the church; and that the Deacons be recommended to take out as much money as practicable, without injury to the poor, for the building of a New Church, to be erected when required.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1014-15.

The church ministers, Selwyn, Varick, and DeLellis, writing to the "Classis of Amsterdam" on Oct. 12, 1692, stated that, "During this year of troubles, a new church edifice of stone is in course of erection, outside the fort and larger than the old one."—Ibid., II: 1043. On Dec. 30, "Rev. Selwyn" wrote of the "newly erected church," which he thinks of "consecrating the next day."—Ibid., II: 1046. The "towers" (or tower) had not been built, however, as late as Nov. 14, 1694 (q. v.), nor even begun until after the congregation was incorporated in 1696.—See June 5, 1695, and May 11, 1696. In the Revolution it was used for a tune by the British as a hospital; and on Dec. 7, 1783, was reopened for public worship, and used until 1807, when a new church was erected on the same site. The last church was destroyed in the great fire of Dec., 1835.—See Chron. under the foregoing dates; also Hist. Sketch of the South Church (1887); and Landmark Map Rep. Key, III: 936.

There was a blockhouse "upon Smith's Valley" when Leisler was in command in March 1691, which was referred to in an affidavit of this date.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (400 ed.), II: 231. On May 6, 1692, it was evidently still in existence, as it was referred to in an order of the common council that lands at Smith's Fly be sold, "from the Blockhouse unto the hill next Mr. Beckman."—M. G. C., I: 273. The "Fly blockhouse & half moon" appear as landmarks No. 73, on the map of the city, 1711, of the same "towers" as given in the above-mentioned reference.—Ibid., II: 231. William Blathwayt recommends the king that £1,011 16s. (the equivalent in England of £2,432 8s. in New York) be paid to Robert Livington or his order, in order to satisfy, a mortgage held by him against Col. Dongan. In a petition for relief, Dongan stated "That he hath mortgaged all his Estate for Debts contracted & Money Expended in the Service of the Crown of England against the French which Estate will be forfeited in May next unless in the mean time reconned, his person being likewise in daily hazard of being arrested on the same[el Acc]." The entire amount expended, he says, is £1,011 16s. 8d. He has the support of the Government of that Province & in the War against the French and Indians of Canada which was successfully carried on by him" was £1,011 16s. 8d.—the amount of the previously mentioned mortgage has been spent by Livingston for provisions for the forces. Dongan claims that, in all, £5,374 11s. 10d. is due him, but the step now recommended from the represents —Blathwayt Jour. (transcript), I: 644-46; cf. Gov. Nicolls's expenditures, April 7, 1666.

By order of the governor's council, the carriages are to do duty at the fort on the work of repairs.—Cod. Coun. Min., 70. In 1693, they are ordered to be conveyed from the fort to the Common Council by Col. Dongan, of carrying 104 loads for nothing.—Cod. Hist. MSS., Engr., 217.

Mar. It is recommended to the committee of trade and plantations 3 that James Graham be paid a salary of £120 for services as collector of revenue in New York for the year 1687, when, according to the report of Gov. Sloane, the revenue was improved "during the Pettit Magnates".—Gardiner's History of the Dutch, 435. In 1681, the council orders that a ducking-stool and a pillory for women be provided.—Cal. Coun. Min., 70. The common council of the city had repeatedly ordered that they be erected, the last order being on Feb. 4, 1692 (q. v.). See also Oct. 7, 1691. On March 26, the treasurer paid £50 16s. for "a Cage & ducking stool."—Ledger No. 1, Chamberlain's Office (MS.), deposited in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and published in its Collections (1909). Rev. John Miller, M. A., is commissioned chaplain of the two companies of grenadiers in the colony of New York. He arrived in New York in the summer of this year.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 182; Eccles. Rec., II: 1014, 1694. A commission is signed at Westminster appointing Benjamin Fletcher, Esq., to be governor of New York. Instructions, signed at Kennington on March 7, accompany the commission.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 818-24, 827-33. For an estimate of Fletcher's general character and characteristics, see Winsor's Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 193.

This day is made one of thanksgiving throughout the province to celebrate the success of English arms in America, Ireland, and Turkey, and especially "for the preservation of our frontier at Albany against the French and unbelievers."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1033. Thomas Neal is elected New York in a petition to the established apt. post-offices throughout the American colonies, appoints Gov. Andrew Hamilton, of New Jersey, his deputy for all the plantations.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 200, footnote by O'Callaghan, citing New York Communications, II: 31-40. Hamilton brought the subject before Gov. Fletcher and the New York legislature in the following October (see Oct. 29, and Nov. 11, 1692), and they immediately passed an act "for encouraging a Post Office."—Ibid., citing Coun. Minutes, IV: 52, 66. O'Callaghan states that "the credit of devising this scheme for the establishment of post offices in the Colonies belongs, not to Governor Hamilton, and not to his son John, as some suppose."—Ibid. For the history of the method of postal regulations during the Dutch régime, see Aug. 6, 1672. The first post-office in New Netherland was inaugurated at the office of the provincial secretary in New Amsterdam. For details see Aug. 6, 1672. Lovelace, in 1672-3 (q. v.), revived the system; as did also Dongan on Aug. 27, 1684 (q. v.), and March 2, 1685. Hamilton was still deputy postmaster in 1689, in Bellonant's time (N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 210); and "Col. Hamilton" in 1717 (Boston News-Lett. Sept. 23-30, 1717). A report from Blathwayt to the committee of trade and plantations indicates an order in England regarding the revenue of the province during the Leislerian revolution. In June, 1689 (see June 20, 1689), "Capt. Leisler [Leisler] having turn'd out the Lieut. Governor of New York and Sez'd the Government into his own hands the Pecetin [Peter Delany] was appointed by the said Leisler to receive the Publick Monies of this Province, and as agent of the authority since which time no Accompots or other Papers relating to the Revenue of New York have been transmitted hither that Province remaining in great disorder since the Revolution."—Blathwayt Jour. (transcript), I: 614-15.

The dock being damaged by a recent storm, Jarvis Marshall, the lessee (known as the dock-master), is unable to repair it; the common council undertakes to repair one side and Marshall the other. A committee is appointed to "repair the East Side of the dock" and "the breach in the halfe Moone p[i]e 4th Cage."—M. G. C., I: 274. The cage stood with the pillory and ducking-stool on the wharf in front of the city hall. —I: 246, 273. Regarding the city's experience with Marshall and other dock-masters, and the docking situation in general, see Peterson & Edwards, N. Y., as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 111-23. The common council orders that "all of the Land in Front of the Fly from the Blockhouse unto the hill next Mr. Beckman be exposed to Sale;" and it is "Voted that from the Blockhouse to the Green [Maiden] Lane be valued at fifty and Twenty shillings p[er foot] And from the Green lane to M'r van Cliffs [John St.] be valued at Eighteen Shillings p[er foot] And from M'r van Cliffs to M'r Bate- mans be valued at fifteen Shillings p[er foot]."—M. In a letter to Fletcher, who was appointed March 18, the proprietors of West Jersey congratulate him upon his "accesso" to the "honorable imploye" of governor of New York, adding that they account themselves happy in having so good a neighbour, whose prudence and integrity will, they believe, secure them from apprehension of those mean artifices [that] have been employed by preceeding Governors or their ministers" to encroach upon their legal privileges. They offer to cooperate with him for the common defence and the administration of justice.—N. T. Col. Doc., III: 838 sqq.

The houses and barn at the ferry (on the Brooklyn side), and the "little house on this Side," are let to John Ariens as £9 per annum.—M. C. C., I: 275. The committee appointed May 6 (q.v.) to sell the lots "from the Blockhouse [Wall St.] unto Mr Beekmans [Pearl and Fulton Sts.] reports that it has done so on certain conditions; that there were 25 lots; that they were "Exposed to Sale by a publick Office to the highest Bidder," on May 27, that the purchaser was required to build a Wharf or Street the outer part whereof to be lye'd to low-water marke of thirty foot broad to be lye'd in a frame with Stockades as the Surveyors Shall direct which said Wharf the Purchaser shall be obliged to finish by the first of November" (1695). The names of the buyers of the lots, the prices paid, and the names of the surveyees were entered in the Minutes.—Ibid., I: 278-79. At a joint meeting of two committees, one from the council and one from the house, the subject of the continuance of the revenue "Established upon their Maties" is considered. This was formerly allowed for a five-years' period; it is now proposed to limit it to two. The speaker of the assembly, John Butler, asserts that, while not wanting in duty to the king and queen, the province is in danger of sinking under its already heavy burdens and great poverty. "Consider the Circumstances of Our neighbours on both sides who are without Government, free of all taxes, duties, services, and have got both Our trade and Inhabitants." (This evidently means that such conditions have been brought about by the heavy duties charged upon New York merchants, while imports and exports are free in neighboring colonies.) One hope has been felt in the prospect of possibly annexing Connecticut, the Jerseys, Pennsylvania, and New York Province. The trade of this province would then be eased by distributing its burdens.

Col. Smith, representing the council as chairman of their committee, considers the trade between New York and Boston. "They draw away Our staple Commodity of flax, which they have transmuted into, for the great profit of the trade and navigacoll of this Province." To stop this, he proposes laying an export duty of one shilling on every 100-lb. of flour. He further proposes an import duty of five per cent. on all European goods coming here from neighboring plantations, which is 15 per cent. less than the present. In 1709, the trade was still languishing.—See May 27, 1709, p. 10.

"An Act for the Encouraging A Post Office" is passed. It recites Neal's patent of 1691, Hamilton's appointment as deputy, and the latter's application to the governor and council and to the assembly for the establishment of a scale of postal rates. See also April 4 and Oct. 29, 1692. It provides "That there be from henceforth, a General letter office erected and established in Some convenient places within this City of New York, from whence all Letter's and Pouchquets and Ever after may be sent by Speed and Expedi- tion Sent into any part of our Neighbouring Colony's and plantations on the main Land and Continent of America or to any other of their Majesties Kingdoms and Dominions beyond the Sea's at which Said office all returns and answers may be Likewise received. And that one Master of the Said General office shall from time to time be appointed by the said Andrew Hamilton," etc. The law prescribes postal rates and regulations and is to be in force for three years.—Col. The provincial legislature passes "An Act for the Setting of faires and Marquets in each respective City and County throughout the Province." This is for the encouragement of trade and commerce, as well as for the convenience of the inhabitants. The act provides "that there be kept yearly...two fairs at the City of New-York, the first fair annually to commence the last Tuesday of April,...and to last four days; the second to commence the first Tuesday of November in every year,...and last four days. The governor or ruler of the fairs shall appoint and Limit out a certain and special open place within the respective Towns aforesaid where the said Respective fares to be held and kept where horns, fairs, guildings Colts and other Cattle, may be sold."—Col. The two powerful families of Van Cortlandt and Phillipse were thus doubly united.

The common council presents to Fletcher an address to the king, asking that it be GOV. IV: 102-5. The Bridge Street mentioned in this ordinance was formerly called Brugh Street; it was called Bridge Street as early as 1680 (Liber Patents, V: 9, Albany), and Hall Street on the Miller Plan of 1695 (PI. 2-a, Vol. 1). It was continued from Whitehall Street to the C. H. (MS.), XVII: 341; ibid., XVII: 316. See also May 2 and 8, 1808; June 26, 1809. Beaver Street is for the first time mentioned in this ordinance; it was the Beover or Beover's Gracht (groat) of earlier references.—See Liber Deas, M. C. C. 126 (New York); M. C. C., I: 58-59, 61, 112-13, 151.

The common council orders "that ye Recorder draw up an Adress to their Majesties, Representing the Steps, His Excellency has made, for the quiet of this Government, Since his Arrival."—M. C. C., II: 314.

William Sharps petitioned to be appointed for life as city clerk.

To an address before a joint session of the council and the house, Fletcher says in part: "Their Maties have a Weighhouse in the city of New York which from time to time hath payd a rent unto their Maties. I would have it settled upon the Maties by Act of Assembly.

Also he states that the king and queen "have ordered a man of war to attend your Coast; sent over 20 ps of Ordnance, small arms and considerable stores of war, & maintain the two Companies of Granadeers, at the expense of their Coffers in England."

Although his term of employment, or rather his salary, began on April 10, the facts at present available do not indicate that he was in his new office until after March 23, 1693.

Sarah Burger, widow of John Shakerly (see Oct. 28, 1684), having petitioned the provincial council for land in the possession of the said John, having agreed with her for land or that she enter into possession of her own land to her use,” (see Col. MSS., XXXIX: 147, Albany), the common council acts upon this order. It concerns “y^& land belonging to the Fortification Commonly Called Oyster Pasty, lying to y^& North River and Fronting to y^& Broadway of this City.” A commission is granted “to Enquire what y^& Ground will be proper to be reserved for a Passage or Lane for the use of the City.”—M. C. C., I: 331. This “Passage or Lane” became known as the Oyster Pasty Lane or Alley, and was the present Exchange Alley.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1007.

The common council orders the city surveyors, Evetts and Peterson, to lay out the lots bought from the city by the inhabitants of Dock St.—M. C. C., I: 321. On Aug. 11, the owners, in a petition, expressed surprise at finding that their lots were not to front their houses as agreed.—Ibid., I: 329. On Sept. 29, it was ordered that the surveyors lay out the lots “According to their Respective Purchases Granted to them by this City.”—Ibid., I: 333-34. On April 18, 1694, the committee of aldermen to whom the matter had been referred reported that this had been done.—Ibid., I: 333.

“Upon Reading y^& Patent of George Heathcoat for A Lot of Ground near the Slaughter house and Another on the East Side of Kings Street in this City, and Whereas his Patent extends but one hundred and forty four foot each Lot in length; It is Agreed that y^& Said George Heathcoat Shall have the Rest of y^& Land between the Lots and Low water Marke, to Range even with y^3 Streets as they Shall Be laid out by the Surveyors, and that y^& Said George Heathcoat is to finish y^& Street or Wharfe No y^& next, under y^& like Penalties of the rest of y^e Purchasers in y^& Smiths Fly and with them to have equal Priviledge.”—M. C. C., I: 322. Heathcoate's patent was a grant from the mayor, see d, dated Sept. 1694, for land bounded eastward by the street south by the river at low-water.—Liber City Grants, A: 1:18-41. By this instrument, Heathcoat agreed to make a street 30 feet wide, fronting the river. This is “y^e street or wharfe” mentioned in the Minutes. It was part of the present Water Street.

Gov. Fletcher is commissioned by the king to be commander-in-chief of the forces of Connecticut, with power to transfer them to the province of New York. Sir William Phips is relieved of the command.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 29-31. This commission reached Fletcher on Oct. 1.—Ibid., IV: 55.

The Governor and Antje Christians ("Antje Christaeten") join in a petition to Fletcher, stating that the son of the former and the husband of the latter, both sailors, have been "taken Slaves unto Salley [Salem, Morocco] by y^e Indifels," and that Fletcher has granted these petitioners a "Briefe" (permit) "to collect and receive y^e free & bountiful Charity of all good Christians within this Province for ye Redemption of y^e miserable Persons;" but, as they are not competent to take up this collection, they have prevailed upon the church-wardens and ministers of this city to do so, and they now ask Fletcher for a new "Brief" for this purpose, in form similar to one (which they annex to their petition) which was used in 1658, when a vessel was taken by the Turks. The sum required to redeem these captives is £100, as was the case in 1678; and the petitioners propose that if there is any surplus it be delivered as Fletcher shall see fit, and employed for "y^e like pious uses." By the advice of his council, Fletcher grants the license (or "Brief") desired. It is announced in a proclamation printed by Bradford in the form of a broadside (one of the earliest dated examples of printing done in the state and city of New York), and addressed "To all Officers and Ministers Ecclesiastical and Civil throughout the Provinces and Territories under my Government." It requires that it be read and affixed to the doors of churches or meeting-houses, and that the collection be made at the next meeting the collection will be received for this object. Accounts are to be kept, which are to be transmitted, with the money collected, to Stephen Cortland, Peter Jacobs Marius, John Kerbyll, and John Kipp, who shall "transmit the said Money, or so much as shall be requisite for the Redemption of Captives" and the council, "in the best way, most convenient means and way," and account to Fletcher for the surplus. Fletcher gives the same license in behalf of three other captive sailors, taken in the same vessel.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., June (40to ed.) III: 252-53.

A memorandum of receipts from the collection to ransom these "slaves in Sale" has been published, without citation, in Ecclus. Rev., XII: 1667-68; Fletcher's account of this "Collection," together with others, is published in a "Joint Receipt" by the council, "for funds received for the necessary of a court of exchequer.—Cal. Coun. Min., 86. On July 27, it was decided that no such court was needed.—Ibid.

Gov. Fletcher suggests to the council the "danger of the falling of their Maties Chappell in the fort" (built by Keift in 1642, p. 87) and at the next meeting the collection will be "pulled down and that it be recommended to the next assembly to provide for building another Chappell."—Ex. Coun. Min., VI: 216-18 (Albany). On

"To consider of the dimensions for a new Chappell in this flort of the Town, and to be Overseers of the building thereof."—Ibid., VII: 3. (The works supplied are presumably those used in the original MS., which was partially destroyed in the Capitol fire). The old chapel was demolished prior to Sept. 12 (q.v.).

Aug. 17: The court of mayor and aldermen instructs two aldermen to "view the Highways between this City and King bridge. And y° they summon the Inhabitants of the Out Ward To Reparate and repair the Sand Highways and make them fit for Travellers Waggon &c."—M. C. M. (MS.), Aug. 15, 1693.

18: Reports are received from Boston of the fear of attack from a French squadron. The council directs that the militia of New York be in readiness for a march to Boston, and that ten of the greatest guns be mounted at "Sandypoint" (Sandy Hook)—Cal. Coun. Min., 90.

19: A proclamation is issued forbidding the exportation of provisions until further orders, because they may be needed for the troops summoned to defend New York.—Cal. Coun. Min., 90. On Aug. 30, permission was granted to Samuel Burgess to export flour.—Ibid.

The common council gives Ebenezer Wilson the preference in the sale of the waste or spare ground "Ranging with the Gate Going into M. C. I., 320.

The common council orders that "all Persons & all Indian & Negro Slaves" not listed among the militia of the city "Shall either Workes themselves or Appoint Some Others in their Place for ye Repairing the fortifications round the City."—M. C. G., I: 529-30. It is also ordered that £1000 be raised to supply the militia and to repair the fortifications, until another fund may be raised by act of assembly or otherwise.—Ibid., I: 520-30. On Aug. 25, the assembly agreed to raise such a fund.—Cal. Coun. Min., 90.

On Sept. 13, the common council ordered that the recorder draw up a petition to the assembly asking that the assembly also "allow a Gen. Fund of y° whole Province," inasmuch as the fortifications around the city are for the security of the whole province. They estimated that there were needed about £350.—M. C. G., I: 330.

In an address to the provincial legislature, on the subject of "the settlement of their Mat' Revenue in this Province," Fletcher pleads, among other things, that this may be, not for two years only, but for "their Maties for lives," adding: "let not opportunity be lost, lest there be scope to aswer you with that new codal name of Jacobites..."

Continuing, he says: "I have designed a platform on which I purpose to mount a battery for the defence of this City which is indeed the safety of the Province. I suppose you have all heard how we have this lately alarm'd with the noise of a squadron of fire ships designed to attack this place. I have view'd the river and sounded in several parts, in order to raise some fortifications to impede their access to the City, but at length concluded a good battery upon this plateform would answer the end, I have by their Maties favour unto you gusses for one tee; I have wrote for more..."

"There is likewise the Kings Chappell in the flort [see July 27] which being ready to fall down to the danger of many lives, I thought it convenient to pull it down, and if you will give something towards the rebuilding of it we will all joye in some good a work. If his Maty were not engaged in an expensive war I should not doubt to have orders to rebuild it at his own charge..."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 42. Evidently nothing was done toward rebuilding the chapel before Oct. 20, 1694 (q.v.).

On Sept. 15, the general assembly appointed a committee to inquire into the necessary fortifications recommended by the governor, senate, etc., and make a report with all convenient speed.—Assemb. Jour., I: 31. Writing to the committee of trade (London) on Oct. 9, Fletcher said: "Our rivers are broad I have sounded in 111 places between the Fort at New York and Sandy hook, and design to make a Platform on the Out most Rocks under the Fort and Erect a battery theron, it is so designed that by the swiftness of the tyde no ship can ride before the Town, but must have her Serm or Sheets fast."—N. P. Col. Decis., IV: 57.

Ch. 10: The common council appoints a committee "to Supervise & take Care that y° Custom house Bridge be planked' on each Side and fitted [...fillled up with Dirt Rubish &c] between thirty & forty foot.”—M. C. C., I: 135-51. On Sept. 30, it was "Ordered by y° assembly of y° Bridge be Continued as far as y° Knooches upon y° Said Bridge they being the marks even with the end of the street."—Ibid., I: 311-32.

Warrants are issued by order of the governor's council to pay Miles Forster for logs, and Peter de Riemer for glass, for the fort.—Cal. Coun. Min., 91.

Col. Andrew Hamilton, the postmaster-general, in a memorial to the governor and council, explains: "the great charge he is at in maintaining the Office being four times so much as the profits arising thereby." He asks that, in view of its convenience to trade and correspondence, it may be supported the first three years by a salary of £100 a year, which is requested by the council to the assembly for consideration.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 43. The assembly referred it to a committee composed of one member from each county.—Assemb. Jour., I: 53. Hamilton received a salary payment on Nov. 29, 1694 (q.v.), see also Jan. 9, 1695. The first establishment of regular post routes, between New York and...

were to agree with the inhabitants on the price, and to report to the Provincial Council to have ye $750 Annual Assessed Levy & paid by A County Rate."—Ibid., I: 336. The two aldermen reported on Oct. 30 that they had agreed with the people of Harlem, whose names and the number of cords each was to furnish were stated, to cut the "Stockadeos" at 15 shilling a cord, and that they were to give them notes in payment.—Ibid., I: 336-37; but see Dec. 3, 1693.

Gov. Fletcher writes to the lords of trade and plantations that the capture of "John Reaux," captain of a French privateer, has delayed his visit to Albany and Connecticut. This man, who was naturalized 18 months before, had sunk a vessel of which he was master and run away with $6,000 or $7,000. Captured and imprisoned, he had escaped to Canada, and finally reached France. He is now back, claiming to have a commission from the French king. Having taken two boats on the way back, he is held prisoner till the king's will is known.—Cal. State Papers, America and W. Indies (1693-6), 176-77. In the following December, being fearful of death, "John La Roux" made confession to French Protestant minister: "When I was in France in February last Monsieur Cabaret, the lieutenant-general of the French forces by sea, asked me if there were any easy method of attacking New York with the same men-of-war, had sunk, and six fireships commanded by Mons. de Pales. Having received the offer of conducting the squadron thither I pointed out the difficulties of the enterprise, the strength of the fort, the number of inhabitants in the adjacent country, and the danger of navigation at the entrance to New York." The project was given up. Le Roux concluded his confession by begging the governor and council to have compassion on his family.—Ibid., 177. On Feb. 27, 1694, this petition was referred to the mayor and aldermen, with directions to "Supply the Necessity of ye Prisoners wife and children." In compliance with this order, the common council ordered that the "Over-sseers of the Poor doe put out the children of the Said Petitioner in Some Good Reputable Families for their Subsistence during his Impri-sonment."—M. C. C., I: 348. On Aug. 8, 1694, the governor reported that John Le Roux had been tried and acquitted.—Cal.
State Papers (op. cit.), 559. See Sept. 5, 1704.

A warrant is issued to William Bradford for salary.—Cal. Coun.
Min. 92. The text of the warrant shows that this payment was for salary for the "six months ended on the 10th preceding."—Introduction by Miss A. R. Hane to the facsimile reproduction of A Narrative of an Attempt Made by the French of Canada, etc. (N. Y., 1907), vii.

Dec. 2 A majority vote in the common council favours the opinion 2 "that they have not power to raise A Tax for the Payment of the Said Stockadoes," for which a committee gave notes in payment on Oct. 30.—M. C. C., I: 337. At a meeting of the governor and his council on Oct. 9, 1693, an address, however, had passed requiring the mayor and common council to attend them the following day, "to be resolved of Some Scrupules or Objects made by Some of them" against furnishing the number of stockades "Assigned to the Said City towards the Platform designed for to build A Battery upon Defence of the City & Province agl. forraign invasion." The common council "waited upon" the governor and council on Dec. 18, and gave reasons why "they had not power to raise Money for fortification." That is, they stated their opinion "that the Cutting & paying for $750 Stockadoes for $750 building of a Platform on $750 Point of Rocks for $750 Defence of this City is not A County Charge." They were nevertheless of the opinion that it was "A Necessary work," and on Dec. 18, the common council resolved that, "As a Free & Voluntary Act," they would give the stockades "att $750 Charge of ye City."—Ibid., I: 338-39. Cal. Coun. Min., 93. But the matter did not rest here.—See Jan. 8, 1694.

The common council allows the charges which the sheriff "Shall be att in ye Necessary Repair of ye goal of this City."— 1694

Bradford continues the publication of a series of almanacs which he began in Philadelphia in 1686. The first New York issue begins the date 1694, although, if he pursued his usual practice, it was issued the year before. It is entitled An Almanack For the Year of Christian Account 1694. . . . Printed, and Sold by William Brad-ord at the Bible in New-York, 1694. In this he advertised the forthcoming laws of the province that "The Laws of the Province of New York will shortly be printed, whereo every one may have recourse to know the exact Time of Markets, Fairs, Courts, Excise, Rates and Imports upon Goods, &c. and therefore may omit them here." He also advertises Keith’s Truth Advanced in the Correction of Many Gross & haustrimer errors, which later laws as appearance bearing the date 1694. The almanac is described in the "Appendices" (1907) of the Library of E. D. Church, IV: 1625-28, as a small 3vo volume of 12 unnumbered pages. The title-page is reproduced in ibid., IV: 1627. Only two copies of this almanac are known, one in the Huntington collection, and one in the Hist. Soc. of Penn. See also April 10, 1693, for a similar almanac.

Bradford printed and published this year the first collection of the provincial laws of New York (see April 10, 1693), with the following title: The Laws & Acts of the General Assembly Their Majesties Province of New York. As they were Enacted in divers Sessions, the first of which began April, the 9th, Annoq: Domini, 1691. At New-York, Printed and Sold by William Bradford, Printer to their Majesties, King William & Queen Mary, 1694. It is the most valuable publication from his press. An account of the seven copies of this edition known to be in existence 200 years later is given in Facsimile of the Laws and Acts of New York (1794). "Explanatory Note," I: v. The Groleier Club’s reprint is a handsomely facsimile edition of this work, having an historical introduction, notes on the laws, and appendices, by Robert Ludlow Fowler. See Pl. 22, Vol. IV, for reproduction of title-page of original Laws & Acts.

The Dongan Charter (see April 25, 1696) was printed this year by Bradford, on ten days’ notice. The charter was given up. The new governor and council applied to the court for the document "to give Printing of the City Laws the City Charter &c.,” and a warrant for payment was ordered.— M. C. C., I: 374; and see Oct. 25, 1694. A copy of this printed edition of the charter was sent by Bellomont to the lords of trade on Nov. 25, 1700, and it is still on file in the Public Record Office, London. A photostat of one of the two copies now known, that owned by Henry E. Huntington, Esq., is in the N. Y. Pub. Library. It is without title-page or date (only the half-title appearing). For reproduction (made from plate in Church Cat., No. 751), see Pl. 22, Vol. IV. As to the first printed collection of laws and ordinances of the city of New York, issued this year by William Bradford (vide supra), so copy is known to exist but; see Oct. 25 for their titles.

There were 40 ships, 62 boats, and 62 sloops whose owners resi-

A new street at this time was about to be opened on the waterside, where the breaste-work and platform had been erected.—From petition of Jacob Lockermans and others, Cal. Hist. MSS., Est., 741. This alludes to the beginning of Water St.—See also June 16, 1696, below. From this date, William Henry of 14, an inquirer, is working in New York. For incidents of his life, and description of a cream jug made by him, see Met. Museum Catalogue of Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1911), xxii-xxiii, 62.

The city’s power to raise money by taxation is questioned. The common council orders that "A Committee of $750 Whole Bench be Appointed to Enquire into Such lawful ways & Methods as is Practiced by the Corporations in England for the raising of Money to Defray what they Shall think needful in their respective Corporations."—M. C. C., I: 339. The "Committee of the Whole houses," he considered the requisite of the governor and council regarding the city’s "Quota & Proportion" of Stockadoes and other services of $750 Building the Battery that is Projected by his Excell to be made att the point of Rocks under $750 Fort," made their report on Jan. 12. They found that "the Easiest, Speediest and best way for Accomplishing the Same will be by raising a Tax upon the Respective Inhabitants of this City," and that they were willing to do, "Provided his Excellency and Council doe declare in writing that the common Council of this City is Soe Enabled to doe by the Powers Contained in their Charter." After this report had been read three times, the common council ordered that the recorder draw up an address to the government, "appealing a readiness to Assist their Majesties in the Security & Defense of this Province & City with their lives & fortunes," and asking them to give their interpretation of the city’s charter powers regarding raising money by taxation.—Ibid., I: 340. Such address was presented to the governor and council on Jan. 15, and entered in full assessed, levied, collected and paid by all and every one of the inhabitants and residenters within this city and county for ye maintenance of a good, sufficient Protestant Minister, according to the directions of said act.—Eccles. Rec., 1: 1005.

The governor and council consider the question as to "what Peresawson" the minister shall be, and who shall be called in accordance with the act of Sept. 22, 1693. It is decided that he shall be "a dissenting minister." The governor presents the name of Rev. John Miller, his applicant, to the legislature. See also March 7, 1692. On Feb. 15, Miller demanded, by virtue of his license from the Bishop of London, an introduction into the living established in September, 1693, for the maintenance of a Protestant minister in the city of New York. The council decided that Miller was not thereby entitled to this living.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV, 182.

Fletcher recommends to the council that they take the fort into Mar.

consideration, it being much out of repair, and provide for rebuilding the chapel, which has been pulled down to prevent its falling. They should also think of repairing the fortifications, and making a platform and battery, which he has projected to defend this city, which is "the key of the Province," from attempts by water.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 50. See March 21.

A rule is adopted in the assembly "That whoever of this House, do not appear at this House, within half an Hour after the Ringing of the Bell, shall forfeit half a Piece of Eight."—Assemb. Jour., I: 36.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for settling Pylottage for all Vessels that shall come within sandy Hook." The act states that "by the late Easterly storm there was several sand banks thrown out at the south of the harbour at sandy hook whereby the Entry is rendered very difficult and dangerous to all vessels bound for this port." It provides "that there shall be four men appointed by his Excellency the Governor who shall constantly attend at some convenient place near the Hook with a boat to give aid and assistance to all vessels bound for this port which they are obliged to pilot up as far as the narrows." Fees for this service are prescribed.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 324.

It became necessary in 1715, 1716, and 1717 again to pass acts to establish pilotage at Sandy Hook.—Ibid., I: 1001; II: 302, 700, 949.

The common council orders that the mayor and Alderman Morret "provide Such things as will be needful for Making the Carriages Mountings of y'd Guns & repairing of y'd Fortifications." The treasurer is required to keep account of disbursements for this purpose. The mayor's committee is to draw upon him also to pay what is due "for the last years Reparation of y'd S't Fortifications."—M. C. C., I: 350.

The committee of the common council appointed on Feb. 27 to "let all the Publick House and Stables of this City to the best Advantages of Reserving a Sufficient place for the Sheltering Merchants Goods in Case of Rain or ill weather" reports that it has "let the Market house or storehouse att the Bridge foot with all the Apartments thereunto belonging unto John Ellisson," and that it has given him liberty to build a lean-to on the south side, and to erect a chimney at the west end of it. He is to resingle and repair the market-house, and is permitted to use the ground at the west end to put timber on.—M. C. C., I: 348-350.

24 On considering that part of a recent speech of the governor relating to building a platform at New York, the opinion is stated, by a vote of the Assembly, "that the Country are not able to do it."

The monopoly which this city has enjoyed since Jan. 7, 1780 (q.v.), of bolting flour, is annulled by "An Act against unlawful by-laws and Unreasonable forfeitures," which is signed this day by Gov. Fletcher.-Jour. Leg. Conv., I: 55. It is known as the "Bolting Act."—M. C. C., II: 3. The bill was first introduced into the assembly on March 13 by Capt. Thomas Garton, of Ulster and Dutchess Counties.—Assemb. Jour., I: 37. It was published on March 26.—Ibid., I: 41. Any " restraint of Bolting of flour baking of bread or Importing of flour or bread to New York" is removed.

—For full text of the act, see Col. Laws N. Y. IV: 326-37.

The passing of this act was ascribed by Livingston and Smith to 1693, and by Cornbury, in a report to the lords of trade on July 1, 1708 (q.v.), to "the year 1693." It was confirmed by the king on May 11, 1697.—Order in council, in Fowler’s Facsimile of Bradford’s ed. of the Law’s Acts (1694), pub. by the Grolier Club, 1894.

Four years later, Gov. Belmoreon charged that Fletcher had contracted, for $200, to pass this act.—N. T. Col. Doc., IV: 332-33.

—Col. Conv., 1752.

Commercial drip-still and want of bread were the consequences of the Bolting Act in New York City. The flour, bread, and biscuit produced at New York had been of high grade and high priced; it became inferior and cheap. The price of New York flour, for example, at Barbados and the Sugar Islands, to which it was exported, fell "five shillings in the hundred below the price of Pennsylvania and other flour."—N. T. Col. Acts, IV: 461. See, for other particulars, June 10-11, 1696; May 11, 1697; June 28-29, 1698.

—Blithewort’s Jour., in Lib. of Congress, Vol. II: under April 1, 1694.

May A new method of raising revenue is employed for the first time by the municipal government,—namely, mortgaging the ferry.—M. C. C., I: 354-355. The sum of $200 was needed "for the Defence and Security of the City."—Ibid., I: 354. The engrossed ferry lease for seven years had a face value of about $1,000, and this served as a security similar to a deed of land. To obtain ready money, the city had to find some individual of means willing to advance the needed amount, holding the lease as security. In this case, the minutes tell us that the interest on the $200 for two years was $335.-Ibid., I: 355. This reveals a rate of something over eight per cent. If the ferry-man lived up to his contract, enough money would be received in ferry tolls to pay principal and interest ($2335) in the two years.—Peterson & Edwards, N. T. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 128.

—The governor of New York, and the governor of New Jersey are ordered each to Aug. furnish upon application a quota of men for New York, not exceeding 300, "for the defence and Security of Our said Province of New York."—Blithewort’s Jour., I: 696-98.

Daniel Honan, clerk of the market, in a petition (to whom is not stated, but probably to the governor’s council), complains of the inconvenience of the site of the market-place, and asks that the city market be fixed at the plain before the fort, which is the ancient market-place.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 242. The council orders the market to be so moved.—Cal. Conv., 106. The locations of the meat markets at that time were "in front of the fort," and "under the trees by the Slip" (Old Slip).—M. C. C., I: 217. There was also a miscellaneous market at the end of Broad St.—Ibid., I: 265.

Fletcher's commission as governor of Pennsylvania is revoked, assurances being given by William Penn that he will take care of the government there.—N. Y. Col. Decs., IV: 110. Fletcher, nevertheless, is allowed a certain proportion of the militia of Pennsylvania to aid him whenever necessary for service in the province of New York. See Oct. 1, 1693. The council ords that the forts at New York, Albany, and Schenectady be inspected.—Col. Coun. Min., 100.

Mayor De Peyster proposes "the Selling of the Vacant Lots beginning at the West Side of the Wall Street, and running to the Extent ofaster Laurens Ground" for the payment of the city debt, and the common council votes in favour of the same.—M. C. C., I: 357.

The common council orders that the dock be "Let to farme" (leased) for three years, on Sept. 20, at the house of Edward Buckmaster (junkepper). The former regulation of the affairs of the dock is to be continued (see action on March 24, 1684), with the additional covenant that all boats that go "into any of the Slips in the Smith's Fly" shall pay the same dockage rates as if they came into the city dock, and these fees shall be for the benefit of the "farmers" (lessees)—M. C. C., I: 358. The date for leasing was later changed to Sept. 28 (p. v)—ibid., I: 461.

Sept. 11 mark having been called into question by Daniel Veenevos and Thomas Lamberts, who claimed it under their patents and who appealed by petition, on Sept. 3, to the governor and council, the latter ordered on Sept. 10 that the city that passed from the parties could be heard before them on Sept. 13. The common council now directs the recorder to appear in the city's behalf on that day.—M. C. C., I: 361; and see ibid., I: 162. On the 11th, the city put in a claim to all the ground between high and low-water mark.—Cal. Coun. Min., 100. This claim appears to have been withdrawn the following spring (ibid., I: 224), to the latter's dissatisfaction, for, on Sept. 25, the common council agreed to allow Veenevos the ground fronting his house for $50, "According to the Quantity Contained in his former Patent and Sce to Low water mark."—M. C. C., I: 364. Later (June 26, 1696), it became necessary to warn Mrs. Veenevos, her widow, against laying timber, etc., or erecting buildings "on the City Land fronting her New Dwelling house" (ibid., I: 410), and to comply with the agreement made by the city with her late husband (ibid., I: 417). Her title to the land fronting her house in Queen St. extended "no further then the Wall Mentioned therein," the city, however, offered her the "Rest of 8th Ground to Low water mark" for $40.—Ibid., I: 420.

Capt. John Evans, commander of the royal frigate "Richmond," receives a patent for "All that Certain Swamp and fresh Pond Called the fresh water and Adjacent to our said farm Commonly Called the Dukes farm on the Island of Manhattan, beginning at a Stake set in ye Ground on ye south syde of the said Pond and at the northeast corner of the Land Belonging to William Merriott; thence it Rangeeth along the south syde of the sd Swamp, and Pond by the upland to the Beach on the East side of Hudson's River; so along the Beach to the Upland thence crossing a Small Gut of sayd Swamp to the land on the east syde thereby thence by Mr. Leavens Line to the east syde of the Tann Yards and thence to the Place where begunning. Containing in all 70 Acres." Libel Patents, VI: 458 (Albany). This was a prior grant of what was afterward known as Rutgers's Swamp.—See Dec., 1730; April 6, 1733. The extensive patent to Evans was apparently never occupied by him, and was later revoked, like many of Fletcher's patents, under a protest of the House of Burgesses.—See the Votes of the General Assembly, 1803-7, I: 132.

The common council orders that "the Market house or Shed in the Broadway [see Aug. 3] be Let to farme unto Henry Crosby of this City Butcher for the Term of Seven Years att one pound $50 Annum . . . ."—M. C. C., I: 362-65. City Clerk Sharpes account was paid on Sept. 16, 1695 for engaging this lease.—Ibid., I: 376. On Oct. 28, 1707 (ibid.), the house ordered its demolition.

The conditions for leasing the dock are elaborated. The term is extended to seven years, beginning Nov. 1, 1694. The lessee is required to give security for faithful performance. The covenant regarding the rates of dockage for "the slips in the Smiths Fly" (see Aug. 28) is included. New orders for "Dock Money" (dockage) are also adopted, including the provision that, hereafter, all vessels belonging to "Other parts of this Government," and to East Jersey and Connecticut (as far as the east end of Fisher's Island), shall pay yearly, like vessels belonging to this port. The dock is "demised" to Thomas Clarke, who bids $50 per annum rental.—M. C. C., I: 364-65. For summary of transactions relating to the "farming" of the dock, see Oct. 19, 1689.

The common council approves the accounts of several inhabitants of Harlem who furnished stockades for the use of the city; and orders that the committee "for finishing the Slips in the Smiths Fly" drawn upon the treasurer to pay for this.—M. C. C., I: 367.

The common council grants to Col. John Theobald and Peter Adolph the ground fronting their houses, at 2 shillings per foot, on condition that they build a wharf 12 ft. wide, at their own expense, extending from Wall St. to "the Ground Accepted to be bought by the Abovemented John Theobald," and that they shall make a slip, both wharf and slip to be between high and low-water mark.—M. C. C., I: 368.

In a message to the council, Gov. Fletcher states that "Their Majesties have sent us over ammunition and stores with twenty great guns; it is our duty when the king is so gracious to send them for our own defense, not to let them lie in the dirt; the least we can doe is to mount them; it will require money."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 58.

It is ordered by the common council that the "Street reaching from Burgers Path to the further end of the Smith fly by Alderman Beeckman be Called Queen Street," as suggested by the governor.—M. C. C., I: 370. Queen St. was regarded as south of the Lines from Alderman Bens- son's malthouse to Fresh Water (ibid., VI: 253); carried forward through Cowfoot Hill, 1761 (ibid., VII: 258); and regulated 1764 (ibid., VI: 406). It was called Pearl St., Feb. 24, 1794.—M. C. C. (MS.), XI: 106.

Mettye Cornelis is allowed "the Sum of Eight pounds two Shillings and Six pence being for Entertaining his Excell the Governor in his Return from Connecticut."—M. C. C., I: 369. Mettye Cornelis was the widow of Cornelis Jansen who established the famous Half Way House at Harlem.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 438-39, 594. See Apr. 30, 1684.

The provincial council, having received commands from their "Majies" regarding the ruined chapel in the fort (see July 27, and Sept. 12, 1693), recommends to the assembly that they "provide for the rebuilding the Chappell."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 65. The assembly votes on the same day that the chapel be built by free contributions from the various counties.—Jour. Leg., Apr. 45. On the 22d, the council replied that "the message sent on Saturday last with his Maties Letter was not to entreat the advice of the Assembly . . . but to know of the Assembly what they will contribute."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 65. The assembly thereupon voted (Oct. 25) $500 for the rebuilding of the chapel.—Assem. Jour., I: 45. On the following day a law was passed "for Continuing the additional Duty for One Year longer, for the raising Six Hundred Pounds towards the Rebuilding the Chappell, and mounting of sixteen Great Guns &c."—Laws of New York (Gaine ed.), Chap. 42.

The chapel must have been built under way early the following year (1697), for on Feb. 13, 1697, a warrant was issued to pay Drick van der Burgh for bricklayer's work on the building, and on March 14, he petitioned for his pay of about $50 for "erecting a chapel and other buildings in and about Fort William Henry."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., III: 246-471 Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 244. See also Cal.
THE ICONOGRAPHS OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

Nov. 1634. Coun. Min., 104 (March 14 and 21); and 115 (March 19, 1636). It was not finished, however, on April 7, 1636, when Gov. Fletcher urged the new assembly to "trow to me a forward and finish it."—Assem. Jour., II: 153, and see Cal. Coun. Min., 115. Again, on April 20, 1636, a committee of the assembly refused to "treat of finishing the Chap- pell having no directions from their house to meddle with any further than the accounts of the Government."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 93. It probably was the building completed in 1636, a warrant being issued on May 14 to pay for mason work.—Cal. Coun. Min., 114. On Sept. 30, 1636, Dominie Selwyn, writing to the classis at Amsterdam, referred to it as constructed of stone and a neat edifice.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1172. Warrants to pay for interior work were issued on June 24, July 25, and Dec. 26, 1637 (p. v).—Cal. Coun. Min., 122, 125. At late as Oct. 4, 1638, Peter Meletti was paid for "ironwork in the Chapel."—Ibid., 1345. This is the last record found of work on the chapel during this period. That Fletcher's coat-of-arms was placed on the building appears in a petition for its removal, dated May 15, 1699 (p. v). The chapel is shown on Pls. 29-a, 29-b, 25, 26, 27-a, and 31, Vol. I. See also Landsmark Map Ref. Key, III: 953; Pl. 174, Vol. III, 23.

By an act of the legislature, a former act "for the satisfying of the debts of the Government" is continued; the revenue thereby raised is "to be employed for the Rebuilding of their Majesties Chapel on the Fort the mounting of 16 Great Guns and defraying the Debts of the Government."—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 342. See Oct. 20.

A committee was appointed on March 15 to have the city laws "fairly drawn out in writing," with a view to having them published and printed (Ibid., 1: 353). These laws were read in the com- mon council on April 18, and a committee was appointed to determine what amendments and repeals were necessary (ibid., I: 353-54). They are now approved and published with the usual ceremony; and the common council orders that they be printed. One of these laws is entered in the Minutes. They are—

17 Orders and Regulations Concerning Carman
18 No Timber, Stone, Bricks, Lumber &c to lie in ye Streets
19 No Swine to be in the Streets
20 Officers to be Observant in ye Execution of these Laws."—M. C. C., I: 371-72. These were the earliest printed ordinances of the city. Bradford was the printer. No copy of the text of this first issue of the city laws is known.—See 1694, and Jan. 16, 1695.

Nov. Capt. Thomas Tew, well known to be a pirate, comes to New York and is received by Col. Fletcher upon terms of intimate com- panionship. He was "invited to his table—rode a horse with him in a coach drawn by six horses (a very unusual display in those primitive times)—gave elegant presents of jewels to the governor and his family, and received in return a gold watch, upon his promise to discharge his cargo in this port."—"The Red Sea in Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 469, Peter Delamoy, in a letter of Men," June 4, 1638, to Gov. Fletcher, wrote among other things: "one Capt. Twoo who is gone to the Red Sea upon the same errand was before his departure highly caressed by his Excellency in his coach and six horses and presented with a gold watch to engage him to make New York his port at his return. Twoor alee the good kindness with a present of jewels"—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 223. Bellomont, writing to the lords of trade on May 8, 1638, regarding Fletcher's protecting pirates, said: "... I find that those Pyrates that have given the greatest disturbance in the East Indies and Red Sea, have been either fitted from New York or Rhode Island, and manned from New York. The ships commanded by Mason, Tew, Glove' and Hore, had their commissions from the Gov of New York.—"Ibid., IV: 309. See 1695.

This is King William III's birthday. On Nov. 3, "His Excellency did acquaint the Council that to-morrow being [the] Kings birth day and falling upon a sunday he desires their [opinion] concerning the Observation of it." It was "Resolved the day must be observed by being grave, and had been brought & illuminations that the City Regiment be under arms and that there be wine given to them the Kings health but that the solemnity begin after evening service."—Coun. Min. (MS.), VII: 101 (Albany). This is the earliest reference in the English annals of this province to the cele- bration of the birth-day of a king. For later references, see M. C. C., Index, Vol. VIII: titles "Bonfire and Wine," "William III," "Anne," "George I," "George II," and "George III."—Cf. Nov. 2, 1700; March 17, 1703; Feb. 6, 1703.

The council prepares an address to the lords of trade in behalf of Col. Inglish's receiving the pay of lieutenant-governor.—Coun. Min., 102. There is no evidence that he was granted such pay; and he was not made lieutenant-governor until March 24, 1704 (p. v). In the interim he apparently continued as commander-in-chief.—See July 25, 1691.

Rev. Henry Selwyn writes to the classis of Amsterdam: "Our new church [i.e., the Golden Street] is finished up to the towers. On Sundays it is too small; on Wednesdays, too large. Our city of New York, with its suburbs, is constantly growing. But this growth is chiefly in houses and people and business, but not in piety and the conversion of sinners."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1108. —Cf. Chaplain John Sheffield's statement, that in 1690, 100,000 people lived in it.

Fletcher informs the lords of trade that he called the assembly's attention to the ruinous condition of the fort and the soldiers' quarters, but that they would take no notice of it. He states also that he sent the King's letter about rebuilding the chapel to the assembly; and declared that they could "consider the pay and for the mounting the great guns his Maje's lately sent." They passed a bill for £450 for the chapel, and £150 for the guns. The Jerseys, he informs the lords, "are now making war upon us in point of Trade having prohibited by Act of their Assembly, the transportation of Pipe staves, shingles, or Plank to New York, by which they will draw the Shipping business and Establish a free port to the great prejudice of this place and sink the Trade of it, they pay no duty to the King and all will flock to it."—"N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 113-14.

The common council orders that John Denier be "be one of the Surveyors of this City in the place of Adolph Pitter's lately De- ceased."—M. C. C., II: 372.

Fletcher, in a letter to Capt. Stuyvesant, asks the loan of the bell in the Bowery church for the use of the garrison, the one in the fort being cracked.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 243. 16. It is ordered by the Governor and Council that Col. Nicholas Bayard have the flag mount, erect, etc., paved.—Cal. Coun. Min., 102. A warrant for part payment was issued March 27, 1695—Ibid., 104. A warrant is issued by the governor and council to pay Andrew Hamilton his salary as postmaster-general.—Cal. Coun. Min., 102.

The planting of Lewis Morris at Harlem is erected into a manor.—Cal. Coun. Min., 102. The original entry of record, dated Dec. 6, is as follows: "The petition of Lewis Morris Gent praying to have his Plantation at Harlem erected into a manor was read and granted and ordered Warrants issue for the Patent accordingly the quitrent to be six shillings Ordered."—Coun. Min. (MS.), IV: 109 (Albany). In explanation of this reference to "Harlem," it should be noted that the "manour" referred to was the Manor of Morrisania, and was across the Harlem River, not on Manhattan Island. It included "Broncksaland" and a good deal more. The original grant was to the first Lewis Morris, by Andros, in 1676.—"Three Patents, IV: 99 (Albany). Schuyt says (Hist. of Westchester Co., I: 799) that Fletcher confirmed to Lewis Morris, younger, nephew to the first Lewis Morris, the grant made by Andros, "and also erected the lands into a lordship or manor by the name and title of the Lordship or Manor of Morrisania," on May 6, 1697.

Queen Mary's audiences with the presence of jewels

A contract is made with John Cockburn "to lay the floors of the bastion of the fort with hewn stone."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 243. On Aug. 15, 1695, he petitioned for his pay (ibid., 246), and a warrant was issued (Cal. Coun. Min., 108); another was issued on Nov. 21, 1695 (ibid., 111).

The city, as it was in this year, is shown and described in a plan and manuscript journal prepared, probably in 1666, by the Rev. John Miller, chaplain to the King's forces in New York. See Vol. I, Pls. 23-a and 23-b. The plan is the first to show the lay-out of the city beyond the walls; the latter plate shows in detail, with references, the lay-out of the city. Little Queen's (Cedar Street) was laid out prior to this date, as it is shown on the general plan. See July 9, 1755; April 21, 1794. Marketfield Street is shown as "Petticoat Lane." See also July 6, 1658. Exchange Place is "Church Street"; and Beaver Street, east of Broad St., is "St. John's St."

The population of New York City was then about 5,000. This estimate is based on John Miller's statement in N. Y. Considered and Improved, 54, that the number of families in the city was about 850. — Channing, Hist. of the U. S., II: 223.

The year 1665 was memorable in New York for the marvelous leap forward in the price of real estate. The city had been growing rapidly in population for two or three years, and the best lots in the new streets through the old Dame farm were in the market. There was just then more money in circulation than had ever before been known in New York. — Mrs. Lamb, in Mag. Am. Hist. (1852) XII: 18–26.

It is certain that the Jews had a synagogue as early as 1665 and may have had it in 1661, for La Matthee Caladick, in his account of New York in 1661 (see 1662), enumerates the Jews as one of the sects and then says that each sect had its church and freedom of worship. — From The Settlement of the Jews in N. Am. (1894), by Daly and Kohler, 26, citing N. Y. Col. Doc., I: 549. The synagogue referred to is supposed by these authors to have been the first on the continent of North America. Its existence and location are indicated by Rev. John Miller's description of New York City in 1665 (see June, 1665), as on the south side of the present Beaver Street, in the middle of the block, between Broadway and Broad St. — Ibid., 27. The location assigned by Miller, who wrote from memory, is questioned, however, by Dyer, in "Points in the First Chapter of New York Jewish History," printed in Publications of the Am. Jewish Hist. Society, No. 3 (1905), 46–50. Dyer calls attention to the deed, dated Oct. 30, 1700 (Libert. Deeds, XXXIII: 230), conveying property adjoining the house and ground of John Harpending, "now commonly known by the name of the Jews' Synagogue." — See also Key to Castello Plan, II: 300. In an interesting and important review of the records, Dyer concludes that this, the first synagogue in North America, "was situated on No. 8 South William street." — Ibid., 60. This early synagogue, it is observed, was a private house, so used. Regarding the first synagogue building erected, see 1729–30. The records of the Title Guarantee and Trust Co. as studied by Miss Jenne F. McCarthy, the company's historical expert, indicate the location of the latter to be No. 10 South William street. — See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 929; Fl. 174.

In this year, Mayor Abraham de Peyster built a fine house on the Smith's Valley road (Queen, now Pearl, St.), between Pine and Cedar Sts., fronting to the west. It was 59 by 80 feet and three storeys high, the grounds occupying the whole block to the river's edge, with coach-house and stable in the rear. At the time of Washington's inauguration (1789), it was the residence of Gov. George Clinton.— Mag. Am. Hist., XXII: 185. For more detailed description, see Mrs. Lamb's Hist. City of N. Y., 1: 419. It is thus described by Valentia: "The dwelling of the oldest son of Col. de Peyster (the Abraham de Peyster who in 1721 succeeded him as Treasurer), erected by him in 1665, stood in Queen, now Pearl street, nearly opposite Cedar. At the time of its demolition, in 1856, it was believed to be the oldest building in the city. It was subsequently the residence of Governor George Clinton, and General Washington occupied it as his head-quarters after he had assumed the command of the army in New York. ..." [see in Man. Com. Coun. (1854), opp. p. 416.] It was afterwards known as the Redmond Hotel. ...

The main building was 59 feet front, and the principal rooms faced on Cedar and Pearl streets. The depth was nearly 30 feet, and the edifice, by a rear building, extended nearly through to the present Water street with which it was connected by a carriage-way. The stable and coach-house were in the centre of the block on the north side of the Yard. The main building was three stories high, had a wide entrance, with a double door, opening in the centre, according to the fashion of the day. The front projected over a space about 50 feet back. From this balcony, on many a field day, the military reviews were held by the Colonial Governors.

The contracts and plans are still [1864] in existence in the hands of one of his lineal descendants. ... [A painting based on these documents was made as early as 1699] by D. Appleton & Co. in a portfolio entitled Pictures of Old New York.

It may be interesting to state that, as the property which extended from Water street, directly in the rear of the mansion of Abraham de Peyster, ... to the East river, belonged to him, he granted a street from the easterly side of Water street to the river, now known as De Peyster street. The carriageway leading at present from Water street to the rear of the noble marble front stores, standing on the ground formerly fronting on Pearl street, covered by the Mansion House, and recently erected by one of our enterprising and successful merchants Joseph Sampson, Est., is shown on the ancient map of this property, to have been the original carriage-way which led to the stables in the rear of the house adjacent to the grounds, then open country, which on that side extended to, and were bounded by, the river."— Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 525–47.

The first ordinance in the English city of New York concerning apprentices is passed by the common council. By this, four years is the minimum length of service; every apprentice must be "bound by Indentures" before the mayor, recorder, or one of the aldermen, and must be registered in the clerk's office. At the end of his term, the apprentice "Shall be Made Free of the Said City by his Said Master if he have well and truly Served him."— M. C. C., I: 373–74. On Oct. 30, 1711, seven years was made the minimum length of service.—Ibid., II: 434–55. Appeals to the mayor's court for the breaking of a contract were generally fruitless; a "rigid adherence to them was Edwards' rule."—Peterson's Hist. of N. Y. Soc. Collections (1835), 158. For indentures of apprentices from 1694 to 1707, see N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1835), 565; and from 1718 to 1727, see ibid. (1899), 113.

Bradford presents his account, amounting to £1010, for "Printing of the City Laws the City Charter &c," which, on Oct. 25, 1694 (p. 2), the common council ordered to be printed. An order is now given that the mayor sign a warrant to the treasurer to pay the account.—M. C. C., I: 374. No copy of this first published issue of the city ordinances is now known to be extant, the earliest known issue in existence being the second, which was printed by Bradford in 1707—See March 28, 1707, and Bibliography, Vol. IV.

The Two Brothers Islands near Hell Gate are granted to James Graham.— Cal. Coun. Min., 103.

The cellars under the custom-house is let to Michael Howdon.— Cal. Coun. Min., 103. Howdon's occupations were varied; it appears, for on July 13, 1665, the governor's ship's carver, part of his under consideration "for entertaining Capt. Paxton's pinacle crew and for going express to Albany." — Ibid., 107. In 1702 and 1703, he rented his house (evidently a tavern) for the sitting of the assembly.—Ibid., 177, 186. In the latter year, he was made justice of the peace. —Ibid., 190.

Mayor Charles Ludwick petitions (presumably the governor's council) for the payment of sixpence on whom soldiers have been quartered.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 243.

Col. Andrew Hamilton having presented to the governor and council a memorial for an increased allowance for the post-office, it is referred to "the full board."—Cal. Conn. Min., 103. See July 1, and Sept. 15, 1695.

Taxes are sworn by the court of mayor and aldermen to make the necessary assessments in county and city, "Permitting to the Directions of two Acts of the GeoII Assembly."—M. G. C. (M.S.), March 11, 1695. One of these acts called for "the raising and paying one hundred and Seaveney men for the Securing the frontiers of this Province." These men were to serve for one year commencing May 1, 1695. The quota prescribed for the city and county of New York was "forty three effective men" and $1,051. The second and later act called for "the raising and paying one hundred Men . . . for the Re-inforcing the Frontiers of this Province," and the quota for the city and county of New York was prescribed as "Twenty five effective Men," and $1,971:—Cal. Laws N.Y., I, 334-35, 339-42.

"Dexter Van Burt," who has been employed in building his Majesty's [each] with several other buildings in and about his Majesty's [of] William Henry in N Yorke," petitions the governor and council for payment of "Nine Hundred and Odd pounds" due him for labor and materials.—Doc. Hist. N.Y., (40 ed.), III: 246-47; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 244 (March 5). See also Aug. 8.

The common council grants permission to Rip van Dam "to build a vessel upon the Citys Land in the Rear of the Burial place of this City or thereabouts fronting to Hudsons River."—M. G. C. (M.S.), I: 375-380.

Capt. Flicia introduces a bill in the assembly for "the settling a Free-School, within the City of New-York."—Assemb. Jour., I: 48. On April 4, this bill was read the second time and rejected.— Ibid., I: 49. Thus an effort toward popular education through the provincial legislature failed. See also April 18, 1691. It was not until 1703 that such a measure was sanctioned by the governor and council.— See Nov. 27, 1702. See also July 27, 1696.

The petition of Jasper Nespeatt for the Confirmation of a Wind-mill in the Coffin of the city of New York" (cf. Nov. 24, 1692), is read and granted "provided he be obliged to grinde for the governours family not exceeding four bushells weekly, and pay five shillings annual quitrent." A warrant is ordered "for the Patent accordingly."—N. Y. Cal. MSS., VII: 124 (Albany), quoted by O'Callaghan in Notes on Windmills (M.S.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. For its more detailed history, see Landmark Map Ref. Apr. Key, III: 962.

Isaac Pfeof (Bedlow) brings suit for trespass against several inhabitants for "pulling Down A Certaine Fence that was run Cross the Street or Highway Leading to the Fortification Called Oyster Party." The common council decides to defend the action.—M. G. C., II: 376. Although this land was claimed by the city, public use of the public street, the city lost the suit; on, for, on March 10, 1696, the common council agreed to pay £15854, and the incidental expense of execution, two of the defendants, imprisoned for the trespass, being discharged.—Ibid., I: 399. The inhabitants of the street, some of whom had been implicated, complained on March 12, in a petition to the common council, that the street was again to be fenced, and that this would "obstruct them from going to their habitations." They asked the city to "take Some Care that they may have A Passage to their houses for the Reliefe of their families."—Ibid., I: 400. No action appears to have been taken on this petition.

The common council orders that the city clerk, William Sharpas (see Oct. 14, 1692), be reimbursed for "Cash paid for the booke of Records No. 21 as Appears by his Account."—M. G. C., II: 376. This entry in the Minutes is significant in itself in that at least 20 books of record had been necessary to record the proceedings of the city magistrates before this date. (The municipality was not yet 50 years old.) During the subsequent 35 years the minutes recorded the purchase of 28 additional record-books, costing from £210 to £310 each. Six of them were specified as for the mayor's court.—Petersen & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 28, citing M. G. C., Vols. II and III.

"Att a Meeting of ye Officers of the Regiment of Militia foot belonging to the said City at ye City Hall," a letter from the governor addressed to Col. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 432.

A warrant is issued to Peter de Renier "for glass windows in the fort."—Cal. Conn. Min., 105. See summary under Jan. 17, supra.

A feud occurs at election time, when members of assembly are to be elected. It arises between the governor's party and the Leisler followers, particularly because the governor has not accounted for £1,500, said to be remaining in his hands, and because of fear of being impressed into service on the frontiers. The night before election, several " Freedoms" were seen at the mayor's house, made out to the purser, gunner, boatswain, and others of the king's ships. Servants and sailors were in the party with clubs. Seamen were ordered ashore by masters of ships to vote.

Among the witnesses examined at the board of trade inquiry on Aug. 28 and Sept. 14, was Philip French of New York, who said he heard it said before the election that Fletcher had threatened to "pittell any man that should chuse Peter De la Ney" for assemblyman. Capt. William Kidd, master of the brigantine "Antego, testified that the sheriff of New York "spoke to him to get his people from on board his vessel they being Inhabitants of New York to vote at the Election," but Kidd could not say this was by order of the governor. The same testimony was given by other masters, one of whom added that he was in the field at the time of the election, but did not see any of the seamen or others belonging to the men-of-war, except the captain, "but he saw the soldiers come into the field and they went into the Millyard, which is an enclosure not far from the place of Election where they remained till the election was over," etc.—N. Y. Cal. Dict., IV: 145-50, 143-45. For other election contests, see Sept. 29, 1701; Nov. 4, 1702; Sept. 12, 1757.

The royal assent is given to an act of parliament reversing the attainder of Leisler, Milbourne, and Gouveneur, which had passed in its third reading the day before.—Cal. of State Papers, 1697-9, 6, preserved in the Public Record Office (pub. in 1905), 471, citing the London Gazette of May 2 to 6. The text of the act is printed in Doc. Hist. N. Y., (40 ed.), II: 249-50. It is cited "6-5 Will, III." It was previously printed by Hugh Gaine in 1764, as an appendix to the Journals of the Votes and Proceedings of the General Assembly, Vol. 3, after p. 860, but was there ascribed to a parliament which ended Nov. 12, 1694, this act completely reverses the view concerning the guilt of these men, as expressed in the opinion of Gov. Slaughter, for his council (see under April 13, 1694), on the strength of which Leider and Milburne were executed. It states specifically the circumstances regarding Leider's seizure of the government, and vindicates his conduct. In a footnote in the Doc. Hist. N. T., (410 ed.), II: 259, O'Callaghan quotes Chalmers, who states, with reference to the act of reversal, "One agent of Massa- chusetts framed the Bill [in England], while the other sat as chairman of the Committee which reported it." See also N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1888), 348: Winor, Nor. & Crit. Hist. Am., VI: 340.

6 John Vanderspeigel having proposed to the common council to supervise the cleaning of the streets from May 1, 1695, for the period of one year, for the sum of $30, he is authorized to do so.

7 The stockade was built of stockade boards on the north side and a wall on the south side.

13 June
There is an unofficial report of the death of the queen, and an order from the governor and council is issued in consequence.— Cal. Coun. Min., 105. On May 20, the report was confirmed, and the council ordered that an act of condolence be sent by the governor and council to the king.—Ibid. This was signed and sent to Sec. Blathwayt on May 30, — 106.

In July, he was taken prisoner by a French privateer, and was impelled to throw all his papers overboard to prevent the information contained, particularly the drawings of the fortifications of this city, from falling into the enemy's hands. While imprisoned in France, he prepared from memory and sent to the Bishop of London, a description of the province and city of New York with plans of the city and of several forts as they existed in 1695. His manuscript and drawings were published in 1843, 1864, and 1901—See Bibliography. The issue of 1901 bears the original title New York Considered and Improved, 1695, by John Miller, and is published from the original MS. in the British Museum, With Introduction and Notes by Victor Hugo Palacky (see Bibliography). The following extracts, describing the city, are taken from this edition (pp. 15–37), the introduction to which contains an account of Miller's life, and a description of the various issues of the work.

"The City of New York more largely taken is the whole Island so called & is in length 16 miles in breadth &c in circumference 42 but more strictly considered & as a place of strength is only the part thereof within the fortifications & so is not in length or breadth above two furlongs & in circumference a mile. The form of it is triangular having for its sides thereof the west & north lines & the East & South for its Arched basis the chief place of strength it boasts of is its fort situated on the southwest Angle which is reasonably strong & well provided with Ammunition having in it about 36 Guns mounted on the Basis likewise in convenient places are 3 Batteries of Great Guns one of 15 call'd Ward's Battery [from Capt. Ward] built by the New York Min. & the Burghers path. on the North-east Angle is a strong blockhouse and half moon wherein are 6 or 7 guns this part buts upon the River & is all along forded with a sufficient bank of Earth. On the North side are two large stone Points & therein about 8 Guns some mounted & some unmounted. On the Northwest Angle is a Blockhouse & on the West side 2 Hornwork which are furnished with some Guns 6 or 7 in number, this side buts upon Hudsons River, has a bank in some places 20 fathom high from the water by reason whereof & a stockade strengthened with a bank of Earth on the Inside (which land also on the North side to the landward) it is not Easily Assailable."

The work as a whole consists of an account of the physical, religious, social, and political features of the province. The author gives his view of the Leister troubles; a summary of the number of churches, ministers, and church members of all denominations in the different counties, and by the states notes the new Province of New York," and what his qualifications, status, and work should be; and the need of "forces & warlike provisions;" he also outlines the orders and instructions which might advantageously be given to the bishop and to the governor, and the plans which he deemed proper for "the protection of this province."

Miller's plan of the city of New York, and of the fort, are reproduced on PL 23-4 and 5, with descriptions on pp. 234–36, Vol. I, where various important landmarks of the city, as listed by Miller, are mentioned. One of the most interesting of these, no- where else mentioned in the annals of the city, is (No. 30) the ground within one of the bastions of the wall, which Miller con- siders "most proper for ye building of an English Church."

The final accounts of the builders of the Dutch Church in Gar- den St. are presented. The building of the tower is deferred until after the church is incorporated.—Eccles. Rec., II: 1123.

The church officers petition for incorporation on June 19 (q.v.), and it was granted the following year.

Fletcher issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford "at the Bible in the City of New York," stating; "Whereas I am informed that there are French Privaters coming upon this Coast, I have ordered His Majesty's ship, The Richmond, to Cruise, for the De- fense of this Province,"—From Miss Haas's "Bibliography" in N.Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1901), 55.

The council orders that the carpenters' accounts for work done at the fort be examined.—Cal. Coun. Min., 106.

Peter Delany, writing to England in relation to Gov. Fletcher's conduct, states that when Fletcher arrived here he "instituted into the inhabitants the great interest and credit he had at Whitehall, who would hale any complaints that could be made against his administration and this back'd with the grandeur of a Coach and six horses (a pomp this place had never seen in any former Government) more than himself been done-worthy of a city of his own country,) struck such a terror into the people, as easily prepared 'em for the public sadder he has laid upon 'em. To recount all his arts of squeezing money both out of the public and private purses would make a volume instead of a letter." Delanyy further states:

"He ordered two of the principal gates of the City where the Indians used to enter, to be shut up, cautiously allaying the danger of keeping open so many gates during the war; several poor traders who had built their houses near those gates purposely for the Indian trade would have been ruin'd if these gates had continued shut, and therefore rais'd a contribution of fifty or sixty of their best furs which they presented to his Excellency, who hereby removed his Embas- sency apprehensions of the danger those gates exposed the City to; for at the request of the Mayor & Aldermen the gates were opened again & the City as safe as when they were shut."

Delany also explains Fletcher's encouragement of pirates, who operate in the Red Sea to bring their Arabian gold to New York; he describes his irregular methods in the May election (p. 176), his affected or ostentatious piety, etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 221–24. Regarding Fletcher's answers to charges against him, see ibid., IV: 176–86.

Col. Inglished reports that the French are marching towards Albany, it is also reported from Maryland that a French fleet is coming to attack New York.—Cal. Coun. Min., 106.

The reformed Dutch Church petitions Fletcher for incorporation as "The Ministers, Elders and Deacons of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of the City of New York."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1127–1128, Jan. 9, 1696.—Cal. Coun. Min., 111. See May 11, 1696. For reproduction of charter, see PL 24, Vol. IV.

The council orders that an addition be made to the governor's lodgings in the fort.—Cal. Coun. Min., 107. On July 11, the committee relative to this addition made its report.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 226.

At the request of the postmaster-general, it is moved in the July assembly that the "Act for the encouraging a Post-Office" be continued for three years longer. This is approved by both assembly and council, and the bill is published on July 4.—Assemb. Jour., I: 57, 58; Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 33, 56.

The public buildings of the city being much out of repair, the poor in great distress, and the streets "so Mirey and foul that they are Noysome to the Inhabitants," the general assembly passes an act to enable the city to raise funds annually by taxation for the necessary public charges. It is also for the accomplishment of the public works or buildings; also the appointment of a "A scavenger Raker or other officer to be Employed in cleansing the streets, Lanes, Alley's and other places ... and at Least once in every week shall carry or cause to be carried the Ashes, dirte filth and Soyle of the said Street unto such Place or Places where he shall think convenient."

"The House of Representatives, now convened in General Assembly," in an address to the governor and council, asks that
ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT ENTERED INTO, IN LONDON, BY THE RIGHT HON. RICHARD, EARL OF BELLOMONT, OF THE ONE PART, AND ROBERT LIVINGSTON AND CAPT. WILLIAM KID, OF THE OTHER, WHICH, IN BRIEF, STATE:

KID HATH NOTICE, AND IS DESIRous TO FIGHT WITH AND SUBDUE THE SAID CAPTAIN, AS ALSO OTHER PILOTS, WHOSE SAID CAPT. KID SHALL MEET AT SEA, IN CASE HE BE IMPERSONATED OR DOGGED AND WHEREAS IT IS AGREED BETWEEN THE SAID PARTIES, THAT FOR THE PURPOSE AFORESAID, A GOOD AND SUFFICIENT SHIP TO THE LIKING OF THE SAID CAPT. KID, SHALL BE FORBIDDEN OR TO SERVICE, WHEREOF THE SAID CAPT. KID IS TO HAVE THE COMMAND . . ."

Here follow the terms of the agreement, whereby Bellomont undertakes 1. To procure from the king and commissions of the admiral, one or more commissions to appoint the said Bellomont to act as state, in the preamble; 2. To obtain from the king (three months after Kid departs) a grant, to "some indifferent and trusty person," of the various things that shall be taken from the pirates by Kid and the ships under his command; 3. To pay four-fifths of the cost of the ship and its equipment, if before his departure he shall pay to Livingston and Kid 4. To advance £4,600 for this purpose before Nov. 6, 1655; 5. Livingston and Kid to advance £400, as part of their share, before that date; 6. Bellomont to pay the balance of his four-fifths to Livingston and Kid; and the latter to advance the balance of their fifth part within seven weeks from the date of his agreement; 7. Kid agreeing to take on board the ship about 100 "Mariners or Seamen," to set sail with all convenient speed, and "to sail to such parts or places where he may meet with the said Pirates, and to use his utmost endeavours to meet with, subdue and conquer the said Pirats, or any other Pirats, and to take them and their Merchandize and Treasure, also to take what Prizes he can from the King's Enemies, and with that means, and with that skill, and to bring the ship to the best manner of hand, which he doth intend, and to bring the ship to the best manner of hand, and to bring the ship into the best manner of hand, and to bring the ship to the best manner of hand, and to bring the ship into the best manner of hand, and to bring the ship within the hands and possession of the said Earl," 8. Kid further agreeing that his contract or bargain with his ship's crew shall be "No purchase no pay," and that their share in the goods, etc., which he shall take as pirats shall not be to share as pirats; but he shall be less if that can reasonably and conveniently be agreed upon; 9. Livingston and Kid agreeing jointly and severally with Bellomont that, in case Kid does not meet the pirates mentioned, or does not take from other pirates or the enemies of the king such goods, etc., as, when divided, shall fully compensate Bellomont for his expenditures, they shall refund to him, before March 25, 1657, the amounts he has advanced ("the Danger of the Seas, and of the Enemies, and the Mortality of the said Capt. Kid always excepted"), and in such case Livingston and Kid shall become the sole owners of the ship and its furniture; 10. The goods, etc., taken from pirates and the prices taken from the king's enemies to be divided into four parts, one-fourth or less (as Kid shall determine) to go to the ship's crew, and the other three-fourths to be divided into five equal parts, of which Bellomont shall retain four parts, and Livingston and Kid shall receive from him one part equally divided between them; 11. And, lastly, in case Kid brings in pirats and delivers to Bellomont goods, etc., so taken, to the value of £10,000 or more, the ship is to be given to Kid as a reward for his services.

Before the sealing and delivering of this agreement, Bellomont makes the additional covenant to Livingston and Kid that "the persons to whom the Gramercy, and all the other and all other necessary officers and seamen" be divided in four parts, one-fourth of the share of the ship's crew of all the goods, etc., taken by Kid under his commission. Bellomont is the only signee of the agreement—From a copy of the agreement, printed for J. Richardson (London, 1752), (London, 1752), p. 375, Vol. I. (London, 1752).

Oct. 1695: an Act for the Reparation of the Brest, and for the Repair of the Bridge over the River. This act was passed to help repair the bridge over the Fresh Water Pond, which was damaged by a storm. It involved the payment of £2.16.26.11.

Nov. 1695: an Act for the Deposition of William Kidd, for the commission he was accused of, with the sanction of the king, under the great seal of England, to "Captain William Kidd, commander of the Ship Adventure Galley."–N. Y. Col. Docs., VI: 762; "Lord Bellomont and the Pirates" (MS. lecture), by John H. Edmonds, state archivist of Mass.

It should be noted that, while Bellomont was named to the position of governor of New York in 1645, he did not receive his commission until the summer of 1697, and did not arrive in New York until the spring of 1698. Macaulay fell into an error, in his History of England, in stating that the negotiations which resulted in the fitting out of Kidd's expedition were conducted between Bellomont and America–of the City, or by any of their Slaves or Servants, on the Lord's Day.

Travel is limited to 20 miles, even for church-going, an exception being made in the case of the public post, a physician, or a midwife.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for the Raising One Thousand Pounds to be employed by an Agent for the Representation of the State of the Province." New York County and County's quota is £289.11. William Nicolls, one of the governor's Council, is the agent named in the act. He is to show to the king the heavy burden that has been on the inhabitants of the province since the beginning of the war, and to ask relief.–Col. Laws N. Y, I: 352.

The common council resolves that "the Duties of the City be paid," and it is ordered that "the Overseers of the Poor & Public Works agree upon the most Easy and Requisite methods "for the Raising A fund for the Payment thereof."–M. G. C., I: 390. They reported on Dec. 7 that the easiest method was "to Sell the land lying on the West side of the Custom house bridge." They thought it "Require his Excellency be Addressed for his Permission to Erect buildings thereon." It was ordered accordingly that the recorder draw up an address to him.–Ibíd., I: 391. The recorder submitted the draft of a petition on Dec. 10, and it was ordered that it be engrossed, and that the mayor and recorder "doe waite on his Excellency to morrow morning."–Ibíd., I: 392. The mayor and recorder reported on Dec. 12 that they had delivered the petition to the governor, "who Answered that he would view the Place and Advise with his Majesties Council what would be proper to be done in that matter."–Ibíd., I: 393. There is no record of this proceeding in either the Jour. Leg. Coun. or the Col. Coun. Min.

The overseers reported on Feb. 1, 1696, a plan for raising £25:31:112, to pay the city's debts, repair the city hall, and mend the bridge (which had been carried 30 ft. farther into the dock). This was in accord with the act of 1691, "to Engross the City of New York to Defray their Publick Charges." On hearing this report, the council ordered that an assessment to the amount of £31714:71 be made upon all freeholders, inhabiting, and sojourners within the city, payable on or before March 25, the assessment roll to be on Feb. 10.–M. G. C., I: 394.

A warrant is issued to James Virtue "for cutting the kings 21 arbres in brass."–Cal. Coun. Min., I, 111.

Direct Vanderburgh, a bricklayer, is appointed overseer of Dec. hearths and chimneys, with the right of calling to his assistance the constable of each ward to inspect the "Keeping of the Same Clean Swept & Repaired." He is required to provide six ladders, two of which are "to have bookes."–M. G. C., I: 391. These books and ladders were not paid for until Feb. 9, 1706, after Vanderburgh had become alderman and city surveyor.–Ibíd., II: 295; see, also, Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. at an 18th Cent. Municipality, 1860.

Owners of lots between low-water mark and the blockhouse by the east gate of the city, and along Queen St., petition for the removal of this blockhouse, as it obstructs the street and all improvements.–Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 243.

The common council orders that it be a law that "thieves of all sorts to be punished in the same manner as in London," and that the common council be empowered to fix the amount of fine for each offense. The council also orders that "the Bridge over the Fresh Water Pond be made to answer the purpose of a bridge," and that "the Commissioners of the City and County be empowered to make an Estimate what will be Necessary to be Raised for their Relief."–Ibíd., I: 397. For this object, £100 will be needed for one year.–Ibíd., I: 398. See also, Dec. 4, 1691; Nov. 19, 1695.

It is ordered by the common council that "Capt. Kidd doe View what will be Needfull for ye Necessary Making or Repairing the bridge over the fresh water and make Report thereof this day four o'clock."–M. G. C., I: 388. He reported on Nov. 19 that, in his opinion, £100 will be sufficient for ye Making A Bridge over the fresh water.–Ibíd., I: 390. This bridge, afterwards called the "Kissing Bridge" (mentioned in Burnaby's Travels–see July, 1760), was across the Old Kill, or "Old Wreck Brook," the outlet of the Fresh Water Pond; it stood on the old Boston Post Road, now Park Row, at Roosevelt St.—See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 926, where, however, "Burnaby's Diary" is said to have been destroyed.

"An Act against the Profanation of the Lord's Day, called Sunday," is passed by the provincial legislature. It provides that "there shall be no travelling, servile labouring and Working, shooting, fishing, sporting, playing, Horse-racing, hunting, or frequenting of Filling-Houses, or the using of any unlawful Exercites or Pastimes, by any of the Inhabitants or Sojourners within this Province, or by any of their Slaves or Servants, on the Lord's Day."
It is provided by the governor's council that Stuwan van Cortlandt, with any two additional members of the council, shall be keepers of the seal of the province during the governor's absence at Albany. He is authorized also to take probates and grant letters of administration.—Cal. Hist. MSS. Eng., 253.

During Dec. 1695—Jan. 1696, two payments were recorded in 1697, one to James Wells, May 20, for carpenter work, and one to Dirck van der Burgh, on May 27, for mason work.—Ibid., 121.

The council grants permission to Benjamin Bayard (see Jan. 9) to build a mazzhouse near the fort.—Cal. Coun. Min., 112.

Eight petitioners are admitted as freemen by the common council and required to pay "the Fees of their Certificates only."—M. C. C., II, 395. Apparently these petitioners were taking advantage of the custom of being admitted to the Trinity vestry. Until recently, they formed part of a package indorsed "Miscellaneous Papers" preserved in the corporation's vault. The first page of these interesting records (reproduced at Pl. 25-A, Vol. IV) reveals the earliest steps leading to the erection of the first Trinity church.

one of the north bastions of the city wall was considered "The ground proper for ye building of an English Church." The location of the French and Lutheran Churches are also shown on this plan.

Feb.

One of the committees of the managers of the proposed new English church (see Jan. 27) reports that the Lutheran congregation has a clear title to part of the land desired for the new church (derived from Nicholls' patent to Pluver), but that the Lutherans have agreed to assign their interest to them for £200. The Lutherans also make a voluntary gift of an additional piece of ground in the rear of the other, near the "Locust Trees." They ask only the "Liberty of burying their Dead in the Church yard" at the regular rate to be charged by the English church.—From the original loose Trin. Min. (MS.).

Cornelius Quick and Isaac Anderson agree with the vestry of Trinity Church to cut and bring "Stones from Monniss Island," for the period of one month, beginning next week, at one shilling and three half-pence a load. They will continue as long as necessary for ye building of ye Church. Major Merritt and Capt. Tontil.

are to go "to Monniss Island & Discourse Mf Blackwell relating to the Quarry of stones on ye Said Island." Mr. Blackwell has granted the stone without charge.—From the original loose

12 The inhabitants of Pearl St. petition the common council that powder be no longer kept in "the Ware house Near Whitehall;"

a certain tree is appointed to see if the slaughter-house formerly used for the purpose is suitable for storing powder, and if so to move the powder there.—M. C. C. I. 400. This was the slaughterhouse built in 1675—"without the Gate at the Smithfly, near the Half Moone," which on April 6, 1689, was made a general store-house for powder.—Ibid., I. 150. On Aug. 3, 1696 (p.4), a powder-house was provided for at "point Hollondia," and on Aug.

19, payment was made "for boards & nails Iron worke & Labour for fitting the Powder house."—Ibid., I. 417. It was further repaired in 1698.—Ibid., II. 30. For a later powder-house, situated elsewhere, see March 29, 1700.

The common council orders that a warrant be issued for ye paying the Acc. of William Bradford Amounting to five pounds Nine Shillings itt being for a Book of ye Acts of Assembly; also for "Printing an Ordinance Printing ye City Laws & Making up

On this day ground is to be broken, by order of the managers on March 23, for the new English church. There is no record of the laying of a corner-stone, but see under May 24, 1696. As appears by the records of subsequent events, the "first opening" of the church for service was on March 15, 1698. The Bishop of London presented a bell to the church in 1701. The Plevier house was not completed, however, until 1711, owing to lack of funds. In 1715, the church was enlarged. It was destroyed by fire in 1776. The second

Trinity Church was completed in 1790; this was torn down in 1839, and the present edifice was consecrated in 1846.—See Jan. 1790;

It has not been possible to ascertain whether the street was ever straightened as here proposed.

cil to allow their hogs to run at large within the said Precinct,

A patent to Caleb Heathcote (representing the managers of the new English Church—see Jan. 27), conveys "a lot of ground situating within the Liberties of the City and County of New York adjoining unto the Locust trees, which was formerly part of our [the King’s] garden, containing in breadth 27 ft. and in length 50 ft." There is also a lease of this date for 41 years (the outcome of a petition of March 26) of "another part of the said garden bounded by fences or ledges of said garden so far as said garden in the rear doth extend, and from the said fence or stockades so far into Hudson’s River as low-water mark."—Patents (sec. of state’s office), grants of Gov. Fletcher.—See Jan. 9, 1699.

The ground behind the wind-mill is granted to Capt. Kip.—
Col. Coun. Min., 131. This is the last grant for the "Windmill.
In 1719, the grant was made by Gov. Fletcher to Johannes Kip, Lucas Kiersted, and William Teller, as trustees, in trust for the children and devises of Sara Rodew, and not in their own right.—Smith ex dem. Teller vs. G. & P. Lorillard, Johnson’s Reports (Supreme Court), X, 339. The will of Cornelis van Borsum was dated June 16, 1690, making his widow, Sara, his universal heir; Sara’s will was dated July 29, 1693, by which she devised her estate to her several children, by her deceased husband, Hans Kiersted; she appointed Johannes Kip, Lucas Kiersted, and William Teller her executors, etc.—Iblid., 339. Jacobus Kip, the eldest son of Johannes Kip, was admitted in the City of New York as clerk of the City land as his, when, in 1723 (see under Dec. 17, 1721), he prevailed upon the common council to appoint a committee to assist him in "Surveying and laying out" this tract.—M. G. C., III, 335:
A descendant of Teller, later on, claimed the ground. See Smith ex dem., Teller vs. Lorillard, 96, cit., by which it appears that the tract was known commonly as the Negro’s Burying ground, and that in May, 1768, J. Teller “entered into possession of a house which he had built two or three years before on the Negroes’ Burying-Ground and which had, previously to its entrance, been occupied by his tenants; that he had a fence enclosing the burying-ground, and claimed it as his property— and took payement for the use of the ground . . .; that he continued in possession until his death in June, 1775, and his family continued in possession afterward . . . until the British army took possession of the house and not, and during the course of the war; and that while under the domination of the British, the house and fences were A deed of partition of the Negroes’ Burying Ground was made January 6, 1793, between Henry H. Kip, Abraham 1. van Vleck, John and Samuel Kip, of the first part, Samuel Breese and Aaron Breckman, of the second part; Theophrastus Beckman and Elizabeth his wife . . ., of the second part; Isaac van Vleck, of the third part;
and Daniel Demminston of the fourth part.—Liber Deeds, CCCXCVi, 405-50 (New York). The land was then distributed into lots and divised among the parties to the partition deed representing the heirs of Sara Rodew, the court did not uphold a deed by above-named executors of Samuel Bayard to Peter Lorillard, as against the title of the heirs of Teller, who had been driven off by the Beckman. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III, 927. Just why this tract should have become a negro’s burying-ground (which it did sometime prior to 1735, for it is so shown on a map of 1755—see Pl. 34, Vol. 1), and subsequently a common potter’s field, and a burying-place for English and American soldiers of the Revolution, the Revolutionary war, does not exactly appear. As shown by the grant to Van Borsum, Oct. 4/14, 1673 (q.v.), and the confirmatory patent by Fletcher in 1696, the heirs of Sara Rodew should always have had a good title here by descent.

Persons recently arrived in town are to be asked to subscribe to the building of Trinity Church.—Loose Trin. Min. (MS.), 98, cit.
Regarding other contributions paid by persons of all denominations,

The "gate of the city" is still referred to in public documents as a familiar landmark.—Jeur. Leg. Coun., 90. It is the well-known
"land gate" of the walled city, situated at Broadway and the present Wall St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III, 945. There appears to be no record to show when the land gate itself was demolished; the bustion near this point were demolished in 1699, and the stone used in building the city hall stated below. See also Sept. 15, 1673, ing about 24 ft. in depth and 100 ft. along the street.—M. G. C., I,

The common council orders that "the Inhabitants fronting to Burgers Path" make this street "Convenient for Carta to go to and from the Water Side," in accordance with the directions of the city surveyors.—M. G. C., I, 404. See also Sept. 23. On June 11, 1697 (q.v.), another order required the "Slip att Burgers path" to be paved. Some time later the inhabitants in a petition to the board declared that they had done so, but that Capt. Clock had now "begone to stop up this the By." In this petition it is said that "Said Slip may not be Spuised itt being the most Convenient place in all the City" to unload boats, canoes, and other vessels.—From original petition (without date) in metal file No. 1, city clerk’s record-room. Burgers Path was paved in 1698.—See Jan. 11, 1699.
The common council grants the petition of Alderman Cortlandt, who desires "that A Slip or Inlett may be made before the City Hall" at his own expense.—M. G. C., I, 404. Apparently this was the origin of what later became known as "Coventies Slip."— See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III, 988; and Pl. 30, Vol. I. Also see Aug. 17, 1699.
Fletcher signs the charter of the Dutch Church (see Pl. 24, Vol. IV), giving it the corporate name of "The Minister, Elders, and Deacons of the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of the City of New York."—Col. Coun. Min., 114. For the full text, see Eccles. Rec., II, 115-65, where it is compared in parallel columns with the charter of Trinity Church (1697). The charter of the Dutch Church was the first church charter granted in the colony, and that of Trinity the second.—See Murphy’s Anthology of New Netherland (1865), 124, where he states that the Dutch charter was on record (1865) in the office of the secretary of state in books of patents, VII, 25. The original is now in the church archives in New York. The charter describes five pieces of property belonging to the church. These include the church and cemetery in Garden St.; a lot on the west and north of the church lot; a lot on Beaver St.; and the manor of Fordham. Religious freedom is given to this church, and its property rights are confirmed. See Addenda.
The common council takes under consideration the subject of building a new city hall, and it is ordered that "Alderman Cortland Alderman Darlins & Alderman Boellen Mf Dr Peyster Mf
Rip Van Dam & Mf Ewuate together with Capt. Clarke Mf Lartling & Capt. Kip be a Committee to make a Draft of y7 City Hall & to Compute & Estimate what the building thereof may Cost; and likewise how Much this City Hall and Ground & the land under the Trees by Burgers path will Sell for & make Report thereof in eighteen days to the Clerks office."—M. G. C., I, 405. On June 26, 1696, "By Majority of Votes itt was Agreed that A City Hall be built," and a memorandum was entered in the Minutes that 1606 “It is Proposed that yr Easiest and best way for the building A City Hall Powder house &c: is to Mortgage the Rent of yr Ferry for fifteen years to the City Hall & Great Company beheld, and the Ground Concluded to be Sold in the Rear of the Dock Street att Nine pence 3d foot, for yr building the Same to the Value of three thousand Pounds the undertaker having yr Benefit of yr Rent for Powder and Other Conveniences all Publick Rooms and Offices Exceded and that the Said City Hall is to be built and Covered by the first day of November Come twelve Months.” Whereupon it was ordered “that Mr Mayor Calling to his Assistance Such of yr Aldermen and Common Council As he Shall thinke fit & the Surveyors of this City & Such Carpenters and Bricklayers as may be Needfull doe take the Dimensions of the Several parts of the Said City Hall as will be Necessary for the SUM aforesaid.”—Ibid., I: 410. On July 2, 1696, it was ordered that a committee, including the surveyors, “make an Estimate what the building of A New City Hall will amount to & where it will be most Convenient to place the same yf they Consider of yr Easiest and most proper Method for the raising A Fund to build the same and that they Likewise made A Draft and Ascertain yf Dimensions thereof.”—Ibid., I: 411.

A new committee was appointed for the same purpose on Nov. 11, 1696.—Ibid., I: 428. And again, after the board had reaffirmed the necessity of building a new hall, and had resolved “that the Lots of yr Right Hand Side of the Bridge Shall not be Sold or Disposed of for this purpose (ibid., I: 20-21), and after repairing the old city hall, which was in a dilapidated condition (ibid., II: 16, 17, 18, 20), another committee was appointed on Nov. 9, 1698, to determine where a new hall could be built most conveniently, what materials would be needed, and what the cost would be, and to “make Reporte with all Convenient Speed.”—Ibid., II: 66. On Jan. 11, 1699, “The Committee Appointed to View the City Hall &c” reported that they had “Viewed the present City Hall And finde itt insufficient and doe think the Upper end of the broad Street A proper place for yr Building A new City Hall And believe that the Sum of three thousand pounds may be sufficient for the building the same According to the former draft drawn by Mr James Evvets which Report is Approved.”—Ibid., II: 68. On May 25, 1699, the board “doe Unanimously Resolve (Alderman Cortlandt only dissenting) that A New City Hall be built with all Convenience Expedition and that the same be Erected And built att the upper End of the broad Street and that the Mayor taking to his Assistance Such of the Aldermen Assistants and surveyors of the Said City as he shall think Convenient doe lay out the Ground for the Building the same.”—Ibid., II: 78.

After these preliminary arrangements, it was at length ordered, on Aug. 9, 1699, that the mayor, etc., employ workmen to lay the foundation of the new hall.—Ibid., II: 79. The procuring of stone was next considered. On Aug. 18, 1699, the board decided that a petition should be presented immediately to Nanfan, the lieutenant-governor, and his council, stating that the city’s new building would be the “first work” fronting the line of fortifications on Wall St., and asking him “to Intercede with his Excellency the Capt. Gen.11 so that the Stones of yr Sd Bastions with the Consent of the Owners thereof may be Appropriate to the Building the said City Hall.”—Ibid., II: 82. Nanfan evidently referred the petition to the governor, for on Sept. 4, 1699, in a letter to Mayor De Peyster, Bollomont stated: “I write to my cousin Nanfan last post To Let the City of N. yorke have yr Stones of the old hastions or Batteries To build their Towne house.”—From the original letter, in De Peyster Papers, in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. On Sept. 7, the board ordered the demolition of two hastings.—Cal. Cun. Min., 145. Between that date and Sept. 20, we know the foundation of the new city hall was laid, for on the latter date the common council ordered the mayor to issue his warrant to the treasurer to pay “the Expenses which was made att the Laying yr Foundation of the City Hall.”—M. C. C., II: 86. Receiving the same, see Oct. 16, 1699.

A board of trade is established in England by the king, under a commission of this date, for promoting the trade of Great Britain, and improving the king’s plantations in America and elsewhere. High commissions are appointed to meet at Whitehall to take according to the development and development of the trade and manufactures of the provinces; to take “care of all Records, Grants and Papers remaining in the Plantation Office;” to take account yearly “by way of Journals of the Administration of Our Governors,” etc., etc.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 145-48. See also Dickerson, May Am. Colonial Government, 1606-1676, A study of the British Board of Trade in its relation to the American Colonies, Political, Industrial, Administrative (1912). There is published by Bradford, as a 4-page broadside, an address signed “Chid. Brooke” and “W. Nicoll,” beginning: “To their Excellencys, the Lords Justices of England, the Humble Memorial of Chidley Brook and William Nicolls, Sheweth that they were sent from the Governor, Council and General Assembly of His Majesties Province of New York about the month of November last, with an humble Address of thanks to His Sacred Majesty for his Royal Care of and Bounty to that Province . . .”—See auction Catalogue of the library of George H. Moore, May 10, 1897.

Fletcher issues a proclamation of thanksgiving on receiving “certain intelligence of a late horrid and detestable conspiracy, against the sacred life of Our Sovereign Lord King William.”—From Miss Hasse’s "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1903), 37. On the 26th a celebration was ordered.—Cal. Cun. Min., 114, 115. He reported to Shewbury by letter on the 30th that he had appointed a day for this purpose.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 149. Clap’s Almanac (1697, p.v) mentions the plot. “Associations” are formed to protect the king.—See Cal. State Papers, Am. & W. I., 1696-1697, items Nos. 15, 16, 15, 13; see also Oct. 14, 1698.

In a report to the lords of trade, Fletcher states that a band of pirates came recently into the province, shared their booty and departed. He adds: “Their Treasure was Spanish money, they enrich the Charter Governors.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 151. See also Benjamin Fletcher and the Rise of Piracy” in Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., I: 489; and Lamb, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 452.

An alarming scarcity of bread begins to prevail.—Lamb, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 446. The common council orders an assize of bread, only the wheat leaf being permitted; also that “No Person or Persons Shall Pretend to Bake bread Biscuit or Crackers of Any Sorte or Kinde whatsoever within this City without Enterling their Names with the Mayor.” All bakers “admitted by the mayor” are required “to Keep bread in their Shops that the Inhabitants may be Supplied.”—M. C. C., I: 405-6, 418. On June 11, the freeholders and inhabitants of the city petitioned for an embargo on the exportation of grain, flour, and bread (Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 251), and the governor and council decided that no corn should be exported.—Cal. Cun. Min., 115. On the same day, Fletcher issued a proclamation, printed by Bradford, prohibiting the exportation of "Flower, Bread, or any other Grain, until the first of August next ensuing."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 251; Miss Hane’s "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1903), 57. See also July 2, and Nov. 17, 1696.

Fletcher writes to the lords of trade that: “The town of Philadelphia in fourteen years time is become equal near to the City of New York in trade and riches, the hardships that this province has undergone in the opening it has had, to bring this Country and our people have drived many of them thither to enjoy their ease, and there being no duty upon trade in that Colony it is a discouragement to the trade of this province whose inhabitants are left wholly to bear the burden of the Warr, whilst they grow by the hardships of our circumstances and derive all their protection from our forces.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 158-59.

Fletcher further reports that: “There are several Quakers in the City of New York who [from a pretence of tenderness of conscience and aversion to the carnal weapon will not sign the Association nor take an oath. I have given orders to release them.”—Ibid., IV: 159.

He also reports: “I have transmitted to your Lord’s a list of the Roman Catholics, and reputed Papists in New York who are all disarmed and obliged to give bond with surety for their good behaviour or be confined in prison.”—Ibid., IV: 160. The governor and council issued an order the following day (June 11) that all Roman Catholics should be disarmed and imprisoned.—Cal. Cun. Min., 115. Again, on June 13, Fletcher having referred this order to Maj. William Merritt, the mayor, to give a list “of all the Roman Catholics or such as are reputed Papists within the City of New York,” the mayor lists ten persons. The common council resolves that, “in Consideration that the 16 Respectable Inhabitants of Dock Street will build A Wharf or Street of thirty foot wide att Low water Mark to Remain for A Publick Street, &c: that yr Vacant Ground between the Said Street
The proclamation of June 11, prohibiting the exportation of food-stuffs, is rescinded by another proclamation, which, however, continues the prohibition against the exportation of "Corneal and coarse Bisket."—Col. The mayor and captains of the militia have viewed "his Majesties Fortifications About the City," by order of the governor, and found them much in need of repair. They are informed that there is no money in the city treasury and no fund for repairing them. The governor has information regarding the "Designs of the Enemy upon this place," and it is "of Absolute Necessity that the same be forthwith Repaired And put in A Posture of Defence." The mayor therefore proposes to pay for Erection of any buildings before the Street and wharf that is now laid out Upon A Direct Line and y7 Purchasers Directed to Range their Fences Accordingly that each Purchaser have the Free and Absolute use & Benefit of y7 wharfs with y7 Liberty to Erect Cranes and Stairs & the Advantages and Profits thereof; that there be A Sufficient Carte way from the Slip att Burgers path And that they Erect such buildings thereon as to them Shall seem meet." A warrant is issued to pay John Coburn for paving the magazine mount.—Col. Coun. Min., 118.

Rev. John Miller, late chaplain to his majesty's forces in New York (see under date of June, 1695), gives information to the board of trade at Whitehall respecting this province. He states among other things, that "there are about 3000 Families in New York and about 5000 Families in Connecticut."—N. Y. Col. Decs., IV: 183; but see Sept. 16, 1696. "There is but one Minister of the Church of England and one School for the free Colony of New York. A Dutch Minister there had instructed some Indian children. But the English of New York had not endeavoured it."—Ibid.

Judge Samuel Sewall, writing in his diary of the ordination of the Rev. Benjamin Wadsworth as pastor of the First Church in Boston, says that the Rev. Increase Mather, in giving the right hand of fellowship: "Spake notably of some young men who had apostatized from New England principles, contrary to the Light of their education." Among the young men thus referred to was the Rev. William Vazie or Vesey, who was graduated from Harvard College in 1693, and who on one occasion "preached at the Ch. of Eng'l" in Boston, where he "had many Auditors," and afterward became the first rector of Trinity Church in New York.—Sewall's Diary, in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections (Boston, 1833), 7th ser., V: 331-32.

Fletcher issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, prohibiting the transportation of Indian corn and peas from Albany, Ulster, and Dutchess Counties to points down the Hudson, until April 1, 1697. This is to enable the Indians of the Five Nations to replenish their corn supply, which had been destroyed by the French and Indians of Canada.—From an original broadside, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

In a representation concerning the state of the province, presented to the board of trade at Whitehall by Jacob Leider (2d) and Gouverneur, it is stated that there may be about 6,000 or 9,000 families in New York Province.—N. Y. Col. Decs., IV: 197-213. It is also stated that there are "very great feudes in the Country ever since the Revolution. Those who joy'd with Governor Leiter in it are 19 to one; But now oppressed and kept out of all manner of place or employment in the Government ... But that the Parliaments here [in England] have reversed the Attainder, both Mr Leider and he are kept out of part of their Estates."—Ibid., IV: 198. The report was continued on Sept. 20 & 27, 1696. It was intended to point out the misgovernment of the province, and particularly to accuse Fletcher of misappropriation or misuse of public revenues, and of attempting forcibly to prevent the election of Leider's followers to the general assembly in 1694 and 1695. Complaint was also made that the fortifications in New York City were already in a state of decay, but the bulwarks not regarded, one of them at the water'side disposed of to private service, great guns not erected, which were procured for the city, etc.—Ibid., IV: 212-24. Delany's letter of June 15, 1695 (p. v.), is also presented to the board at this time. See Sept. 21, 1698.

Fletcher reports to the board of trade that Capt. Kidd, "Commander of the adventure Gally," sailed from New York 12 days ago with 150 men on board. He adds that "in his way hither he tooke a French Banker which was condemned here and appraised at 350L. I have the King's tenth and shall account for it as the Lords of the Admiralty direct."—N. Y. Col. Decs., IV: 199.

Gov. Fletcher embarks at Greenwich for Albany to renew the "Covenant Chain" with the Five Nations of Indians. For an account of the proceedings at the conferences, held there on Sept. 29, Oct. 1, 3, and 5, see A Journal of what Passed in the Expedition of the Five Nations the Summer 1696, in which Leister, the King's Agent, and the Governor of Albany, were present. The phototext of which is in the N. Y. Pub. Library, made from the original printed copy (probably Bradford's, 1696) in the British Museum. The work states that Fletcher returned to New York on Oct. 15: also that this was his second visit to Albany that summer.

These are the earliest mentions of a slip at the termination of Burger Jorisse's path, but it can be seen by Pl. 17, Vol. I, that boats were accustomed to be moored here, and that it was always a known landing-place. It became known as Old Slip.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 390.

Rev. Henricus Selwyn writes to the classes of Amsterdam, stating, among other things, that: "There are two English churches here. One is already built [rebuilt] in the Fourth; and the other [Trinity] is in course of erection in the City. Both are constructed of stone and are neat edifices. All this has been done since the building of our new church here [in Garden St.]. ... Our city is extending, high houses are being erected, and the shores are being docked in. Indeed, since my last coming here [1682], the city, houses and inhabitants have increased fully two-thirds."—Ecles. Rep., II: 1172.

The magistrates of Albany desiring Fletcher's presence there during the coming winter, he sends the concurrence of the council and assembly, and a committee from each is appointed to consider the question "at Coll Cortlandts house" ("All correspondence between Rensselaer and Albany being done for some months")—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 96. He resolved to take up his winter quarters there; he left New York at the close of the session, Nov. 31 and on his return reported on March 25, 1697, at a joint meeting of the council and house: "My passage met with some difficulties by an early winter being very severe, drove a sloop by the ice and at last lock up by it yet I made the journey in twelve days though with some extraordinary expense being necessitated to travel part of the way by land with a detachment of my own Company."—Ibid., I: 101.

17 "The Petition of Capt Tennis De Key was Read [in common council] Desiring that A Cate way May be made leading out of the broad Street to the Street that Runns by the Pye Womens leading to the Commons of this City," stating also "that the Petitioner will undertake to doe the same Provided he may have the soyle." The petition is "To be Considered."—M. G. C., I: 435. It must have been favourably considered, for the cartway here described became the southern portion of Nassau St. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1000; and under May 25, 1689. Regarding this Mrs. Lamb states, in Mag. Am Hist., XXXII: 195—86:—

"A cartway was opended from the head of Broad in Wall street to this line of Nassau St. It is interesting to note that Broadway, then called 'the wagon way,' above the city gate, bore no such relative importance to other streets as at present; indeed, the Smith's valley road (afterwards Queen street, now Pearl) from Wall street north was built up much earlier and with a far better class of buildings,"

The inhabitants and poor of the city are without bread. None can be bought. The bakers complain that they have no corn, and cannot get any at a reasonable price. The common council orders that the alderman and assistant of each ward inquire what quantity of flour, wheat, and bread there is in each ward.—M. G. C., I: 426. On Oct. 23, they appointed a committee to confer with the recorder about the proper and most effectual measures for causing corn to be brought to the city.—Ibid., I: 427. See Nov. 17.

The churchwardens and vestrymen (comprising the city vestry) again call Mr. William Vesey (24 years old) from Boston "to officiate and have the care of souls in this City of New York" (the earlier call having been on Jan. 26, 1695 9. 6.). They lend him money and to be ordained by the Bishop of London. Although they find him "Pickus Sober," etc., they require him to give a bond to cover the loan of his travelling expenses. A graduate of Harvard, he was given the degree of master of arts by Oxford, on this visit to England, where he was ordained priest on Aug. 5, 1697.—Ecles. Rep., II: 1174—76, and authorities there cited. The original license to Mr. Vesey from the Right Rev. Henry Compton, D.D., Bishop of London, to be rector of the church (Trinity) at New York, dated Aug. 5, 1697 (g. v.), is preserved in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (in box of MSS. relating to churches in New York).

This society has also facsimiles of the license, made by Bierstadt on octavo sheets. The Rev. Mr. Vesey was not inducted into office as rector until Dec. 25, 1697 (g. v.). He held the living at New York for a number of years. Writing in 1745 (the last year of his recollection) to Dr. Philip Bearcroft, secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, Dr. Vesey stated that he had in 1697, when he began his ministry, the only churches in North America from Maryland to Nova Scotia, erected for worship according to the liturgy of the Church of England, were Trinity Church and the church built by the Bishop in Philadelphia (Christ Church), and one in Boston (King's Chapel). In 1745, most of the provinces or colonies had many Episcopal churches. —Extract from documents in the office of the Soc. for Propagating the Gospel, London, made by Rev. Francis L. Hawks, D.D., in 1842, filed with Hawks MSs, in Church Mission House, N. Y. City. For reproduction of Vesey's license, see Pl. 25, Vol. IV.

11 Nathaniel Marston (Barber), his wife Margaret, and Ann Lilley convey to Bernardus Hardenbrook, Johannes Hardenbrook, Samuel Beeckman, Albert Clock, Nicholas Blank, Abraham Mesler, Benjamin Man, and John Yeates, "All that ... parcel of land or tane-yard, situate, lying and being at the freshwater, bound southerly to the said water, westerly by the ground of the said Bernardus Hardenbrook and easterly and northerly by the ground of Woldpeter Webbert, containing easterly 55 feet, northerly 215 feet, westerly 130 feet and southerly 300 feet, English measure, and the Hertford house, cartway, cart- and funnel aperturments."—Liber Deeds, I: 402 (Albany).

The common council orders that the alderman and assistants shall look after the repair of wells, and the regulating and paving of streets, in their respective wards, calling to their assistance the city surveyors and other officers "as often as they shall See Occasion."—M. G. C., I: 427—28.

In a memorial to the British board of trade, Chellsey Brooke and William Nicolls recommend:

The committee appointed by the mayor on Oct. 17 (g. v.) to investigate the scarcity of bread finds only 700 bu. of corn on hand, or enough to feed the 6,000 inhabitants of this city for a week. They report that "the true and Only Cause did Proceed from July Liberty and Latitude that Every Planter had Lately taken of making his house or Farre A Market for his wheat or Converting the same into Flower by Bolting of it And that under Pretence of A Privilege they Conceived they had Obtained by Vertue of A Law made in Genl Assembly Enacted An Act Ag skulful Bylawes and uncrease of his Majestys Trade for Cattle also to the Exposing the Inhabitants Travellers & Sojourners within the same to Penury and want of bread." The common council decides to appeal to "his Most sacred Majestty," and a committee is appointed to draw up an address to the king regarding "what have been 75 Rights & Privilges of this city and what may be Needful," etc.—M. G. C., I: 430—31; II: 1. They reported on May 29, 1697 (g. v.). The Fletcher is praised for his "diligence in repairing to Albany upon advice of Monsr Frontenac's late expedition," resulting in the latter's speedy retreat. He is advised to follow the example of the French "of insinuating into the friendship and familiarity a civili Indian."—N. T. Col. Docs., IV: 255-58. Amy Carr's penalty, four years later, for the theft of "two handfuls of the value of two shillings" was that she received six lashes less.—Minutes General Sessions of the Peace, Feb. 2, 1697; Feb. 17, 1701. A penalty of this sort was not infrequently inflicted on negro criminals, men and women, but the unfortunates above mentioned were whites, apparently. At the court session of August 4, 1716, two negro women, Betty and Frank, "were tied to a Cart and whipped upon the Nake back each forty lashes save one," and it was stipulated precisely how many of these lashes should be applied at each of several street corners as the cart made the circuit of the city.—Ibid., Aug. 4, 1719. The board of trade reports to the king the objections raised by each of the English colonies against a union with either civil or military government, but it recommends the appointment of a governor or captain-general to serve for all or part of the colonies during the present war. Regarding New York's objection to a union with the province of Massachusetts Bay under one civil governor, it states that, "the towns of New York & Boston having always rivalled in trade, this Union would (in that respect) be very prejudicial to the former."—N. The lords of trade, having prepared drafts of commissions and instructions for the Earl of Bellomont, give him to his guidance a statement of the salaries paid to former governors as follows: In 1686, Andros, then governor of all New England but not New York, received £2,400 sterling for one year, payable by England until the revenue in New England should be settled. In 1687, the charter of New England having been surrendered to the crown, and the settled revenue there being continued by order from England, Andros was paid £5,100, and the position of the governor of all New England being united to that of New England and Andros governor of "both those Provinces," there was added to his salary £200 sterling out of the revenue allowed by New York for the support of their governors. Of the remaining £3,900 of the £5,100, Andros was to be paid to the lieutenant-governour. After 1688, on the accession of William III to the crown (the two governments of New York and New England being divided), the governors of New England had their former salary of £600 sterling per annum allotted them out.

The "Management of the Affairs of the Church of England in the City of New Yorke" petition Fletcher for a charter. They state, among other things, that they have "built a Church and Covered the same;" and they ask that the governor will grant the church to them "in trust for all those that now are or hereafter may be in the said Church of England as now established by law." They ask to be incorporated "by Name of the members in Communition of the Church of England Established by Law;" to enjoy the "yearly Maintenance" (evidently meaning the £100 provided in 1693 by the "Act for settling a Ministry"), and to possess such quantity of land as the council shall think fit, near or adjoining the land of the governor. The petition is granted, and it is ordered that: "a warrant issue for the drawing of their Charter of incorporation the quit-rent to be one pepper corn as desirous."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1178-79; Dow Hist. N. Y. (4th ed.), III: 245-49, citing "Council Minutes;" Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 257; Cal. Manuscript, 116.

The draft of the charter was approved by Trinity vestry on May 28 (q. e.), but was revised on May 31 (q. e.); it bore date of May 6. From the Catalogue of the New-York State Library: 1856. Maps, manuscripts . . . &c. Albany, 1857, 112, we learn that the State Library then had possession of a manuscript thus described: "Charter of Trinity Church, in the City of New-York, under the great seal of the Province: Benjamin Fletcher, Commander-in-Chief, May 6, 1696." This catalogue describes the "ancient MS." as "worn or eaten away at the corners." This was probably the copy in Mr. Jamieson, clerk, the governor's council.

June 23, 1697. It was burned in the fire which destroyed the State Library, March 29, 1911. The remains of this MS. which was on vellum—a shapeless mass of water-soaked pulp—were removed from the debris during the fire by the author. The original charter (Pl. 24A, Vol. IV) is still preserved in the archives of Trinity Corporation. This has been damaged by mice, and the seal is lacking. See also Addenda.

A printed copy of this charter, published by Hugh Gaine in 1788 (now in the N. Y. PUb. Library), contains, among other provisions, the following statements: At the time the "Ministry Act of 1693" was passed "there was not erected any public Church or Building within our said City, whereunto such a good sufficient Protestant Minister might have been inducted for his orderly officiating of his Duty in the public Worship and Service of God," Fletcher is given credit for his "bountiful Donations" and "pious Endeavours." Others, likewise, have "religiously contributed according to their respective Abilities, several Sums of Money," which have been "used for the erecting and building a Church and laying the Foundation of a steeple."

The charter refers to the petition of the church managers for a grant of the "Church and Steeple that hath been lately built . . . together with a certain Piece or Parcel of Ground therunto adjoining, situate, lying, and being in or near to a Street without the North Gate of our said City, commonly called and known by the Name of the Broadway; containing in Breadth on the East End, as the said Street of the Broadway rangeth Northward; three Hundred and ten Feet, until you come unto the Land lately in the Tenure and Occupation of Thomas Lloyd, deceased; and from thence towards the West, in Length by the said Land, until you come into May Hudson's River, and then southward along Hudson's river, three Hundred and Ninety-five Feet, all of English Measure; and from thence by the Line of our Garden Eastward, unto the Place of the said Street in the Broadway where first begun."

In view of the expense incurred by Fletcher and others in building the church, and also in "Erecting and providing a House near the said Church, for the Habitation of a Minister," the charter asserts, as the "Royal Will and Pleasure," that the church "and the Ground therunto adjoining, inclosed and used for a Cementy or Church Yard, shall be the Parish Church, and Church Yard of the Parish of Trinity Church."

The Right Rev. Revd. Compton, D.D., Lord Bishop of London, is constituted "the first Rector thereof." See May 31. He, his successors, the rectors of the parish, and the communicants of the church are incorporated as "The Rector and Inhabitants of our said City of New-York, in Communion of our Protestant Church of England as now established by our Laws."

Many rights and privileges are stated in detail in the charter. The right to a seal is accorded. The first wardens and vestrymen are named, and their duties defined. They are required, among other things, within the next 300 [sic] days to obtain an estimate of the cost of building the said Church and Steeple, and providing a Clock and one or more Bells for the same, and other Works necessary and requisite in and about the said Church and Steeple; and of building a convenient House for the said Rector." All the "Debts, Credits, and Contracts, made to be and to be employed, with or by the Artificers who shall be employed for any Work or Building" are "to be entered and registered in one or more Books or Books to be kept for that Purpose."

The charter further declares "that the said Church and Cemetry, or Church Yard, . . shall be the sole and only Parish Church and Church Yard of our said City of New-York." The charter contains many other provisions, too numerous to mention. For a more extended digest of its contents, see Eccles. Rec., II: 1176-75, where its provisions are compared, in parallel columns, with those of the charter of the Dutch Church, granted by Fletcher in 1696. An official, contemporary, MS. copy of this charter is preserved in the Bodleian Library, Oxford. On account of imperfections in the original charter, Trinity Church was reincorporated June 27, 1704 (q. v.).

An impression of the original (1697) seal of the corporation of Trinity Church can be seen in the John Paulding collection, presented to the N. Y. Hist. Soc. in 1844. This seal is still in use.

By an order in council at Whitehall, the lords justices (privy council) confirm the "Act against unlawfull By-Laws & unreason- able forfeitures" (the Bolting Act of March 24, 1694, 9th e.)—Laws and Acts, Bradford ed. (Grollier Club reprint, 1894), xcviii. At the same time a petition to the king to repeal the act is in prepara- tion at New York.—See May 31.

1697 The committee of the common council, appointed on Nov. 17 last (q.v.), to prepare an address to the king regarding the need of repealing the "Bolting Act of 1694," submits to the board a draft of the address. The committee feels the ancient privilege of the freedom of the press, the prosperous condition of the city would have continued had not the assembly passed the "Bolting Act." The committee explains that this act has given "Such a Scope and Latitude to all that has A Minde to Use that trade that Every Planters butt throughout the Province is now become A Market for what for whateer Flower and Bisketti" that "this Your Majesties City hath been for Many Years the Only Granary of all Your Majesties Plantations in America, ... but Now the Cry in the Streets is the want of bread." They petition the king to "Repeale Abrogate Vacate and Abolish the that of the Protestant Church of England the City of Tothill 6 dismissed and them own power design. Tothill 6 to restore the liberty of the Side Bolting of Flower And Baking of Bisketti for Transportation as formerly Accustomed."—M. C. C., II: 6-8.

In the preparation of this appeal to the king, the committee made extended extracts from the records of the secretary's office relating to the privileges granted to the city of New York (ibid.); and in 1698, when the appeal was renewed, these extracts were entered in full in the minutes of the board.—Ibid., II: 36-54. While the present appeal to the king was being prepared, he confirmed the Bolting Act.—See May 11, 1697. It was probably on this account that the intercession of Bellomont in behalf of another appeal was sought and obtained the next year, for which see June 28-29, 1698.

Fletcher issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, stating that, "Whereas there is of late great Scarcity of Bread in the City of New-York," he prohibits the "Exportation of any Wheat in Grain throughout the whole Province, without limitation of time, and the Expiration of Cornwall and Bread for Mead and Bread until the first day of November next ensuing."—From Miss Hasse's "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1905), 58; Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 257.

In a report to the lords of trade, Fletcher explains that he has issued an order to make Capt Capt. Kid lately arrived here," continues (see Aug. 28, 1696), and has "produced a Commission under the great seal of England, for suppressing of Piracy." When he was here," many flock to him from all parts men of desperate fortunes and necessitous in expectation of getting vast treasure.

"He sailed from hence" with 150 men, Fletcher says he is informed, many of them being of this province. "It is generally believed here, they will have money p'z fas aut nesaf [by right or wrong mean], that if he misse of the design intended for which he has commission, 'twill not be in Kidd's power to govern such a bold of men under no pay."—See Addenda.

Fletcher states also that he "cannot in these summer months leave this Garrison being the frontier to the sea." (He spent the previous winter in Albany—see Oct. 16, 1696.) He explains, further, that he has entertained the chief sachems of the Indian allies at his own table in New York; "some of the principal leading men of the Five Nations, of the Seneca and the River to pay me visits, &c. treated with all manner of kindness and Courtesy, I ordered them on board the greatest ships we have and the guns to be fired, the King's birth day happening in that time; ... I caused some of them to be loaded with ball, to show how far they could carry upon the River, I caused Granada shells to be fired before them and let them know by my order sixe to be put into my coach and my coachman to drive them round the City and into the Country to take the air, by which they were extremely obliged, and dismissed them with considerable presents, at which they did express great satisfaction."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 275-76.

A penalty of six shillings is decreed by the common council in case any of its members, without "Reasonable Excuse," is not in his place "after due summons halfe an hour after Ringing of ye Bell."—M. C. C., II: 11. Such action, on the part of an unalarmed, board, deserves notice. See March 1, 1697; Feb. 19, 1748.

The common council appoints a committee to inquire what "Sum will be wanting to finish ye bridge & Slip & other public works & also what ye City is Indebted."—M. C. C., II: 9. See Dec. 10, 1696. It is ordered that £30 be raised for the bridge and £60 for the slip.—Ibid., II: 11. On June 11, it was ordered that the bridge be made "Commended for Landing & Shipping of goods;" and the slip "at the end of the broad Street" he finished and made "convenient."—Ibid., II: 12. Bellomont's commission expired at Westminster. It provides, among other things, that, when it is published (see April 2, 1698), that of Fletcher shall become void. His government embraced New York, New Jersey, and all of New England except Connecticut and Rhode Island.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 166-73. A copy of the original lease, to the church-wardens and vestry is filed with the Rawlinson MSS. (cited A, 272, fo. 9) in the Bodleian Library, Oxford. This copy is signed by 'T. On Oct. 3, the mayor had informed the common council that on Oct. 5 'the Supreme Court of ye Provi- nce' would sit, and that, as 'Several Criminals' were to be tried, a large number of people were expected to be present, 'Insomuch that it is fear'd the City Hall will not be of Sufficient Strength to Contain them.' Two carpenters and a bricklayer were appointed to examine the building. The bricklayer reported that the walls 'are Sufficient to Sustain the Weight that may be therein,' and one of the carpenters reported that 'that with six Studens and a Planke the Same may be Secured from Any danger of falling.' "The present City Hall seeming to be Defective [see Oct. 20, 1695; May 12, 1696; Oct. 5, 1697] whereby his Majesties subjects might be Endangered Should the Courts of Judicature be longer held there it is therefore Resolved ye Courts of this City & Common Council doe sit att the house of George Resscarrick Adjouning to ye 9th City Hall until the 11th day of October Next." Resscarrick is allowed £12 for the period beginning Oct. 1 Inst.—M. C. C., II: 18. As early as June, 1698, however, another instance of the temporary city hall, that of Joseph Davis, as appears by a quarter-year's rent paid to him for the period ending Aug. 1, 1698.—See under Oct. 13, 1698. In a report to the common council by the corporation counsel and street commissioner on Nov. 14, 1688, reviewing the history of the first and second city halls, it was noted that "the house of George Resscarrick, adjoining the City Hall," was still standing, being "probably that owned by the late Widow Lawrence deceased."—M. C. C. (1784—1811), V: 327.

Mr David Jamisco pursuant to the order of this board brought a Copy of the Inscription to be plac'd under his Excellencies Arms in Trinity Church &c &c was agreed to and these words following viz. . . . The common council appoints a committee "to Lay out in Convenient Lots the Ground on ye 9th West Side of the Custom house Bridge," and have a plan of it drawn.—M. C. C., II: 19. The plan was submitted to the board on Nov. 20, showing the ground "laid out in fourteen lots of 25 foot wide." This was approved.—Ibid., II: 20. See also Landmarks Map Ref. Key, III: 986, and Chronology, 1700.

About two months after the close of King William's war, the governor recommended the substitution of a civil watch for the existing military one. The common council thereupon arranges that the mayor shall engage "four sober housekeepers to have a Watch in this City Every Night until the 25th day of March Next & that they hourly goe through the Several Wards of this City during the Said time in Order to Prevent Irregularities fire &c."—M. The petition of the church-wardens and vestrymen of Trinity Church, of Sept. 6 (p. v.), is considered by Fletcher and his council at the fort. It is cited in the "Clerk Book" that "On the captives [i.e., Salley, Morocco], having escaped it come home, the others are dead ooeby one, named Bartholomew [i.e., Rouston [Rushon]] is removed up into the Country by who the report of him who is escaped from Salley cannot be redeemed; His Majesties Chappell [i.e., library] is almost finished and Trinity Church being a Publick structure erecting for the service of God by the Voluntary Contribution of some people, Which is a publick and pious use and much is wanted to finish it." It is agreed ‘that the money raised by virtue of the Lysene bearing date the 8th day of June 1695 [p. v.] for the redemption of the said Captives in Salley [shall] be applyed to the use of Trinity Church to finish the building thereof. Provided always that if it be possible to purchase the redemption of the said Bartholomew [Rushon] that ... Trinity Church [will] be accountable for the redemption.' It is ordered that the trustees of the redemption fund deliver the papers, etc. relating to it to Thomas Venham and Robert Loring, the church-wardens. See also Nov. 17, 1695, also, that the Amsterdam agents had remitted from Holland, which represented the sum sent thither, for the redemption of the slaves out of Sally, and which when sold, amounted to £468.5s. In Eccles. Rev., III: 1065, cited Bellarmin's Hist. of Trin. Church. The vestry received word from London on Feb. 27, 1706, also, that the Amsterdam agents had remitted from Holland £100:12:2. (originally intended to redeem the captives), and of this sum £170:2:3 had been laid out in 38 'half pieces of Straw waters' and shipped to the church-wardens. See also May 3, 1706. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 913.

The Rev. William Vesey, the first rector of Trinity Church, is indicated to have been in office by Gov. Fletcher in the new Dutch Church in Garden St., as Trinity is not yet ready for use. The Episcopal congregation was given the use of the Dutch Church for about three months. In 1779, Trinity Church returned the courtesy by granting to the congregation of the Middle Dutch Church (at Nassau and Liberty Sts.), the use of St. George's Church (on Beckman St.), when the Dutch Church was being used as a hospital for British troops.—Eccles. Rev., II: 1218-19, and authorities there cited.—See Jan. 26, 1695.

It is ordered by the common council that ‘the Mayor Direct A Warrant to the Treasurer to Purchase four Barrels of Powder for ye salting of the Earle of Bellomont on his Arrival.’—M. C. G., II: 25. The council orders a warrant to issue to Cunliff and White for painting and glass to the chapel (in the fort).—Cal. Coun. Min., 128, 1698.

The Town of New-York is well seated for Trade, security and pleasure, in a small isle called Manhattan at the mouth of the great River Mohanco, commodious for Shipping, and 2 leagues broad; the Town large of Dutch Brick, with above 500 fair Houses, the meanest not valued under 120 pounds, to the Land it is incomparably with a Wall of good thickness, and fortified at the entrance of the River, to command any Ship which passes by James Fort: it hath a Mayor, Aldermen, a Sheriff and Justices of the Peace; the Inhabitants most English and Dutch who Trade with the Indians for Beever, Otter, Raccoon skins, with some other Furs; likewise for Bear, Deer and Elk skins and are supplied with Venison and Eowl [Fowl] in the Winter, & Fish in the Summer by the Indians. . . . the Manhattan Island so called by the Indians, lyeth within Land, betwixt 44 and 42 degrees North, about 14 Miles long and broad. New-York is seated on the West-end and a small Arm of the Sea divides it from Long Island on the South . . . Following this is a description of the life and habits of the Indians—From The English Empire in America, by 'R. B.' (Robert Burton) (London, 1695), 76-81.

The colony of New York this year has one church with one minister in the fort, one church and one minister in the city (both organisations being of the Church of England), two Dutch churches with two ministers, and one French church with one minister. The colony also has one library.—From Apostolick Charity, a discourse by Rev. Thomas Bray, D.D., delivered at St. Paul's, London, Dec. 19, 1697, and published in 1698 with a list of the churches, ministers, and libraries in America. There was already a small library in Remsen's College (Albany) as early as 1642.—O'Callaghan, Hist. N. Neth., I: 456.

The library here mentioned was the first in New York. The manuscript catalogue of it is still in the possession of 'Dr. Bray's Associates,' of London, who were the trustees organized by Dr. Bray in 1721. This catalogue includes 1,277 titles, numbering 220 volumes, under the heading: 'A Register of ye Books Sent Towards Laying ye Foundation of a Provincial Library in New York.'—Keep, Hist. of the N. Y. Soc. Library, 12-13. A set of rules for the use of these books, written in 1697, is still in the collection of manuscripts left by Dr. Bray to Sion College, London. This list shows that the books were indexed for ye use of ye Ministry of England Minister belonging to ye Flot, & City of New York, & for ye Chaplains of his Majesties Ships during their Residence in ye Port. It also states that it was 'desir'd ye Books may be fixt in some publick Room in ye Flot, or in ye Vesty of ye Church at New York.'—Ibid., 16. It appears by the vestry minutes of Trinity Church, under date of June 8, 1698, that Gov. Bellocq delivered the books to the Rev. Mr. Vesey, and that they were "sent over by ye right Reverend Henry [Compton], Lord Bishop of London for ye Use of Trinity Church." The vestry ordered that the books "remain in the custody of Mr. Vesey until further order and that ye Clerk do register the Catalogue of the books in the vestry book."—Ibid., 17. Probably it is this library which Oldmixon (in The British Empire in America, [1808], I: 128) states was "erected" in 1700. See Addenda.

Dr. Keep (cited above, 118-16) presents a summary of the early efforts to establish a public library in New York. The Trinity Parish Library (1689), which was increased later, was almost entirely destroyed in the fire of 1776. The books that survived are now in the library of the General Theological Seminary, except the Clarendon history, which is in the Society Library.

The second library was the Sharpe Collection, given in 1715-4 by Chaplain John Sharpe (see March 31, 1725) for a "Publick Library." This donation was made to the King, and was intended to be united with the Corporation Library in 1730. Most of its 238 volumes survived the Revolution and are now in the Society Library.

The third library was the Corporation Library (1730). This was the City's first real public circulating library. It was originally the private collection of the Rev. John Vesey, an English clergyman, who bequeathed it to the Society for Propagating the 1668 Gospel, which gave it (1662 volumes) to New York. These books were also scattered by the British in 1776.

1671 New York's Free Library, which was founded in 1754, and was incorporated in 1772 as a public subscription circulating library. "Practically exterminated by the atrocious vandalism of the British troops," Dr. Keck states, "scarce a volume of its pre-Revolutionary collection is known to have survived," save the 185 books, which, as part of the Corporation Library, were formerly in its care.

The fifth library was that of King's College, the bequest in 1757 of the private library of Joseph Murray, Esq. It was removed in 1776 to the city hall, and there destroyed.

The second public library mentioned by Keck as having been founded before the Revolution was that of the Union Library Society of New York, organized in 1771, and given space in the city hall in 1774. It did not survive the Revolution.—See Index of Keck's book for further details; see also June 27, 1795; Feb. 22, 1796.

A census of the province, "taken by the High Sheriffs and Justices of the Peace in each respective County," by order of the governor, shows that the city and county of New York have a population of 1,019 men, 1,077 women, 2,416 children, 700 negroes (total, 4,957). The population of the province is 18,067.—N. Y. Cen. 1790.

About this year, the first Friends' Meeting House or Quaker place of worship (see 1669) was erected in New York, at what is now Liberty Pl., near Liberty St.—Liber Deeds, XXIII: 34 (New York). The congregation rebuilt and removed from this site to Liberty Pl. in 1755 (Liber Deeds, XXXI: 5, New York; Liber Deeds, XXII: 171, Albany; cf. Pl. 34, Vol. I, on which the new site is shown). They continued here until 1802. See 1775, 1790, 1802. See Pls. 26, 27, 27-A, 30, and 31, Vol. I.

The ship "Fortune," commanded by Thomas Montross, returns to New York in the Summer of 1669, laden with booty which had been transferred to her at Madagascar from the pirate ship of one John Hoare. "By hasty and secret efforts, in the night, the cargo of the Fortune was gotten on shore, and stowed in the house of one Van Swieten, a merchant who was interested in the enterprise. Finding which, Bellomont commanded the civil officers to make seizure of the goods; the officers having the instructions made a formal seizure, and were about to take them from the premises for legal forfeiture, when nearly the whole body of merchant proconsled, and proceeding to violence, they locked up the officers in the house where, after being confined for three hours, they were only released by the application of the Lieutenant Governor, with three files of men, who broke open the doors and set the officers at liberty. The ship Fortune was forfeited."—From "The Red Sea Men," in Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 464. For the official reports from New York regarding this episode, and the character of the vessel "Fortune," see N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 391, 394, 395, 354, 356, 377, 385, 597, 446, 450, 531.

Frederick Phillips, about this time, expected a ship from Madagascar carrying contraband goods, and to avoid forfeiture sent his son Adolphus in a vessel, ostensibly bound for Virginia. This vessel met the expected ship, took from her great quantities of East India goods, and sailed to the Delaware, leaving the Madagascar ship to enter the port of New York with only negroes on board. The East India goods were afterwards sent to Hamburg, where, however, the vessel was seized and the crew brought to trial.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 464–65.

The defensive position taken by the merchants of New York against the charges in which they were implicated—of supporting piracy—is explained by various concrete examples in ibid., 465–69. Formidable opposition developed against Bellomont's administration throughout the mercantile classes. It was asserted that his rigorous policy had prevented $100,000 from being brought into the city since his arrival.—Ibid., 469. See Chronology, passim.

Jan. 31 His Excellency Benjamin Fletcher Capt General & Governor of Chief of this Province being the founder & Chief promoter of Trinity Church & being desirous at his charge to Erect a private Pew for the use of his family &c. This Board having a due Sense of his Excellency's views have ordered that Mr James Everts do lay out the ground for the same in the East part of the Church, to remain for ever to the aforesaid use, or the use of others as his Excellency shall think to direct."—Trin. Ordered, that Trinity Church be cleared to mow (Tuesday), Divine Service being to be read therein the next Sunday" (Feb. 6).—Ibid.

Ordered, that Mr Thomas Wenham & Mr Robert Lurting Church Wardens & Mayor William Merret, Capt William Morris & Capt Thomas Clark be a Comitee for the procuring of glass & other materials for the finishing of the Windows of Trinity Church & also for the making of the Doors thereof & that they perform the same with all Convention Expedient."—Ibid.

Although divine service was to be read in Trinity Church on this Sunday (see Jan. 31), such service was either not held on this day, or, if held, was not treated as the first formal opening of the church.—See March 13. Berrian failed to observe that Old Style was used in the dates of record, when he stated: "The new Rector first performed divine service in Trinity Church on the 6th of February, 1697."—See An Hist. Sketch of Trin. Church (1874), 23.

Ordered, that Mr James Everts & Mr Jeremiah Tuthill do take care to Level the ground in the Church & to provide such materials as will be necessary for the setting up of the Pulpit."—Trin. Min. (MS).

The governor's council orders that a gallery for the government and council be built in Trinity Church at the expense of the provincial government.—Col. Cen. Min., 159. See March 26.

Fletcher issues two proclamations, printed by Bradford, one giving notice of the cessation of hostilities between the British and French, and the other appointing March 10 a day of thanksgiving for New York, Orange, Kings, Queens, Westchester, and Richmond Counties, and March 24, for Albany, Ulster, Dutchess, and Suffolk Counties.—From Miss Hesse's "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1901), 59.

The conflict of factions is opened anew by the appearance of an anonymous tract, dated Dec. 31, 1697, entitled A Letter From A Gentleman of the City of New York To Another. Concerning the Troubles which happened in that Province in the time of the late Happy Revolution. This tract, having been "found at the printer," is laid before the governor's council on March 4, 1698. They are "unanimously of opinion that it contains nothing but truth, and that it ought to be printed and published with the other papers mentioned therein."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 315, foottnote, citing Gen. Min., Albany. It was printed and published under a special order of the Lieutenant Governor, which, in confirmation of this order, he produced in Dec. Hist. N. Y. (1890 ed.), II: 425–55 (and ibid., 40 ed., II: 247–49). This Letter, which is one of the most radical of the anti-leseriania statements, gives a detailed summary of events into which the province was plunged by the Leisler rebellion, as viewed by one of its opponents. The text was carried, in addition to (a) The King's Letter to Nicholson, of July 30, 1698 (see under July 29, 1689); (b) The Resolves of the House of Representatives, of April 17, 1691; (c) An Address to his Excellency Colonel Slaughter, of April 17, 1691; and (d) the Queen's Order of March 17 (March 11 in N. Y. Col. Docs., 1692 (see Oct. 15, 1691), that the estates of Leisler and Milbourne be restored to their families "as objects of her Majesties mercy,"—for which see Chronology under these dates.

Another tract, answering this, was soon published in Boston, entitled Loyalty Vindicated; being an Answer to a Late Fable, Sedi- tious and Scandalous Pamphlet entitled, "A Letter from a Gent., Etc." Published for the sake of Truth and Justice, by a Hearty Lover of King William and the Protestant Religion. This tract was reprinted in 1868 in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 565–94. Regarding the consequences of this conflict of factions, see May 25 and June 14, 1698.

"Ordered, That Capt. Tho. Clarke, Mr. Wm. Huddleston & Mr. John Crooke do take care that the Church be Cleared & put into the best posture they can in order that Divine Service & the Communion be there Administered the next Sabbath day" (March 13).—Trin. Min. (MS).

The ceremonies of the "first opening" of Trinity Church are held. A "Letter of Induction," written by Fletcher, dated March 25, certifies that, after the reading of the morning and evening service, the Rev. William Vesey declared "his unfeigned assent and

He is received "magnificently,"—Diary of Samuel Sewall, op. cit., I: 476. On the same day, his commission and that of Lieutenant John Nanfan are published at the city hall, "after ye ringing of three Bells;" the seals are delivered to Bellomont, and the oaths administered to him and Nanfan; the council is sworn in; and the governor publishes a proclamation to continue all officers in their places until further order.—M. Bellomont issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, prohibiting cursing, swearing, immorderate drinking, Sabbath breaking, and all sorts of lewdness and profane behaviour to word or action.—From the original broadside in N. Y. Pub. Library. See reproduction on p. 175—Cal. IV.

An address, reciting the allegiance of "the Mayor Recorder Aldermen and Assistants" to the crown and the new governor, is read and approved by the common council, which orders that it be engrossed and recorded.—M. C. C., II: 26—Cal. IV.

Bellomont issues a proclamation printed by Bradford, commanding that sheriffs, etc., "take effectual Care that there be a Free and Fair Election of Members for the ensuing Assembly."—From Miss Hasse's "Bibliography," N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1907), 59.

The common council resolves "that Dinner be prepared at the city's expense for the entertainment of the Earl of Bellomont, and a committee is appointed "to make A Bill of Fare," calling to their assistance "Such Cooks as they Shall think Necessary to Advise them."—M. C. C., II: 287. On July 7, a warrant was issued to pay £1,176 6. to Joseph Davis, "for several Charges made and expenses of the Mayor Aldermen and Common Council on several Publick Occasions & particularly on my Lord Bellomonts Arrival."—Ibid., II: 35—Cal. IV.

A committee of Trinity vestry, waiting upon Gov. Bellomont "with a draft of the Church in order for his Lordp's to assign a place for ye building of a Pew, for himself & Family," is informed that he desires "a place on ye South side of ye Church fronting the pulpit for ye setting of his pew &b is assign'd to him accordingly."—Trin. Min. (MS). See also April 26.

Fletcher, having been recalled, makes a gift of his pew at the east end of Trinity Church to Col. Nicholas Bayard, Col. Caleb Heathcote, and such other members of the council "as are not otherwise seated and Provided with pews in the Said Church & such pewsmen as he shall think fit to give & convey to the said City," etc.—Dec. Hist. N. Y., (40 ed.), III: 249. Will Sharps, one of the witnesses to the deed of gift, made attestation on Oct. 25, 1711, that he saw Fletcher seal and deliver the deed as his voluntary act.

Bellomont, in his first report to the lords of trade, says: "I hope methods will be found for thequieting and uniting the minds of the people, who have been divided with great heats for these several May years, occasioned at first by the execution of those men who were most forward in the happy Revolution." He complains that the council has not yet informed him of the state of the province or offered to assist him in the government, although they knew he comes as a stranger. He says that "constant visits of the Council Fletcher's lodgings (from which I have as great reason to believe) false reports and rumors are spread about the City and province, whereby mens minds are disturbed, and an odium cast upon the Govern'r, and thus these Gentlemen of the Council by their drawing back endeavour to make this Govern'r unuseful to me." He mentions the political corruption of the late government; the corruption of the officers of the revenue, which has been great for years, although trade has increased and the city has been enlarged and enriched; the decrease in the revenue arising from the customs to one-half of what it was ten years ago; and the unwillingness of the collector, Chilley Brooke, to seize an "unsexr" ship, laden with rich East India goods (partly obtained as a pirate ship).

Bellomont promises to do his best to obtain observance of the "Acts of Trade," but as most of the council are illicit traders he expects little help from them. He has no power to suspend several of them and try to find fitter persons for their places. "This city hath likewise been a nest of Pirates," he states, "and I already find that several of their ships have been (and now are) out, have their owners and were fitted from this Port, and have Commissions to act as privates, from the Acts of Trade here." He explains that "the cry of the people, is so great that Coli: Fletcher hath imbezled and converted to his own use, great sums of their publick moneys," etc. He describes the methods of the pirates. No naval officer was appointed by Fletcher to be a check on the collector, but both officers were filled by Brooke himself. No care was taken for any register for ships in New York, but Bellomont states that he has appointed a "distinct Naval Officer and a Register according to the authority and intent of the act of Parliament." His reasons for this are given, and the method of remedying the situation. He has given orders for the numbering of the inhabitants of the province and of the Five Nations of Indians.

He also has given orders to Col. Romar, the king's chief engineer, to survey all the fortifications of the province. He found the soldiers "in a miserable condition, not half the number [called for] by the establishment, and almost starved, and many complaints of hardships done them." He sends to the lords of trade "a printed collection of all the Laws of New York together with printed proc[ed]s for suppressing of vice and to prevent corruptions in the Elections and returns of Representatives for the ensuing Assembly, a practice much complained of."—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 304—Cal. IV.

An extraordinary meeting of the governor's council is held; an act of secrecy is administered to the lieutenant-governor, also to Edward Randolph and Thomas Weaver who are not members of the council, and an investigation is made into Gov. Fletcher's and William Nicoll's connection with pirates. Nicoll is suspended from the council, and Capt. Evans is put under bail.—Col. Coun. Min., 170—31. See also June 7 and 22, 1698. Bellomont's own account of this meeting may be thus summarised: Having summoned the council, he communicates to them his instructions regarding pirates and the evidence in relation to Fletcher and Nicoll. The council, expressing "abhorrence of these practices," agrees with Bellomont "that the whole evidence should have the seal of the province affixed, and be transmitted home to His Majesty, with Colli: Fletcher a prisoner." The council thinks Nicolls "ought to answer for this offence here where he committed it," because his estate and his ties by marriage are here; but Bellomont thinks he should be sent with Fletcher to answer the king. In answering Bellomont is prevailed upon to accept security for Nicoll's appearance, and dismisses him from the council until the king's pleasure is known.

The council joins with Bellomont in issuing a proclamation against pirates. Fletcher, in a letter to the council, Bellomont informs the lords of trade that he has "presumed not to deal hardly with one who had been honoured with His Maj's Commission," and simply sends them the proofs against him which they may offer to the king.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 300.

In a second letter of this date to the lords of trade, Bellomont explains in detail the encouragement and protection given by Fletcher to pirates. His disclosures involve Col. Bayard, Emott, pointed Thomas Palmer naval officer and register of the province. May He further reports that he "has refused to permit Proclamations to be printed in this City by the Gov't of the Jerseys publishing that Amboyl and Burlington are free ports."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 317-18.

Bellomont writes to the lords of trade regarding the "great pains Coll: Fletcher took to divide the people here and to foment the feud between Leisler's party and the opposite party." He states that Fletcher "went so far in it as to publish a book (and took the advice of Council in doing it) to revive the old dispute..."— N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 315, citing Council Minutes. See also March 4.

Bellomont writes to the commissioners of the customs, as he has done to the lords of trade and the lords of the treasury, regarding the decrease of custom revenues. He has already put a check upon illicit trade and on purchased protection; but, he says, "the observance of the laws of trade was so great a Noveltv that it gave as great discontent as if it had been an infringement of their char-

Bellomont, learning that East India goods, not legally imported, were at one Mr. Van Swieten's house, sends the collector and searcher of the customs to seize them. They do so, but the mertants cause the officers to be locked up there, and Bellomont, hear-ting this and believing them in danger of being murdered, sends the lieutenant-governor and three files of men with his own servants, who break open Van Swieten's house, release the officers and assist them to take the goods to the custom-house. The next day, when Bellomont proposed making another seizure, Mr. Monsey, one of the two commissioners whom Bellomont had appointed in Brooke's place, and who had been chief searcher for six years, resigned without giving his reason. Bellomont thus missed making a seizure of £1,000 worth of goods for lack of a proper officer.—N. Y. Col.

William Pittsone is suspended from the council; Chidley Brooke, likewise, from the officers of receiver-general, collector of customs, and judge, and from the council. Edward Randolph, the surveyor-general, signs the governor's order suspending Brooke as judge.—Col. Coun. Min., I: 11. See also June 22.

Assembly to have the privileges & powers of the Charter of Trinity Church Confirmed and Established by Act of Assembly.—
Trin. Min. (M.S.).

The council approves Bellomont's proposal that the buildings in the fort made by Fletcher be finished; also that the gate-house be rebuilt and "made high enough." Also, the Excise coach may pass undefcnd. — Col. Coun. Min. (M.S.), VIII: 49 (Albany).

The common council appoints a committee to see that "the Publick House of Office on ye Dock" be cleaned and repaired, and someone appointed to keep it clean.—M. C. G., II: 30. On Oct. 17, the city treasurer was directed to have this house rebuilt so that it could be kept "Neat and Clean."—Ibid., II: 67.

The common council appoints a committee "to take A View of the City house at the Ferry" and employ workmen to repair it.

A bill passes the provincial legislature for the reformation of the factions in the province. This became necessary because an act of parliament, passed on May 11, 1697, for the same purpose, had failed to produce the desired effect. The new bill provides that no supposed wrongful act done from April 18, 1689, to Aug.
30, 1692 (the period of the Leisler regime), "shall at any time hereafter be brought in question but that ye same be forgiven, remitted, indulged, Released and put in utter oblivion." All judgments in suits at law, already obtained in court on such account, are discharged and annulled by this bill, except debits due under voluntary contract. The bill further declares that no one "shall be paid unto any person for the murder of Leisler or the murdering or Killing of Leisler or any other opprobrious words or terms by which the peace of ye government may in any measure be disturbed." The punishment imposed for violation of this law is to be a fine, or, in the absence of payment Bellomont had expected the assembly would raise money to correct various evils in the province, such as the excessive treasury, the lack of food and clothing for the soldiers, and the need of repairs to the fortifications, governor’s house, etc. Fletcher sold this indemnity in his address to them on this date: “You have now sat a whole month... and have done nothing, either for the service of his Majesty or the good of your country... Your proceedings have been so unwarantable, whyd tending to subdue and division, and indeed disobloy to his Majesty and his laws, and destructive to the rights and liberties of the people, that I do think fit to dissolve this present assembly, and it is dissolved accordingly.”

—Assemb. Jour., I: 91. As he told the council, “the heats and animosities in the Assembly were so great they did altogether obstruct the Kings service.”—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 115. See also March 4 and May 25, 1698; and Winner, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., V: 196.

Bellomont informs the lords of trade that Fletcher “managed the Council here by gratifications of grants of lands, connivance at their unlawful trade,” etc. He says that since removing Nicolls (Charles Montgomerie of Preston), “the matter of prizes” is much taken up by the council (see May 8) he has evidence of his making a bargain for passing an act of assembly to the prejudice of the city of New York, that the act passed with Fletcher’s consent, and part of the agreed price was paid to Nicolls, etc. William Pintoorne has been suspended from the council (see June 7) and from all public offices in the province (see May 8). Bellomont accuses Pintoorne’s previous character and misconduct. Bellomont has also suspended Chilidee Brooke (see June 7) “from the Council and from his Offices of Collector of the Customs and Receiver Genl. of New Yorks,” after consulting with Mr. Randolph, the surveyor-general of customs here.

He states that Fletcher’s chief instruments have been Papists and Jacobites; also that those whom Fletcher appointed sheriffs of the counties have been “the scum of the people; Taylors, and other scandalous persons,” who, notwithstanding Bellomont’s proclamation strictly commanding all fairness at elections, made false returns at the last election for assembly, and great confusion resulted on the seating of members. Bellomont has dissolved the assembly “who have sat near a month and have done nothing but villonious tricks, to justify the falseness and unfairness of the Sheriffs returns.” He intends to appoint better men sheriffs, and call another assembly. He mentions the miserable condition the king’s forces are in; that Fletcher used them “so barbarously that they deserted,” cheated them out of their pay, and sent home false muster rolls. Bellomont, by advice of the council, nominates Thomas Weaver, and sends a letter to the provincial government, that, according to the direction of the lords of trade, the state of the province may from time to time be represented to them. —N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 320–26.

Henry Beecckman is examined by the governor and council regarding his connection with the “Act against Unlawful By-laws” (the Bolting Act of 1693), for the signing of which Fletcher is reported to have received £400.—Col. Coun. Min., 1: 731 and see July 1.

Bellomont sends Mr. Weaver to England as agent of the province, carrying “evidences and vouchers” regarding all of Bellomont’s transactions since he came. He says in his letter of introduction of Weaver to See, People that the “Merchants in this town” have “raised such Clamour” about his inspection into the methods and condition of trade, that he will be impatient to receive the support of the ministers. In a postscript to this letter, dated July 7, he desires the secretary to urge two things upon the lords of trade. One is that he may “have a power to vacate all Fletcher’s grants, which are so extravagant that the province can never be peopled.” Some of these grants he describes. “He has granted away and sold all the conveniences of a Gov’t here (viz. a) Farm call’d the King’s Farme, he has given to the Church here,” etc. Part of this farm, “which is in meadow ground and a scarce thing here,” Fletcher sold to Capt. Evans, commander of the frigate “Richmond.” Part of the king’s garden, too, he has “granted and sold to one Heachtowe a Merch.” Consequently Bellomont is deprived of “a place where to keep a horse or a cow for the use of my Family.” He adds: “I shall think Fletcher has the best luck with his insolence and corrupt tion that ever any Gov’t had.” Also: “I have given all the dis-countenance to Piracy that I am capable of doing, and that is one article which raises their charges against me. I say, I have ruined the Town by denying the Privaters (for so they call pirates) from bringing in a £100,000 since my coming.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 326–28.

The common council revolts in its order of Dec. 13, 1695, in alleging “all the Infr. Pate of this City their Apprentices and Children that were here the time the Charter was Granted” (see April 27, 1696) to be freemen. As they, then, are required to register in the town clerk’s office, and pay ninepence; but the former order is modified in that no one shall be registered under the age of 21 years, and a provision is added that before the Mayor and two Aldermen who are to Sitt every Tuesday morning att ye City Hall... till the same be perfected.” The oath of a freeman is to be administered to all who come to be registered.—M. C. C., II: 31.

The common council again takes under consideration “the Grievance of being Deprived of the Sole Bolting of flower & Baking of Bisket for Transportation from this Province.” They pass an order for the recorder to prepare an address to Bellomont, to obtain his assistance in restoring the sole privilege to this city.—M. C. C., II: 34. The recorder’s draft of such address was approved by the board; the wording determined by the “Bolting Act,” in the four years since its passage, has “taken away the livelihood of two thirds of the Inhabitants of this City... And Given the Same to About thirty persons in the Rest of the Government. And this City which was Accustomed to be the Granary of all the Colonies and Never had less in Store then forty or fifty thousand Bushells of wheat for the Accommodation of his Majestys Subjects is now Reduced to See great want and Extremity that it Cannot procure Corne Enough in Store to Supply its Inhabitants with their daily Necessities of bread and what [is] in Town [is] att Such Extravagant Rates that it is become Very Oppressive to the poor.” Furthermore: “The whole Trade on flower and Bisket sent to the West Indies hath since the passing of the Said Act fallen under Such Disputation that it will not Yield see much by four of [of] five Shilings £2 hundred as that Comes from other ports And see subject to Corruption for want of due Inspection which Cannot be Effected whilst there is See great A Latitude Given for the Bolting that in Probability the whole Trade will Fall in A few Years to the total Ruin of his Majestys Revenue And Decay of this City.” They ask the governor, therefore, “to lay our Complaint before his Most Sacred Majesty,” etc.; and they decide to raise £50 to be used by an agent in England “for ye representing the State of this City Unto his Majesty and the Lords Commissioners of Trade And Plantations in Order to the having the Said Act Repelled.”—Ibid., II: 32–34. This address was presented to Bellomont immediately, and he reported it to the lords of trade on July 1 (p.m.), with a copy to the council.

The common council appoints a committee “to Agree with Carpenter the Building A Pew in Trinity Church for the use of ye Mayor Recorder Aldermen and Assistants of this City and for their Successors.”—M. C. C., II: 34. See also Oct. 28, 1707.

Att’y-Gen. James Graham gives reasons to Bellomont why New York City, rather than Amboy, should be the principal port of entry on the Hudson, as London is on the Thames. Prefacing his observations with an historical review of the subject, he points out that the government of the province cannot continue to be largely supported by the customs revenues if Amboy is made a free port, as it was before the revolution (the accession of Wm. and Mary); that trade would be diverted from New York to Amboy because Amboy is nearer Sandy Hook.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 382–84; see also Ibid., IV: 511. On July 21, New Jersey asserted her right to a free port at Amboy, and the governor’s council ordered that New York customers go to Amboy and wait conditions.—Col. Coun. Min., 1: 732.

The city of New York having addressed Bellomont “in relation July 27 to an Act of Assembly passed by Coll: Fletcher the Bolting Act which destroys their rights,” Bellomont informs the lords of trade that the said Act was not fairly obtained, there being a contract with Mr. Nicolls one of the Council for four hundred pounds for the passing of it.” He advises that if the act is “to the injury of the Province,” and “a reward was given for it,” it may be worth the consideration of parlia-Bellomont also informs the Lords regarding Fletcher's extravag-ants grant of land, adding: "His Maij^ Fort at New York being the house of the Gov't; had a large garden for pleasure, fruit and herbage, and might be called the King's domain; Col: Fletcher hath granted away by patents great part of the said garden, the pleasantest part being next the sea, and expressed its name in the Patent (part of our Garden) and the remaining part being a Garden planted with herbs and Fruit trees, he permitted the Fences and Trees to be wholly destroyed by Cattle, after his knowledge of my being appointed a Govt, which 14 years time will hardly repair. A small Farm, called the King's Farm, which usually supplied the Governors with bread, corn, some few months before my arrival, he made a lease of to the Church, and a small Island called nutten Island for the grazing of a few conchohorses and Cows for the Governors family he would likewise have leased out to one formely his footman but the Council were ashamed to consent to it, so that is only left undisposed of for the pleasure or conveniency of the King's Gov't."—Ibid.

In a postscript, dated July 6, Bellomont states that he has suspended his visit of New York from office and gives the cause.—Ibid. 193: 14.

What may be looked upon to-day as an historical survey of the beginnings of New York's commercial prosperity is comprised in several papers, transmitted by the mayor to the common council, as the report of the committee, appointed June 29, to convey reasons why the "Bolting Act of 1664" should be repealed. These are approved by the board, and it is ordered that "the same be Remitted into England by the Recorder." (James Graham).—M. C. C., II: 35.

These papers include transcripts of some of the most important records of the province (the articles of surrender of 1664, Nicolls's commission to the mayor and aldermen of 1664, and Andros's proclamation of 1674). They are entered in full in the Minutes under this date, followed by a list of all the papers relating to the privilege of bolting, with page references to the "old Comon Council Books," and to the "New Comon Council Books."—Ibid., II: 36-37.

One of these papers, entitled "The Case of New Yorke," is an historical summary. Some of the facts presented are as follows: When the city enjoyed the bolting monopoly several advantages accrued to this city and province. In 1678, when the bolting began, there were only 343 houses in New York. By 1666, 954 new buildings had been added. This increase is attributed to the bolting. The revenue in the years 1678, 79, and 80 did not exceed £2,000; but after that it increased annually until it amounted in 1687 to £5,000 (and if duly inspected would have amounted to £7,000 or £8,000). After 1684 (the year the sole bolting privilege was granted to the Staple Committees), there were three ships, eight sloops and seven boats belonging to this port; in 1694, there were 60 ships, 62 sloops, and 40 boats. Since 1694, navigation has decreased. In 1678, not over 400 beeces were killed; in 1694, nearly 4,000. Land's were lowered during those years; since then they have advanced to ten times their value. Of the 981 houses in New York, 600 depend upon bolting. In the country, there are only three counties where bolting is done, Kings, Queens, and Ulster, and not over 30 bolters bolt all the wheat of those counties; so that to feed these 30, 600 families must perish at New York if the Bolting Act continues in force. In those three counties there are few unusual families; in New York there are over 8,000 souls.—Ibid., II: 37-38.

Another document, in support of the appeal to the king and lords of trade for the repeal of the Bolting Act, is entitled "Reasons Humbly Offered in Defence of ye Rights & Privileges of his Majesties City of New Yorke in America." It is the principal argument in favour of the city's securing the sole bolting privilege. It traces the early grants of special privileges to this city, which has been "allways the Metropolis Staple Porte and the only publick Mercate [market] of the whole Province."—Ibid., II: 43. The beginnings of New York's commercial prosperity are thus traced:

The greater commodity of the Province and the Citizens of the Said City No Sooner perceived that there were greater quantities of wheat Raised than Could be Consumed within the Said Province but they Coarvted and Invented the Act for proceed of Bolting by which they Converted the Wheat into flour And made it A Manufacture not only profitable to all the Inhabitants of the Province by the Encouragement of Tillage and Naviga- tion, but likewise beneficial And Commodious Plantations, and the Improvements thereof in this City is the true and only Cause of the Growth Strength and Encrease of buildings within the Same and of the Riches Plenty of Money and the rise of the Value of Lands in the Other parts of the Province but the lively- hood of all the Inhabitants of this City doe Chiefly Depend there- on.

The governments which have had "to Rule ye Said Plantation" have made the "Said City the Only porthe Prohibiting from time to time the Transportation of wheat and Appointing that No flour Should be Bolted or Baked for Transportation but at this City . . . Now the Reason why this City was Soe Incorporated & had Granted to them the aforesaid Rights and Priviledges is because the first founders of the Same were not Suffered by the the Govern: to Extend themselves into particular Settlements Utill first there should be Gathered together A sufficient Number of People at this place that Might be of A Reasonable force for their Common Security & defence Whereupon they began to fortifie and finding this place of their situation to be Very Barren and unfitf for their Industry to make them Any Return for their Subsistance it was therefore Projected that all such as would fix themselves at this place Should only Adit themselves to the accommodation of the officers and not to hold a settlement but to be subject to such accommoda- tion of those that Should goe Settle in the Country they might be plentifully Supplied with such things as was Necessary for Cultivation."—Ibid., II: 44.

"this City did Encrease in People, Strength and Riches to such A Degree that itt become the Eayer of the Crown of England which thereupon fitted out A fleet Under the Command of Genl Nicolls who in the year 1664 did Reduce the Said City and Province Unto the Allegeance of his Majesties Said Crown of England And those Steps that were made by the Dutch Government for ye Encourage- ment of Trade & this City were Soe Reasonable that the English Governours have successively as Aforesaid Confirmed the same . . . "while this Province was under the Dutch Government they were Soe Jealous of the Trade of this City that they would not per- mit any Settlement to be made in Any place within their Jurisdiction but under Such Restrictions as they thought Convenient for ye Security of their Trade And particularly did Reestraine the In- habitants of Hudsons River and Long Island that they Should not Plant nor Manage any part of Husbandry without paying the tenth part of what they Raised unto the Government and besides did Oblige the Planters that they Should not Apply themselves to Any Trade but Only to husbandry. And that the Inhabitants of Albany Should Only Apply themselves Unto the Indian Trade."—Ibid., II: 45.

"Nevertheless Soe great was the Clemency of the English Gover-umor that they Removed from the husbandman that Grievous yoke of the to the new Commonwealth of A Small quiet Rent Since which time by the Providence of the Citizens of the Said City in finding out foreign Merchants . . . the husband men are grown Rich and not only forgett thereby the former tasks and Obligations they lay under but also the Advan- tages they have and doe daily reape by the Providentiall Care and Industry of the Merchants of New Yorke."—Ibid., II: 46.

There was "A Necessity that the bolting of flour for Trading to be Confined Unto one Certain place that it might be Strictly Viewed and Examined that there might be no Mixture or Corruption therein."—Ibid.

"The Act is no Imposition nor Any Violence to property or Right of the Subject for his Majesty to Confine the bolting of flour And Baking Biskett for Transportation to this City Only the Advan- tages Aforesaid being to the Common wealth and the Same Justly warranted by Reason Experience and the Laws of England which has Confin'd the making and sale of many Manufactures to One place only."—Ibid.

"Albeit itt be the least and most barren Spot in the whole Province yett by the Intercourse of Trade itt payeth Annu- ally within A Small matter one third part of all the Taxes of the Province besides the whole Revenue."—Ibid.

"if it were not for Trade Nan Man would be Encourage to Improve more than what He has Occasion for . . . . . . before that Invention of Bolting flour the Husband men were Very low And Mean in their Stock buildings and Apparel & feeding . . . . . .
WhereasSince that time they began to Bolt att New York for July Transportation the Navigation is Considerably Increased the Lands much more in Value the people better Cloathd the husband man much Eased of his labour by the help of slaves And A Considerable Increase of the Stock of Cattle and Sould att double ye Price of what they were formerly and for Instance about fourteen Years Ago there were four bured in Service of the Inhabitants of this City and Now three thou- sand head besides Sheep and Other Small Cattle which fully demonstrates that as ye Trade of the Province was Regulated and Con- fined to the City all the Inhabitants thereof doe thereby Receive Considerable Benefit if Otherwise the inhabitants of this Province would be like their Neighbours in Plymouth & Connecticut- cols Virginia and Maryland who for want of a Publick Mart like unto this City have Very little Shipping belonging to them And their people Menly Cloathd and ill Supplied with Other things Necessarry for Comfortable living.―ibid., II: 48.

13 Last Bellomont sends private instructions to Thomas Weaver, the agent in London for the province of New York. One of these, numbered 14, is as follows: "You are to sollicite ye getting a New Great Scale for this province, the present one having ye effegies of her late Majy as well as of his present Majy.‖—Ibid., II: 48.

14 "Ordered, That Bills be put upp to give notice that ye Kings Farme is to be lett, & that ye Church Wardens be a Committee to Farne the same, & report to this Board, what they do herein ye first Conveniance.‖—Trin. Min. (MS.). Gov. burnerby, writing to the Lords of trade on June 30, 1704, stated that Fletcher had left the King's Farm to "the church" for seven years (see Aug. 19, 1697), "under the rent of sixty Bushels of wheat," and that Bellomont "granted the same farm to a Dutchman under the same rent.‖—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 1112.

15 Benjamin Fletcher, in a letter from London to some person not named, says: "I find my self prosecuted by the Earl of Bello- mont my Successor with that Implacable inverterray and observe the greater Credite his Lorip has with Persons in the chief Stationes and trust hear That I am confounded at the design and meaning of it especially Looking backe at the five and Thirty years That I have born Commission under the Crowne of England without- out the least reproach or impeachment of my reputation and after nine years service in the wars of Ireland and America to become A castaway in the Reare of my Days is noe Smale mortification to me his Majesties favor to mee is more valuable Then Life and I am ready to submit to the most insignificant death if the Things Alleaged against mee bee true.‖—From transcript, Library of Congress, of the original letter in the British Museum, cited "Adams, MSS., II: 5.

20 The transactions of Bellomont and his council with the Indians, in the conferences held in the fort at New York, up to this date, are published by Bradford (1695) in a tract entitled Propositions made by the Five Nations of Indians. This tract, now extremely scarce, has not been previously noticed in the works of Ireland and America to become A castaway in the Reare of my Days is noe Smale mortification to me his Majesties favor to mee is more valuable Then Life and I am ready to submit to the most insignificant death if the Things Alleaged against mee bee true.‖—From transcript, Library of Congress, of the original letter in the British Museum, cited "Adams, MSS., II: 5.

11 A warrant to ye Treasurer to pay to Joseph Davis the Sum of three
The board continued to use his house as a temporary city hall; for on April 22, 1699, Davis was paid £11 "for three quarters of A Year's Rent for the Court Room due the first of May Next ensuing and for firewood Expended for y' use of the City." (Ibid., II: 76-77), and on Oct. 16, 1699, an order was issued to pay his widow £11 "for Candles and expences with Mr. Rooke about the Sale of the Old City Hall and a halfe yeares Rent for the Court Room due and Ending the first day of November Next."—Ibid., II: 95-217. For an account of Davis's tavern, see July 31, 1700.

This is the day each year appointed by the city charter for swearings in the practice of the several offices. The mayor, attended by the mayor elect, the recorder, aldermen, high sheriff, assistants, constables, and others, wait upon the governor in council at the fort. The oaths appointed, instead of the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, are administered to the mayor and high sheriff elect. They subscribe the "Test and Association," are sworn to the due execution of their respective offices, and receive their commissions. This year, for the first time, following these ceremonies, the mayor, together with the other newly installed officials, attended Trinity Church, where the rector, the Rev. William Vesey, preached a sermon suited to the occasion. The "exhibition season," that quarter was a regular feature of the day's events. After this service, all returned to the city hall "where after the Ringing of the Bell the Mayors & Sheriffs Commissions were published upon Which the New Mayor Resumed the Chair & Caused the Oaths Appointed as Aforesaid to be Administered to the Respective Aldermen and Assistants who Subscribed the Test and Association and Were Sworne to the due Execution of their Respective Offices & Accordingly tooke their places."—M. C. C., II: 61.

Theems de Key, Johannes Kip, and Brandt Schuyler make the following statement in writing (Dutch) concerning the removal of the bodies of Leisler and Millbourne to their church: "We the churchwardens having been requested by Isaac de Riemer in the name of Mr. Jacob Leisler to bury the corpse of his father and Milbourne, in our Nether—Dutch church—give for answer, because we are pressed by both persons in the Congregation and very much desire to preserve peace and quiet in our Church, that we cannot consent thereto, but also that we shall not hinder it."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 397-98. See Oct. 20.

The common council appoints another committee (see June 14) "to Examine into the State of the ferry." Besides agreeing upon the best terms for "farmng" it, they are required to "take to their Assistance A Bricklayer and A Carpenter and Examine Which will be Convenient for the Rebuilding or Repairing of the ferry house." —M. C. C., III: 63. They reported Nov. 2, that the ferry-house was "Soe far gone to decay that it is not worth Repairing."—Ibid., III: 64. This evidently refers to the ferry-house on the Branch or Green which was built in 1699.

The common council again orders (see Nov. 20, 1697) that the mayor hire four night watchmen. Their duties are defined on this occasion as follows: They are to be "honest Inhabitants householders of this City." They are "to Watch in the Night time from y' hour of Nine of y' Clock att Night till break of day Each Morning untill ye 25th day of March Next ensuing And to goe round the City each Hour in the Night with A Bell and there to proclaim the season of the weather and the hour of the Night and if they Meet in their Rounds Any people disturbing the peace or lurking about Any persons house or Commiting any theft they take the assistance A Bricklayer and A Carpenter and Examine What will be the Next Morning," etc.—M. C. C., III: 62. The mayor reported on Nov. 2 that he had hired the four "Bellmen."—Ibid., II: 64. See also Dec. 1, 1702. The duty of the watchman to carry a bell, and ring it at the most public corners and places of the streets, and also give notice of the time of night, because thereafter a settled custom.—See (1750) Ibid., V: 319.

In a report to "the Lords Justices" on the affairs of the province of New York (including Fletcher's encouragement of pirates and his extravagant grants of lands) the lords of trade commend Bellomont, and propose the removal of New York Province from the control of the governor and lieutenant governor and of all other places of trust in the government. They recommend that pirates be prosecuted, and that the exorbitant grants of land be annulled; also that no future grants be made except under certain conditions.—N. Y. Col. Decs., IV: 385-95. An order in council confirmed this report at Whitehall on Oct. 25, and instructions were issued to Bellomont accordingly.—Ibid., IV: 417-15. See also Sept. 28 and Nov. 10.

The remains of Leisler and Millbourne dropped into the river. The body of the latter again with great pomp under our Dutch Church." This was eight years and five months after their execution and burial. Members of the Dutch Church (of the Leisler party) inform the classis of Amsterdam: "Their weapons and armorial ensigns of honor were there hung up, and though as far as possible, their honor was restored to them. Special permission to do this had been received by his Honor's son, Jacob Leisler, from his Majesty. This gave unutterable joy to their families and to those people who, under him, had taken up arms for our blessed King William. With this circumstance we trust the whole nation has at last so long harassed us, will also be buried. To this end our Right Honorable Governor, my lord the Earl of Bellomont, . . . is exercising his good offices."—Eccles. Rec., II: 1261; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1868), 411.

There was a great concourse of people at the funeral (1300 'tis said) and 'tis thought they have been as many more, but that it blew a strong storm for two or three days together, that hindered people from coming down or crossing the rivers."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 401.

In a report to the lords of trade, Bellomont states that, about three weeks before this date (about Oct. 1), "the relations of Mr. Leisler and Mr. Milbourne desired leave to take the bodies that had been buried near the gallowes and give them Christian burial in the Dutch Church." He deemed the request so reasonable that he gave consent, "partly out of a principal of compassion, but chiefly out of a respect to the Act of Parliament for reversing the attainder of those two men; which Act does also legitimize Captain Leisler's assuming the government of this Province and puts a censure upon the illegality of his execution." See also May 3, 1699. Bellomont adds a third reason for consenting: that Fletcher's refusal to obey this act of parliament brought the law into contempt. "My design," he states, "is chiefly to give the people here a just idea of the laws, that they bear the stamp of the highest authority of the King and Nation of England, and ought to be respected as sacred."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 400-1, 523. See also Oct. 14 and 20.

Bellomont sends to the lords of trade "a certificate under the hand of the Surveyor General of this Province of several most extravagant grants of land by Colonel Fletcher;" also, by one Lieut. Hunt, who goes to England in the man-of-war "Deftford" from Boston, he sends "a new Map of this Province (it being too bulky to make up in this packet) made by the said Surveyor General the exactest, I believe, that has yet been made, wherein he has described the several large tracts of land granted, with the grantees names; so that your Lordsships will see that this whole Province is given away to about thirty persons in effect, to the great prejudice of the Crown, because at that rate this province, which by its situation is the most considerable of all the Provinces on the Continent (I doubt to be ought to be regulated under the laws), is sold the people, for men will not care to become base tenants to proprietors of land in this Province, when they can buy the fee-simple of lands in the Jerseys for five pounds per hundred acres, and I believe as cheap in Pennsylvania." See Oct. 22.

Continuing, Bellomont asserts: "I do not find that Colonel Fletcher had any power by his Commission to sell the lands in this Province, and yet 'tis certain he took money for all the grants he made, except that of the Mohawks land, which I cannot yet find out." He recommends the "voiding these extravagant grants and limiting all Governors to a certain number of acres in their grants, obliging them to reserve a Quiet Rent of half a thousand pounds for every hundred Acres, to the Crown, and restraining them from selling the lands to the person they grant them to. I should think a thousand acres were a sufficient quantity of land to grant to any man, for the clearing of land from wood costs £2-£3 p' acre all this country over, so that it would require the good part of Milbourne and Millbourne are exhausted, and when people, for men will not care to become base tenants to proprietors of land in this Province, when they can buy the fee simple of lands in the Jerseys for five pounds per hundred acres, and I believe as cheap in Pennsylvania."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 399-400.

The 'provincial council issues an order for the payment of £20 to Augustine Graham (the surveyor-general) for making the map of the province.—Cal. of State Papers, Am. & W. Indies (1697-1698), 498. The original map is now preserved in the
The common council limits the slaughtering of cattle to "the publick Slaughter houses by the water side." Cattle may not be landed "but att the Nearest Convenient place to the slaughter houses."—M. C. C., II: 65. See Oct. 15, 1691; Nov. 27, 1725.

Mayor De Puyer appoints Enoch Hill to be his harbor and master mariner, and it is reported that he "for his Encour- agey!" he desires that Hill be allowed "A Coate Breeches Hitt Shoes Stockings and A Cloake of ye City Livery And A Beadles Staff" at the city's expense. It is ordered that the mayor purchase these, and that the livery "be Flew with An Orange List."—M. C. C., II: 65-66. After some delay provision for such an uniform was made by the common council.—Ibid., II: 93. See July 8, 1693.

A committee of the common council is appointed "to View" 50th condition of the present City Hall And where it will be most Convenient for ye building of a New One And what Materials will be Necessary for ye Same together with an Estimate of ye Cost thereof."—M. G. C., II: 66. They reported at the next meeting, Jan. 11, 1699 (q. v.).

Bellomont writes to Mr. Popple explaining the rebellious character of the people. He had proclaimed the previous Wednesday as a day for a fast and humiliation. Few people came to church "and not one of the ringleaders, neither Bayard, Nicol, Wilson, nor several others." On this day, the master of a ship refuses to carry the king's packet, and Bellomont sends a warrant to force him to receive it.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 415-17.

Bellomont, reporting to the lords of trade regarding the accounts of the province, having already reported on Nov. 7 concerning the present state of the revenue, says, among other things: "Because Colonel Fletcher pretended to have applied the 506 pence, this was stopped but true account of the Expedition of the Colonies was not received. The Board of Trade repairs and the fortifications in and about his Majesties Fort, with their report upon my said order both in the same paper, and (No. 7) by which Report of theirs your Lordships will see that the Governors house and the fortifications were much out of repair at the time Colonel Fletcher was superseded." (The report here mentioned is not published with the letter.)

". . . There has been the strangest management in the buildings within this Fort that ever was known, the addition to the Governor's house which is very little, the chappel, and the barracks for the soldiers cost before Colonel Fletcher being superseded fifty pounds by a particular of the Colonies, Colonel Cortlandt of all materials and money paid to workmen, which I send by this conveyance to Mr. Weaver the Agent . . . I find in the general account of the buildings which I now send home to the Agent, a prodigious quantity of lime and bricks, enough (as one would think) to build a little town, and I am told there is a great deal of fraud used in the multiplying those materials, and some I have detected myself; for instance, I find the bricks are charged all along at 306 pence per thousand, and they were and are still bought at 25 pence per thousand, which is the current price. Another thing is, I dare undertake to build in London the same quantity of bricks as I have six hundred pounds at most, see far as Colonel Fletcher left it built. 'Tis true by what inquiry I made, building is dearer here one third part than 'tis there. Upon a strict audit of these accounts and a survey of the buildings, I doubt not but Colonel Fletcher will be found to be indebted to the King a great many thousand pounds: I am apt to believe his debt will more than build the two forts at Albany and Schenectady, but I will not pretend to say what the debt is, till your Lordships order an exact audit of the accounts.

There is besides what I have already mentioned as chargeable on Colonel Fletcher another article which is the money taken by him for the Kings lands (that he parted away to grant) which he had no sort of power to sell by his Majesty's commission or instructions . . . " Bellomont then mentions various unjustifiable perquisites taken by Fletcher.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 421-23. See, further, Nov. 23, 1700.

The lords justices of England issue instructions to Bellomont commanding him for his diligence. They confirm his removal of William Nicolls, Chadley Brooke, and William Pintoorne; they order the removal of Col. Nicholas Bayard and Frederick Philips, and appoint in their places Col. Abraham Depyster, James Graham, Dr. Samuel Skaats, Robert Livingston, and Dr. John Corbell. They direct him to punish pirates and discourage illegal trade. They also direct him to use all methods that the law allows to annul the exorbitant grants of land.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 424-25. See Sept. 28, and Oct. 19.

Bellomont sends to the lords of trade a copy of the charter granted by Fletcher to the Dutch Church, which he thinks "extraordinary, for it is setting up a petty jurisdiction to fly in the face of the government." Being told that Fletcher "had a bribe for passing this charter," Bellomont states: "I sent to the Church-Masters (so called by the Dutch) which were here, and they are equivalent to our Church Wardens, for a copy of the said charter, with which they told me that was told I should find an entry made of the said bribe." The "Church-Masters" referred Bellomont to Mr. Selwyns, and the latter said he could not show it "till he had called a Consistory," but "speaking him fair" Bellomont succeeded, and copied the entry referred to, and sent it to the lords of trade.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 426-27. This "bribe" consisted of "a considerable present of plate . . . as appears by their Church Books."—Ibid., IV: 465. See also Jan. 9, 1699. For the record of this present to Fletcher, see July 26, 1696.

On the advice of Ducie Hungerford, surveyor of customs, the council decrees that the jurisdiction of the mayor's court does not extend beyond low-water mark.—Col. Coun. Min., 115.

Bellomont issues a proclamation (printed by Bradford) directing that all male inhabitants, excepting Indians and slaves, take the oath established by the Act of Parliament in England, instead of the oath of allegiance and supremacy.—Miss Hase's "Bibliography" in N. Y. Pub. Libr. Bulletin (1901), 60.

"This Day the board accounted with Mr. Derrick Vanderburgh & there appeared due to him by balance the Sum of £294.97 Current money of New York for workmen Labourers & money & by him expended for the building of Trinity Church & the Steeples, & in Consideration that he hath been long out of his money and no Interest for the same. It is Resolved & ordered by this board Nennine Contraandemcet, that a Silver Tankard of ye value of Twelve pounds be presented unto him & to be paid out of the Publick Stock of Trinity Church and at the said sum of £294.97 be paid he be allowed from this day Interest for such sum as shal bebehinde & not paid at ye Rate of Seven pounds . . . Cent . . . Ann."—Tris. Min. (M.S.).

Complaints against Fletcher concerning his conduct of the government at New York are delivered to him "at the Board." (Whitehall). These be answered on Dec. 24 (q. v.).—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 437-45, 47-51.

Advices reach England from Bellomont that "he has caused several persons to be arrested there [in New England and New York provinces], accused for corresponding and trading with the pirates of Madagascar, by which means they have got great riches."—From Diary of Narcissus Luttrell, in Hist. Mag. (1868), 4th ser., III: 392.

Fletcher answers the complaints against him regarding fortifications (see Nov. 28): "For at New York I made up all the sod-worse anew, the two bastions towards the sea I flaged with free stone, the curtailte between those two bastions I built up new from the ground, the well new made, and a very large cistern for receiving water, half the soldiers barracks pull'd down and rebuilt, new carriages for thirty six guns, a paint [pent] house upon columns for securing the field pieces and their carriages from the weather, the chapel made up into pews. As to the Governor's house it was all new shingled by me, two rooms wainscoted, an addition tierceto built from the ground with brick and shingled and secured from the weather, tho' not finished within; a new pump made without the Fort Gate and one thousand and fifty tons of lime paid for and lodged in the new house, for the painting and refit ting the Forts."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 450. See also Ibid., IV: 513.

In this year, an interesting coloured map was drawn, entitled "A Map of the English Possessions in North America and New Holland." It is owned by the Library of Congress, and is reproduced and described in Addenda Pl. 2-9, Vol. III.

The Bishop of Bristol sent over, this year, enough "stone as did pave the Isle of our Church" (Trinity).—From letter of the vestry to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in Eccles. Rec. II: 1768.

In a petition relating to the excise, William Appel, innkeeper, referred to "the New Street" as "one of the worst places in New York."—Hist. MSS., Eng., 1719-22.

The tavern adjoining the old Stadhuyis on Pearl St., which was granted to Lovelace before Jan. 25, 1670 (q.v.), is evidently still under government ownership in 1699, when it is called "The King's house now in the tenure of Joseph Davids."—Liber A, City Grants, 214 (in comptroller's office). Shown on Pl. 17 and 20-b, Vol. I. See Oct. 13, 1698.

About this time, the Three Cornish Daws was erected and opened as a tavern at what is now 37 Wall St.—Liber Wills, V: 1717; Liber Deeds, XXIII: 194-96; XXVII: 163 (New York). The United States Trust Co. building now covers the site. See Landmark Map Ref., Key, Ill., 91, Ch. 2; Pl. 17, Vol. III.

Some time during his administration of the government, probably this year, Nanfan issued a license for theatrical performances in New York City.—See Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 254. The original record was destroyed in the Capitol fire at Albany; but, fortunately, it had been printed. It is a petition, without date, from one Richard Hunter, an actor-manager (not Gov. Hunter as stated in Vol. I, p. 265), to Nanfan, and read as follows:

"To the Honorable John Nanfan. Esq'r his Majesty's Governor and Commander in Chief of the province of New York and territories Dependent thereon in America and Vicinity of the said Albany. The Humble petition of Richard Hunter Sheweth, That your Hon'ble Petitioner having been at great charge and expense in providing persons and necessary's in order to the acting Play's in this Citty;

Humly prays your Honor will please to grant him a License for so doing.

And your honor's petitioner shall ever pray, "

Richard Hunter

[Indentured]

"Petition of Richard Hunter. Licence issued and Recorded." As Lieut.-Gov. Nanfan administered the government from May 16, 1699, to July 25, 1700, in the absence of the Earl of Bellomont at Boston, and again after Bellomont's death, from May 19, 1701, to May 3, 1702, the date may be easily approximated. The endorse- ment is in the handwriting of Baroe Cosens, clerk of the council. "Prole Hunter came from New York from the West Indies with Nanfan. Be this as it may, his petition conclusively establishes the fact that theatres were introduced into New York half a century, if not more, before the period fixed by Dudley."—Hist. Mag. (1865), IX: 418.

Jan. 9

Thomas Weaver, the agent for the province of New York in England, replies to Fletcher's answer to the charges against him.

He points out, regarding Fletcher's extravagant grants, that it is "incredible that Colonel Fletcher did not know that the grant to Colonel Heathcoat was part of the King's gardey for that the words of the grant are, Part of Our Garden." He continues:

"The King's farm was leased out by Colonel Fletcher, even when my Lord Bellomont was known to be on his voyage for New York; as most of the other great grants were, after the Earl's designation to the Government. Colonel Fletcher assumes the glory of building churches, which never was imputed to him as a crime, if it was true; but the Church of New York [Trinity] was not built by him, but by a contribution of several, even of the French and Dutch churches as well as English; and an allowance of one hundred pounds per annum given to an English Minister by an act of the country, which is levied, a greater part of it, on Dutch and French inhabi-

Therefore there is no necessity to lease this farm to the Church Wardens, nor to call this lease a building of churches, and make that the pretence of hindering a succeeding Governor from the beneficial use of the farms for the convenience of his family.

"Besides Colonel Fletcher accepted a considerable present of plate for granting a Charter to the Dutch Church of that City, as appears by their Church Books."—N. T. Col. Docs., IV: 456-66.

For the record of this present, see, under July 26, 1696. For the further proceedings of the Lords of Trade in this case, see Vol. IV: 466-74, 479-86. On March 9, 1699, they made representations to the king concerning the charges against Fletcher.—Ibid., IV: 479-86.

The common council orders that the ferry between this city and Nassau Island be "Let to farms" on Feb. 2 (q.v.), for a term of seven years beginning March 25; and that "the money thereof be Appropriated to No Other use then to the building of A New City Hall."—M. C. C., II: 67. See March 9, 1703.

The committee, appointed on Nov. 9 last to examine the city hall, reports that "they ... finde it insufficient and deside the Upper end of the broad Street A proper place for y8 Building A new City Hall And believe that the Sum of three Thousand pounds may be Sufficient for the building the same According to the former draft drawn by Mr James Evetts." The report is approved by the board.—M. C. C., II: 68. Regarding the sale of the old city hall and the building of the new, see summaries under May 12, 1696, and Oct. 16, 1699. See also M. C. C. (M.S.), XIX: 240-54 (1808), where the history of the first and second city halls is briefly re-

The common council orders that the mayor issue a warrant to the treasurer to pay £1515s:17s:3 for making And paving the Street Burgers path."—M. C. C., II: 68. See May 11, 1696.

The common council directs the mayor to issue his warrant to the treasurer to pay William Bradford £410:10 for 2 Books of Records printing Register Office of the Market and Laws of y8 Province."—M. C. C., II: 68.

The mayor presents to the common council a letter from Bellomont, in which the governor directs, with the approval of his council, that the oath of allegiance be administered to the inhabitants and the "Test and Association" signed by them, in accordance with a proclamation which accompanies the letter. The governor directs that the names and addresses of all who refuse be returned, that a discrimination may be made between "Good and Lowall Subjects" and those that "by ill principles Are prevailed Upon to be Enemies to his Majesties person and Government."—M. C. C., II: 68-69.

John Peter Melett's account for ironwork in the fort is reported as extravagant; and Thomas Parnytry, master-gunner and supervisor of buildings, is suspended for having certified it as correct. John Ashton, the store-keeper, is appointed supervisor of buildings.—Cal. Coun. Min., 1747.

Pursuant to an order of the common council of Jan. 23 (M. C. C., II: 69), directing a committee "to Examine into the Ancient Rights and Privileges of this City and what Additions will be Needfull to be added thereto for y8 Well Rule And Government of the Inhabitants," they prepare the following recommendations: The restoration of the ferry landing as a public work; the reorganization of the town clerk, water-bailiff, and clerk of the market, and the appointment of coroner should be vested in the Corporation; the extension of the jurisdiction of the water-bailiff "Upon all the Rivers Roads Coves Harbour Inlets and waters Surrounding the said City Mannings Island Title and Great Barows Islands and from y8 Bounds of the said City Upon Hudsons River Soe far as the Mouth of y8 Same Entring att Sandy hooke;" the receipt as formerly of "y8 Anchorage of all Shipping Riding in this Harbour;" jurisdiction of the landing at the ferry on Nassau Island; the Incorporation under the city's jurisdiction of "all the Land from y8 Easter End of Naus-tan Island for halfe A Mile deep to y8 West point of y8 Wallabout . . . Saving to every person there, their freehold. And all the Land from High water Mark to Low water Mark fronting y8 Same."—From the original report preserved in the metal file labelled "Filed papers, 1700-1800;" city clerk's record-room. It came before the common council on Feb. 27; no action is recorded on that day.

—M. C. C., I: 73-74.

Conditions are published for leasing the ferry between this city and Nassau Island for seven years from March 25. Rip van Dam is the successful bidder, at £165 per annum. Among the conditions prescribed are the following provisions: The lessee (or "farmer") shall pay to the treasurer in quarterly payments "what he shall farme the above Revenue att." He shall give security for faithful performance of duty (cf. provisions of Dec. 27, 1700). He shall provide and maintain two great boats or scows for transporting 1699: cattle, corn, etc., and two small boats sufficient for passengers.

Feb. One great boat and one small boat shall be one each side of the river, and shall go to and fro without either the two great boats or the two small boats being on the same side of the river at the same time. Able men are to be kept to row the boats, and give constant attention.

The "farmer" shall maintain a pound for the security of cattle to be transported to and from this city. All corn, as well as cattle, brought in the ferry-boats, is to be landed "within the Dock ye Slips or Burgers path." Within the first year of the lease, the common council "Shall Cause to be Erected & Built att the ferry on Nassawau A good & sufficient Boat, of sufficient Board, high & strong, and the Stories High forty foot in length and twenty four foot in breadth for y^ Accommodation and Convenience of the person that farmer ye said Ferry." Here the "farmer" shall keep a publick house of Entertainment in Order that Strangers & Travellers & their horses may have good Accommodation at Reasonable Rates.

This he shall keep in repair. The city agrees to repair "the Barn att ye Ferry" (see Feb. 27), and the farmer is to maintain it. Ferriage rates are prescribed for persons, horses, cattle, dogs, sheep, barrels of rum, sugar, molasses, oil, pork, tubs of butter, barrels of corn, salt, hogsheads of tobacco, etc. "Every single person to pay for going Over Eight Stivers in Wampum or A Silver two pence." The rate is half of this if the person is in company. The rates are double after sunset.—M. C. C., II: 70–72. The original manuscript of these "Conditions for farming the Ferry," and another of Dec. 27, 1700 (p. 6), are filed in metal file No. 1, city clerk's record-room. See also description of the Burgis View Pl. 25, Vol. I, pp. 455-46.

Several merchants and others concerned in the province of New York have written to the lords of trade expressing their uneasiness regarding the changes Bellomont has made in the government, tending that the preference he has shown to those of the Leider party has given them "great reason to apprehend lest that party prevailing in the elections of the next Assembly, should aim at reparations for damages suffered in the time of the disorders . . . upon occasion of the late happy Revolution, to the great hazard of their effects and estates." The lords of trade so inform Bellomont; and advise him that no act of assembly be passed by his consent "whereby any retrograde be had to the quarells or differences be- tween any parties during the aforementioned disorders or for the reparation of damages then suffered on either side, without his Majestys express pleasure first had therein."—N.Y. Col. Acts, IV: 474. For Bellomont's answer, see May 15.

The ship "Hester" with cargo having attempted to escape cus- toms by landing goods at Perth Amboy is condemned by the court of mayor and aldermen.—M. C. M. (MS.), Feb. 21, 1698. See April 16.

The common council appoints a committee to determine, in connection with the corporation's ferry property at Nassau Island, the necessary materials for repairing the barn, and to arrange for workmen to execute such repairs; also to make an estimate of the cost of building the ferry-house (see Feb. 2).—M. C. C., II: 73. On March 31, another committee was appointed to manage the building of the house (ibid., II: 75), and it was reported, April 24, that Peter Willems Roome had agreed to build it according to detailed specifications, which were entered under that date in the Minutes.—Ibid., II: 76. The house and pound are seen in the right foreground of the Burgis View (Pl. 25, Vol. I). Roome received his final payment as builder on Jan. 16, 1700, the total for materials and labour being $435.—Ibid. II: 97.

21. Thomas Story holds a Quaker meeting at New York. On the 24th, he and his companions went thence by Water, accompanied by our Friend Dr John Rodman, and some others; and, that Night, lodged at the Friends' Thomas Ransom, on Long-Island.—Jour. of the Life of Thomas Story, 177.

21. The common council appoints a committee "to View any Examine the Condition of ye Market house by the bridge and what will be proper to be Added or Rebuilt there, & Upon what Terms They can have the said house for ye same. Shall be appointed on the Ground the Brick and Brick of two what time it will be Convenient to demise the same and make Reporte thereof with all Convenient Expedition."—M. C. C., II: 75. This house had been leased on March 15, 1694 (v. s.), for the term of five years to John Ellison. On Aug. 15, 1699 (q. v.), a committee was appointed "to draw Up Articles of Agreement between the City and John Ellison for the building a House of Brick and stone in the Room on the Grounds which the Said John Ellison is to pay twelve pounds £8 Annum and to have A Lease for ye same for the Termes of twenty One Years."—Ibid., II: 83. On Sept. 6, the committee reported, and the common council made the additional provision,"that the house Shall be two Storeys High And that the Mayor Execute A Lease Accordingly" (ibid., II: 84). On the following day, he and his brethren of Dock Warders "Enter A Cavel at the passing of A Lease to John Ellison for the Market house at ye Custom house bridge Until Such time they are heard."—Ibid., II: 85–86. Nevertheless, on Sept. 29, the common council ordered "that the Mayor Execute A Lease to John Ellison for the Market house by the bridge According to the Reporte of the Committee Appointed to Agree with him on ye Terms for farming the same And that the Inhabitants of the south Ward have Liberty to Erect Any publick building att their Own proper Charge On the Ground Adjacent thereunto On the south side thereof. And ornament And Building of the City."—Ibid., II: 90. Later, Ellison relinquished his agreement with the city. See Oct. 16.

The common council appoints a committee to employ "A Scavenger for the Cleaning of the Streets" and orders "that the Commissioners Give Notice to the Inhabitants Every Morning to Clean ye Streets and Sweep ye Dirce on brays before their Respective dwelling houses." The laws for cleaning the streets are to be enforced by the sheriff, constables, and other officers.—M. C. C., II: 74–75. In November the order was renewed. The mayor was to "Agree with some person or persons to be the publick Scavengers of this City in order that the Streets of ye same be well Cleaned And the filth and Soyle thereof be Carried Away for the publick Conveniency & Benefit of the Inhabitants."—Ibid., II: 95. See May 6, 1695; June 1, 1711.

The Governor and Council think it proper to put the house of Representatives to mind, that it will be much for the Credit and Service of the province, that there be a handsome well contrived Town-house, wherein the Governor, Council and Assembly may hold their Sessions, and also their Inferior Courts of Justice, and where the Mayor of New York may keep or hold his courts; and "that a good and sufficient goal is also much wanted in this City of New York."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 125, 126.

Bellomont proposes to the lords of trade the building of a store- house at New York for naval stores. Its cost may be £1,000. This store-house is to furnish "Naval Stores for the King and the Nation of England."—N.Y. Col. Acts, IV: 512.

Bellomont reports to the lords of trade: "A bill to enforce the building of publick workhouses (which is another instruction from his Majesty) to employ the poor and also vagabonds I offered to the Assembly, but they smiled at it, because indeed there is no such thing as a beggar in this town or country: and I believe there is not a richer populace anywhere in the King's dominions than is in this Town."—N.Y. Col. Acts, IV: 511.

Bellomont, in a report to the lords of trade, refers to "repairing this fort at New York, which will cost at least £1,000 more." He adds: "In wonderful to me how Colonel Fletcher could pretend to apply the greatest part of the 6000 £5 Cent to the repairs of this Fort and the Governor's house, when I found everything out of repair when I superseded him. The palisadoes of this Fort are quite decayed and a third part of them destroyed and wanting; one of the bastions crack'd through, which will fall if not speedily repaired; the parapet gone to decay by the old part of the Stone and brick of two sades 'tis computed will cost 600£, at least to be well done, and the baston 200£, and the parapet 200£. The roof of the house too is out of repairs, so that it rains in, and the lowest floor is decayed and rotten, so that I believe the repair of the House will cost near 200£, more the bow of the old part of the Stone and brick of two dwelling enough, and might have been contented a Governor of much better quality than Coll. Fletcher; and the new building will cost first and last about £6000. New York moyn, so that 'tis plain here is so much money conserated to his vanity."—N. Y. Col. Acts, IV: 513. See May 20, 1699.

Bellomont as the lords of trade to "send over a good Judge or two and a smart active Attornr Geoallor" to break extravagant
3 In a report to the Lords of Trade, Baynard gives the following reasons for discontinuing Col. Fletcher's officers and appointing new ones: "The country was very uneasy under the authority of Fletcher's Officers, and I was mightily importuned to change them. As an instance of the people's aversion to their late officers on the 4th of last November I had the City regiment drawn out among other respects to the King's birthday; the regiment consisted that day but of 200 men besides officers, and on the 13th of last February the anniversary of the King's being proclaimed King, I had the regiment drawn out under the new Officers and they were then 500 men. I also had 'em out on the 11th of April the day of his appearing in the City. The Officers appeared in the same way, but the Soldiers at the King's. I do not find Colonel Fletcher left me a president [precedent] for this but I think it a useful piece of ceremony because it helps to affect the people to the King, and puts 'em in mind of their duty to him; for before they had no idea of anything greater on earth than Colonel Fletcher, and he seemed to be of that mind himself."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 515.

6 Gov. Bellomont "produced his Instructions from the Lords Justices of England Dated the tenth day of November, 1698, whereby he is directed to use all legal means for the Breaking of England [of] Law" (made by Gov. Fletcher). In response to the governor's wishes, the council joined in ordering that the attorney-general draw a bill for this purpose. Such bill is to contain a clause "to prevent the Governor or Commander in Chief of this province for the time being from Alienating Nutten Island, the Kings farms, the Kings Garden, and the swamp at fresh Water as being the Demence belonging to the Kings Governor for the time being."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 137. Such bill, having passed the house of representatives, was confirmed by the council on May 13 (Ibid., I: 141; N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 516); and signed May 16 (q.v.). Thereafter, Nutten Island was known as Governors Island.—Smith, Hist. of the Province of N. Y. (1756); Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 497.

8 It is ordered by the governor and council that all persons importing or exporting goods into or out of the province shall use "the Slip at the mouth of Maiden Lane in Queens Street," this being "the most Convenient place at that end of the said City." They are to ship goods at this slip "in like manner as they formerly have done at the Custom house what." It is ordered that "a patent issue for the same."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 148.

15 In a report to the Lords of Trade, before he goes to Boston (on May 16), Bellomont writes, among other things, that "the English here are so profligate" he "can not find a man fit to be trusted, that's capable of business." He refers to the new clerk of the council and the clerk of the assembly, the latter, named Ludlow, having before engaged "cutting and sanding." He says that two men that are honest of the Dutch "are very ignorant, and can neither speak nor write proper English."

"I am in hopes the several reports we have here of Captain Kidd's being forced by his men against his will to plunder two Moscoth ships may prove true, and 'tis said that near one hundred of his men revolted from him at Madagascar and were about to kill him, because he absolutely refused to turne pirate."

He sends to the lords of trade a copy of the Duke of York's letter to Gov. Dongan, to confirm them in the maintenance of the Port of New York against the pretentions of the Proprietors of East and West Jersey about upstarters of the privilege of the prelidges of New York in that respect," and rejected the pretentions of those who wanted "to have freedom of pert at Perth Amboy."

"I am glad," he says, "the map of the Province which I sent your Lordships pleases you. But as for a more correct book of the laws which you order me to send, 'tis not to be had. I sent for the printer and spoke to him about it, and he told me there was no occasion of printing it; for it because he had some private.

He complains: "I think we have been barbarously used by the Pay Office. I am forced to lend £20 a piece to the Lieutenants and Chaplains out of my salary, or they must downright starve, and at the same time I am put to borrow money for my own use and am above four hundred pounds in debt in this town, my salary is so mean and insufficient and the prequisites so very considerable."

Replying to the letter of Feb. 2 (q.v.), from the lords of trade, regarding the allegation that he was giving too much favour to the Leisler party, Bellomont says, among other things: "I would be glad to know wherein I favour them beyond the rules of justice. I suffered them indeed to take up the bodies of Captain Leisler & M. Milburn and give them Christian burial, and I do not repent my doing so in no manner of ill consequence ensued, and if it were in my power I would restore them to life again, for I am most confident and dare undertake to prove it that the execution of those men was as violent cruel and arbitrary a proceeding as ever was done upon the lives of men in any age under an English government and it will be proved undeniably that Fletcher hath declared the same dislike and abhorrence of that proceeding that I now do, notwithstanding his doubting the justice of it; and though he had no share in the affair, I think it is very spifull, and that it much applauds the justice of all the proceedings against Leisler and Milburne; which I can not but think an insolence of a high nature in those merchants when the Act of Parliament, that reverses the Attainer of those men, does plainly condemn and explode that whole proceeding against them."

He then reviews his relations with the Leisler faction since his arrival in New York. "I have made all the court that a man could do that [had] the soul of a gentleman, to those angry merchants. I have invited them to my table and treated them with all the kindness I was capable of and encouraged their coming often to dine with me, but they would never come near me of their own accord. I can not imagine the meaning of it unless my drinking King William's health (which is a custom with me alwayes after dinner) frightened them." He relates incidents showing that the factional opposition to the Leisler party (called "Disaffected persons") is still active; that bribery with large sums is attempted both in the council at New York and through Bayard, the New York provincial agent at Whitehall.

Bellomont calls attention to the fact that "their Majestys King William [and] Queen Mary were never yet proclaimed King and Queen in this Province by the Civill Magistrate." He explains that there has been no attempt in the Leisler was there. Bellomont further says that he was in possession of the Fort when the Proclamation came hither from the Secretary of State & he immediately ordered it to be read at the Fort with all solemnity [see June 22, 1689] and then carried it to a person who was of his Majestys Council at my coming and is still is so, who was then Mayor of this City [Stephen von Cortland], and desired him to publish it; but he refused . . . Bayard too, I am told, inavedeavour to hinder Their Majesties being proclaimed at Albany, in opposition to Captain Leisler's order to the Mayor of that town to do it.

"Some friends write me word from England that Colonel Fletcher and his party have refused me to be the most arbit[a]ry Governor that ever was known . . . I challenge all the people of New York to shew where I have punished or personally ill treated any man, notwithstanding I have been libelled and reflected on at their clubs and other publick meetings. But I thought their abuses and injuries to be laughd at, the story is that M. Brooks writes from [England] to his friends here very confidently that I shall not be long lived in this government, and he uses this expression,—"That if villany and falsehood do not prevail, they shall be rid of their Tyrant very soon. My honest endeavours to serve the King are ill rewarded and I treat his as Brooks to let fly their insouciance and scurrility to me, a fellow that was bred up in my Uncle's family as his dogs were, with kicking the dishes and eating the scraps from his table; and what advancement he has had in the world is owing to my
The House of Representatives (general assembly) of the province, of which Abraham Gouvrource is speaker, addresses an eloquent petition and remonstrance to Bellomont, reciting the main facts concerning the Leisler rebellion; representing the weak character of the, the hot-headedness of the insurgents, and the corruption of their friends; expressing praise for the crown and constitution of England, particularly for King William and parliament, and asking Bellomont to interfere for the benefit of the families of Leisler and Milbourne, in applying for reimbursement from the king for money expended by them from their own estates for the public benefit when they had charge of the government at New York.

They ask also “That for ye better Administra(900) of Justice five able Judges be sent from England (or two or three able Council, who have acquired to that noble profession by study, not by usurpation).” They further ask “That Coll. Fletcher’s Coat of Arms may be pulled down from ye King’s Chappell in ye Fort, & Trinity Church in this City; that since he left no monument of Virtue & a Just Administration, those of his Nautious [nauseous] & Insubordinate Pride & Vanity may not remain to Posterity, especially, that which was so meanly intituled as that he was not entitled to bear a Coat of Arms.”—

The governor and council publish an ordinance, “For the Establishing Courts of Jurisdiction. For the Ease and Benefit of each respective City, Town and County within this Province of New York.” From one of these printed ordinances bound with a copy of Bradford’s Laws (1710), in the N. Y. Pub. Libray. In 1804, an ordinance was published for “further establishing the Supreme Court.” A copy of this also is bound with the above.

Gov. Bellomont gives instructions to Lieut.-Gov. Nanzan, to be delivered that the grant of the land, the town and county of Nine Yon’s, belonging to the province. They importune to the discourage of unlawful trade, pirates, payments out of the public revenue, etc. Among other things he says: “You are not yourself oor any body else whatsoever to lodge in the New Appartments in the King’s house within the Fort.”—

Gov. Bellomont sign the bill “for vacating breaking and Annulling several Extravagant Grants of Land made by Collo Fletcher.”—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 143; Laws of N. Y. (Gaine ed.), Chap. 73; N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 310; also see May 6. Extravagant grants in Manhattan Island are mentioned as follows: The grant to John Evans of land containing the Fresh Water Pond (which is described); the grant of the King’s Town to Trinity Church; the grant to Caleb Heathcote of land in the King’s Garden “lying without the Stockade of the City of New York; near adjoining to the Locust Tree” and a grant to Heathcote of another piece of the King’s Garden, which has been vacant and unimproved, been bounded by the Stockades or Fence of the said Garden, so far as the said Garden in the Rear does extend, and from the said Fence of Stockades, so far into Hudson’s-River as Low-Water Mark.”

The law enacted that the record of these grants in the secretary’s office shall be raised, defaced, and the Memory or Record of all and every of the aforesaid Grants be “reduced into Oblivion and Forgetfulness, as if on such Grants had ever been made, or registered in the said Office.” —Laws of N. Y. (Gaine ed.), Chap. 79. This act was repealed by Chap. 126 on Nov. 27, 1708 (see Col. Laws N. Y., I: 533); but was reaffirmed by Queen Anne, June 26, 1708 (p. 2). For a history of this act, see a manuscript in the Moore Collection, in the N. Y. Pub. Libray.

On account of the “sumult & Deciet” during the recent election of representatives, the general assembly passes a bill to regulate elections, requiring, among other things, that each elector shall have property, improved and unimumbered, to the value of £400. —

Col. Laws N. Y., I: 405.

The provincial legislature pass a bill allowing £500 to Bellomont and £500 to Nanfan, as an expression of their appreciation of Bellomont’s “Extraordinary Diligence” in suppressing piracy and unlawful trade, and as acknowledgment to the king for sending him as governor. The quota to be paid by the city and county of New York is £571. —

Col. Laws N. Y., I: 396.

Another act is passed by the general assembly for restraining and punishing privates and pirates.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 389.

The act of the legislature of Sept. 30, 1691 (p. v.), entitled “An Act for ye regulating Damages done in ye time of ye late disorders,” is repealed (Col. Laws N. Y., I: 386), and the legislature now passes “A Bill for preventing vexatious Suits,” etc.—Ibid., I: 393. They also pass a bill for putting the estate of Jacob Milbourne, who was executed with Leisler, and whose attainted was reversed by parliament.—Ibid., I: 395.

Gov. Bellomont is absent on his way to Boston.—Col. Coun. Min., 140. He arrived in Boston on May 26.—See July 24, 1700. Leisler-Gov. Nanfan is now acting-governor.—See May 15.

The warden and vestrymen of Trinity Church write to Archbishop Tenison, giving credit to Fletcher for establishing Trinity Church, and to Mr. Vesey for largely aiding its growth. They express the fear that Bellomont’s opposition to Fletcher aims at the destruction of “this fair beginning,” and give their thanks for the church’s good.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 527-28. The Bishop of London wrote letters of reconciliation, asking Mr. Vesey to submit himself to Bellomont, and asking Bellomont to accept Vesey’s submission. Bellomont promised to be Vesey’s friend, “provided he demean himself peaceably and discreetly for the future.”—Ibid., IV: 766.

The common council resolves “that for the better Carrying On of the building of the New City Hall [see May 12, 1696] that the Materials of the Old City Hall be Exposed to sale And that the Ground belonging to the same be Left to farme for the term of 14 years.” English Court is also quoted: “May the same be farming the same Upon the most Advantageous Terms . . . & that ye Clerk doe put up publick placards thereof.”—M. C. C., II: 78. This committee reported on Aug. 9 (p. 2).

John Rodman, William Huddleston, and John Huttins petition the common council for a strip of land “lying on ye North River fronting their Respective purchases between them & Low Water Mark.”—M. C. C., II: 78. Such a grant is made to Rodman.—Ibid., II: 134, 139. It is the beginning of the grants of water lots on the Hudson River.—See Grant to Peter Mesler in 1701.

Thomas Story, an English Quaker missionary, who travelled through the colonies from the end of 1668 until the beginning of 1709, writes in his journal: “Samuel Jenings and I lodged with Robert Field, and Roger Gill and John Rodman returned to New-York; where, next Day, we had a Meeting, and each of us a good Opportunity therein amongst the People; who seemed to have good Understandings generally as Men; and Friends were well satisfied, there being pretty many from the Island.”

And, after the Meeting, at My Request, we had another appointed at the 36; Me, two Englishmen and a Man in the Heart of the City. The Room was large, and all about the Doors and Windows were full of People. I had a great weight and Exercise upon my Mind, out Roger Gill stepped in between, and took up most of the reasonable Time, till my Spirit almost sunk under the Load; and while it was working up the second Time after he sat down, Samuel Jenings stood up and took the rest; and then

The Spirit, 1: Capt. Kidd is seized at Boston.—See Feb. 10, 1700. For a detailed account of the circumstances leading to his return to America and capture, after his exploits in eastern waters, see The Real Capt. Kidd, by Sir Cornelius Neale Dalton (N. Y., 1911); and Addenda, 24 Apr. and 26 June.

The governor's council at New York takes up consideration of the subject of Capt. Kidd's goods, which, it is believed, were taken off by Carsten Luersen and Hendrick van der Heul near Gardner's Island. On July 31, Dorothy Leisler, the housekeeper of Mrs. Kidd, was examined by John Thurlow, Judge Jervis, who was accused of having concealed Kidd's treasure, and ordered to appear before the council. On Aug. 9, orders were issued to arrest members of Kidd's crew; and goods seized were ordered stored in the custom-house.—Col. Ginn. Min., 144. See Aug. 16, 1699.

Bellomont writes from Boston: "All the while I was at New York I was perpetually in business from five in the morning till ten at night (except dinner time)." He has been without a competent secretary, and now asks the lords of trade to employ one George Tolet in England, whom he thus describes: "he was Secretary to the Commissioners of Accounts, and they value him as a Jew. He is an excellent mathematician and no man in England a readyer accountant. He is a very honest man, very judicious, and of great application in business."—N. Y. Col. Decis., IV: 516.

The lords of the admiralty have ordered a man of war for New York, and another for New England, to serve as guard ships to those colonies and the general pyrates, if any happen to come to those coasts.—The Hist. Mag., 2d ser., III: 293, citing the "Diary of Narcissus Luttrell (Ms.)," in All Souls' College, Oxford.

The common council orders "that no Children Youth or other persons doe fire Any Gun or Pistoll or any Markure or Att Random Against any house or fence poles or within any Orchard Yards or other inclosures or in any place where persons frequent to walk on The South side of the fresh water of this City [they] Shall for Every Such offence forfeite the summe of twenty Shilling."—M. C. C., II: 79.

The committee of the common council appointed May 25 regarding the city hall reports that they cannot find anyone to "farnce" the building on the terms proposed, and they are of the opinion that "it might be Sold for Ever itt would Produce A Considerable sum of Money which would be A Great Assistance towards the building the New City Hall." The common council orders that it "be sold for Ever by Publick Outery," and a committee is appointed to sell the same. On such Conditions as they Shall think most Requisite & most Beneficial for the City."—M. C. C., II: 7. See, further, Aug. 17.

The common council grants the petition of Elie Leider (widow of Capt. Jacob Leider) for "Land fronting the Petitioners Ground here is on a poor lot att Burgers path [later called Old Slip] & Running up Queen Street [near St. &c.]," reported that "in Consideration of the two Streets Allowed to the City out of ye Land of the said Widow Leider that she have A Grant from High water to low water Markes fronting her Patent," except what lies before the houses of Leonard Huygen and Jacob Teller. It is ordered that "the Mayor Execute a Grant Accordingly."—Ibid., II: 85.

The companions of Capt. Kidd offer to turn informers if assured of their own safety; but, on Aug. 23, a letter received from See. Vernon dissuaded them from coming, and he, and his crew.—Col. Ginn. Min., 142. News had reached England that Kidd was "latelie at Nassau Island, near New York, and sent for Mr. Lillington (Livingston), one of the council there, to come on board; accordingly he went to him, and he proffered 100,000l, to give the owners who first fitted out the Adventure galleys, and 500,000l if his present ship be the same will be accepted." Also, the same authority in England stated: "There are letters which say, the famous pyrate captain Kidd has surrendered himself to the lord Bellomont."—"Diary of Narcissus Luttrell." In Hist. Mag. (1868), 2d ser., III: 293. See, further, Sept. 7.
piece of ground in the City of New York, whereon there was a Battery of Cannon and a strong Blockhouse which defended both the Town and River on the East Side, and that ground Colonel Fletcher granted away to the late Kn5hsh Serrif^e of New Yoke Ebenzer Wilson, and that in the very heat of the War. And Wilson gave his Cousin persons that had the said Fletcher had the greatest part of the money. . . . As that Battery and Blockhouse have been described to me, they were a better security to that Town than the Fort is; for the Cannon lay level with the water and pointed horizontally, whereas all the guns in the Fort lay about forty feet above high water marks, and so are capable of less fire and ammunition.—N. Y. Col. Diet., IV: 555.

25 "The Lieutenant Governor in Council producing two several depositions against Cornelius Quick of this city Marriner setting forth that he had been on board Captain Kidd's sloop and had laden and taken from thence into his own sloop several Barrels of Goods and merchandise with Several Bagges of money and that he putt the same on shore on the Island Nassau. It is therefore ordered that the said Cornelius Quick be committed to the custody of the high sheriff of the city of New York for his offense aforesaid.—Councel Minutes (M.), VIII: 130 (Albany). See further Sept. 11.

Y. Hist. Soc. For the beginning of the war, see May 13, 1666, and for the superstructure, see Oct. 16, 1669. Regarding the bastions, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 944.

Another of the common council orders that "What Money Shall be disbursed by Mr John Euywatse for y^ Necessary Repair of y^ Barne and bridge att y^ Ferry be Allowed to him On Acc & that A Well be made and the Ground belonging to the City be Inclosed within fenc^e."—M. C. C., II: 84.

The common council orders "that the Mayor Agree with some person for the Keeping of An Hospital for the Maintenance of the poor of this City Upon y^ most Easy Terms that may be and also that he hire A House suitable for that Occasion."—M. C. C., II: 85.

After securing the landing-place granted by the legislature on May 8, the inhabitants of Queen Street obtain from the common council permission to build a market-house at Countess Key, at their own expense, "for the Conveniency and Ornament of the City."—M. C. C., II: 84. It was not built, however, until nearly seven years later; for, on June 20, 1706 (g. w.), pursuant to this permit of 1699 as explained in the Minutes), the common council ordered "that the Market house at the said Inhabitants Shall erect and build att their own Charge betwixt the houses of Capt. John D. Peyster and Bernardus Smith att the North End of the Slip in Countess Key Aforesaid [later known as the Fly Market slip—see Landmark List, III: 68] be Appropriated and Continued a public Market for the City ever."—Ibid., II: 302-3. It was first called the "Market-House at Countess Keys" but in the Bradford Map of 1730 (Pl. 27, Vol. I), it is called "Fly Market." It stood near the present intersection of Maiden Lane and Pearl St., in the section of the city known as Smith's Fly (or Flie). After being enlarged, then torn down in 1796, and rebuilt in 1797, it was named the Fish Market Block, 123-241.

An order is issued, on the petition of the mayor, for the demoltion of two bastions of the old wall.—Col. Coun. Min., 142. See Sept. May 12, 1666, regarding the building of the city hall; also, Aug. 18, 1669.

The news reaches England that, after examination, Capt. Kidd was committed to prison, and commissioners appointed by his Majesty to examine the evidence of theArchbishop of Canterbury. It is said that he had an uncle, to the end there might be a true inventory taken thereof; and his lordship sent to the said commissioners the present of jewels which Kidd had caused to be given to his lady, estimated at 10,000£, an account of which his lordship has dispatched hither to the commissioners of trade, and to know how [Kidd] shall be disposed of." Soon after, in September, "His majesties ship the Rochester, captain Ellis commander," sailed to New York, "to bring over captain Kidd the pyrate and his crew," to be tried in England.—"Diary of Narcissus Luttrel," in Hist. Mag. (1868), 2d ser., III: 293. See, further, Nov. 2.

Bellomont informs the lords of the treasury: "The Collector of N. Yorke writes to me that this proves the worst year that ever was known for the Customs . . . the Acts of Assembly with grant a Revenue to the King are so lame and weakly pen'd y^ merchants & others shud them upon all occasions & the Revenue Lestures, which are for the most part lost, by the want of honest Judges and Councill for the King, there is not such a parcel of vile Knaves and Jacobites as those that practice the Law in the province of New York, not one of them a Barrister but so far from that, that one of 'em was a fishing master for a Groyer by trade, a third (and he Coll. fletchers Bosome friend Lavourite & Land Jobber) Condemned to be hang'd in Scotland for Blaspheming and burning the Bible, the rest as bad as those I have describ'd: all Ignorant and usurpers of that hono^r profecion; their only skill Consisting in Chisme, and stirring up the people to Brgage the titles of Estates with one another and debach them from their duty and afection to his Maj^ there is not a man in the province professing the Law that I have not of their being Jacobites, and sinister practices, a softer word my Lord Bacon uses for knavish Lawyers. I should not be thus particular in my Character of the Lawyers in N. York, but in order to prevail with your Lordship to promote with the rest of the ministers (for I have repesented this mischief to 'em all) an effectual cure, an honest understanding Lawyer (well vers'd in Exchequer practice Especially) would deserve a 1000 £ 1 a Year to be made Cheife Justice of that province, and another good Lawyer to be Attorney General there, would deserve 500£ a year salary, the assembly of N. York are so sensible what a pest the present Lawyers are to the province, that this last session they delivered me a petition, and Remonstrance, wherein among other grievances, they Complain of the Lawyers as one grievance, and desire that the administration of the publick business in the courts be carried into better hands and they will be at the Charge of it."—From transcript in Library of Congress, box 63, of the original letter which is with the Rawlison MSS. (cited A, 275, fo. 65b) in the Bodleian Library, Oxford.

The governor's council orders that Thomas Clarke be arrested for his connection with Capt. Kidd.—Col. Coun. Min., 143. On Oct. 18, he denied having received goods from Capt. Kidd's sloop, but admitted that Cornelius Quick delivered to him, such goods from Mrs. Kidd.—Ibid., 144. On Feb. 28, he swore that everything on board Kidd's sloop had been delivered to the govern-our with an inventory.—Ibid., 184.

John Champlain, of London, is commissioned by Bellomont to be agent for the province of New York at the court at Whitehall and elsewhere.—N. Y. Col. Diet., IV: 587.

The common council grants a petition of the inhabitants of Harlem that they "may Annually Choose three persons of the said Town to have the Determination of all petit Trespasses Under £ 50 Value of fourty Shillings According to former Custom." Their complaint is that "Coming to New York over Every frivolous Occasion is a Grievous Prejudice to them." The election shall be on September (this last-day of St. Michael the Archangel), and the successful candidates shall come to New York on October 14 to be sworn in by the mayor.—M. C. C., II: 86-87. The original of this petition is filed in the city clerk's record-room. The document states that the inhabitants of Harlem are "Chiefly Adicted to £5 Improvement of Husbandry and have by their Trade and Enterprise to the Privilege of holding a Mercantile Branch in the American, or £5 Determining of Petit Prossesses [small law cases] which might Arise Among them
"The Courant of the Ground Wherein the Old Market House stands on in which John Ellison lives, he said John Ellison having Relinquished his Agreement [see below] with the Mayor, for a certain building to be erected near the bridge in this City which has Since been called the Market house & Whereas Your Petitioners have been informed that the same was by this board to let out for some term of years to one Mr. Ellison on condition to erect a new Building on the same ground & pay as a rent Twelve Pounds a year to the City."

"Yo' Petition" therefore humbly Pray that the said Agreement may be quashed and that the same ground may be allowed to yo' Petitioners for the use of this City, they offering to erect there a Convenient place for the meeting of Merchants on their own Costs & Charges, it being a very Convenient place for the same being near the Custom house & will be of Ornament to the City & also pay Twelve pounds a year to the City they having the Benefit of the Stow money of merch' goods allowed them."

From the original undated petition (which has 83 signatures), in metal file labeled: "Filed Papers Island", city clerk.

The common council appoints a committee the same day "to Consult with the Inhabitants of the said South Ward what Building they propose to make On the premises And What Yearly Rent they will Pay for the same."—M. C. C., II: 93. This committee reported on Feb. 10, 1700, and the common council ordered "that the said Market house be Granted to the 3d Ward for the Term of fifty Years they the said inhabitants in Two Years Time Erecting A Publick building According to the Moddell Exhibited to this Court they Yielding the Yearly Rent of Twelve pounds & keeping & delivering the same in good Repair at the Expiration of the said Termes, . . ."—Ibid., II: 99. It appears from a memorandum, entered in the Minutes under date of April 13, 1700, that "the Inhabitants of the south Ward or their Assigns have Liberty to Erect A Building on the West Side of ye Custom House Bridge Running from the Street into the Dock," 127 feet in length and 70 feet in width. Ibid., II: 105. It should be observed that the above petition, as transcribed from the original MS., seeks permission to erect "a Convenient place for the meeting of Merchants;" and that the common council granted permission to erect "A Publick building." This therefore appears to be a proposal to erect a merchants' exchange. But the Excise by the location is not the same as that of the "Exchange" shown on the Burgess View (1717), and the conclusion is that the specifications proposed in the above petition were never executed. This conclusion is confirmed by the fact that, on June 30, 1701, it was ordered "that the Old market house near the Custom house bridge be done away; and the New Market house for the Benefit and Convenience of all persons that shall Resort thereunto in as full and Ample manner as any Other Market house or market place within this City now is or Lawfully Ought to be."—Ibid., II: 146. The old market-house remained until 1730 (q. e.). For the inauguration of the first merchants' exchange, see March 24, 1670 for the next, see June 19, 1754.

The foundation of the new city hall having been laid in September, 1699 (see Sept. 20), the common council appoints a committee to make an estimate, with the help of carpenters and bricklayers, "of What Stone Bricks Lime Timber and Other Materials will be Necessary to be provided & Employed for ye' building of the New City Hall the Next summer and also what will be the Charge thereof."—M. C. C., II: 92. On Nov. 1, this committee reported their estimate as $1,513,185; and it was ordered that they "doe Agree with Persons for the finishing of the same Manner of person who will undertake Either by the Great or by the day the building and finishing of the said Structure att such Reasonable and Easy Terms as may be most beneficial and Profitable for the said City," and it was ordered "that A true and distinct Account of the materials and several Payments be kept by the said Committee."
Money was raised by the sale and renting of land, as well as by taxation, to pay the debts due to building the hall—M. C. G., IV: 112, 115 (Nov. 7 and 30, 1700); II: 116 (Dec. 3, 1700). From time to time the tax was paid, and that the mayor's warrants be issued to the treasurer to pay various persons for materials and services.—Ibid., II: 150, 155; and "Ledger No. 1," pp. 101, 102, 103, 110, 116. One of these items, paid Oct. 13, 1701, was for "bear [beer] delivered att the building the New City Hall."—M. C. G., IV: 155.

On the court of general sessions, and the court room in the City Hall made convenient for the Court to sit in this winter and that he issue his warrant to the treasurer for the payment of the charge thereof."—Ibid., II: 185. It was nearly two years, however, before this could be done. On Oct. 26, 1702, the court resolved to petition the general assembly that a law be made for the finishing the City Hall to be fit for the Gen Assembly to sit in.—Ibid., II: 206. It does not appear in the Assembly Journal or the Minutes of the Common Council that such a law was made; but on Feb. 26, 1703, the Common Council ordered that the Speaker shall "finish the City Hall so that the Court may soon be convened there."

On Dec. 29, 1701, it was ordered that "the Mayor do take care to have the Court room in the City Hall made convenient for the Court to sit in this winter and that he issue his warrant to the treasurer for the payment of the charge thereof."—Ibid., II: 185. It was nearly two years, however, before this could be done. On Oct. 26, 1702, the court resolved to petition the general assembly that a law be made for the finishing the City Hall to be fit for the Gen Assembly to sit in.—Ibid., II: 206. On Dec. 29, 1701, it was ordered that "the Mayor do take care to have the Court room in the City Hall made convenient for the Court to sit in this winter and that he issue his warrant to the treasurer for the payment of the charge thereof."—Ibid., II: 185. It was nearly two years, however, before this could be done. On Oct. 26, 1702, the court resolved to petition the general assembly that a law be made for the finishing the City Hall to be fit for the Gen Assembly to sit in.—Ibid., II: 206. It does not appear in the Assembly Journal or the Minutes of the Common Council that such a law was made; but on Feb. 26, 1703, the Common Council ordered that the Speaker shall "finish the City Hall so that the Court may soon be convened there."

On Apr. 11, 1704, the common council ordered that if Mr. Johannes Provost do deliver unto the Treasurer of this City all Books Papers and writings belonging to or relating to the building of the City Hall and that his Receipt be a sufficient discharge unto him for the same.—Ibid., II: 257.

There were later payments for materials and labour used in constructing the Winckley's Changes, and the payment of "4 l. 16s. 6d. for the Assembly entry of May 12, 1704, above cited; or possibly as early as Oct. 1703.—See M. C. G., IV: 240.

The map printed in the year 1700 is of a small 40 volume of 52 p., bearing the long title Gospel Order Revised, Being an Answer to a Book lately set forth by the Reverend Mr. Increase Mather, President of Harvard College, &c. entitled, The Order of the Gospel, &c. Dedicated to the Churches of Christ in New England. By sundry Ministers of England. A copy is preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library; it is not mentioned by Evans in his Am. Bibliography. As in the case of an earlier book of religious controversy (New England's Spirit of Persecution Transmitted to Pennsylvania), with similar imprint, a careful comparison of the text on the typed pages with the text in the book shows that Bradford was the printer. Such a view is made possible by the declaration of Bartholomew Green, the Boston printer of that day (who had declined to publish it himself, because it was a work of controversy, and he had no license from the governor of Mass. Bay to do so), that it was "printed at New York." —See Green's handbill, reproduced by Thomas in Hist. of Printing (1816), II: 448.

Thomas found special interest in this item because, as he stated (p. 94), it was, with the exception of the laws, "the only book printed in New York as early as 1700, which I have seen, that contains more than twenty pages." We know now that he was mistaken. Cf. Truth Advanced, published by Bradford in 1694 (G 5). For the earliest product of Bradford's press, see April 10, 1693.

The names of many of the common articles of dry-goods of this period have a strange sound to-day, as, for example: blue and red penitons, hose-tyks, sarge, fryo, xaray, drugget, mobeling, camerche, cating, calks, gardelet, Hollands, Otter, tassor, neeckes, damask estemyns, gabon, talicie, brandtstuk, russell, and bangle. —Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 507–8.

An inventory of the domestic establishment of Peter Jacobs Marius (whom Valentine describes as "the last of the Knickerbockers," the surviving representative of the Dutch merchants of New Amsterdam), which was on the south side of Pearl St., between the present Whitehall and State Sts. (see Castello Plan, II: 280), included the following articles: One silver tankard, three silver salts-cellars, two silver beakers, silver mustard-pot and spoons, 27 silver sweetmeat spoons, four silver nutmegs, nine silver cups with two ears, one old-fashioned salver, one silver mug and cover, a baby's silver chafing-dish and cradle, a silver fork and cup, a parcel of buttons and other broken silver; three gold chains, six gold rings, three gold buckles, four pairs of gold buttons, a gold boxkin and gold earring; two pair of silver buckles, one amber necklace, two silver-handled knives, one pair of silver-handled scissors, a small Dutch Bible, tipped with silver, and a chain, etc. The inventory included also a full variety of furniture.

—Ibid., 516. See also Abstracts of Wills (1892), 314, 324, 355.

Valentine also describes, under this date, the style of life of William Smith, giving an inventory of his household goods (presumably in New York), and the stock on his Long Island farm. These included "a coach with cushions and harness." —Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 516–17.

Bellofont is among the lords of trade that the collector reports that "this has been the worst year that ever was known in New York for the Revenue by reason of the great scarcity of Sugar, Rum and Molasses at Barbados, and the other Islands and of Winzes at the Madera's; for from those Articles the Customs of New York do chiefly arise." —N. Y. C. Decs., IV: 600. See Sept. 25, 1701.

The common council orders "that the Mayor Alderman D: 16 Peyster Alderman D: Riener Mr Peter Willemse and Mr Brasier be a Committee of this board for the Managing & Supervising the building of the New City Hall for the publick Service of this City [see summary note on 1700]." These men are hereby empowered to treat with any person or persons who will undertake Either by the Great or by the day the building and finishing of the said Structure att such Reasonable and Easy Terms as may be most beneficial and Profitable for the Said City. and to the End that all things and Materials Needfull for the said building be duly Satisfied and paid to such persons are Employed therein it is 1700 Ordered that the Mayor doe Issue his Warrants from time to time as there shall be Occasion on the Treasurer of the said City for the payment of the Respective sums which shall become due for ye Service Aforesaid. And that A true and distinct Account of the Matrials and several Payments be kept by the said Committee.”—M. C. C., II: 97.

The city treasurer is ordered to pay Alderman Schuyler six shillings “for Mending the Wall of the little bridge” (see Oct. 12, 1693).—M. C. C., II: 97. The “little bridge” was apparently the name given to the plank covering over the outlet of the ditch or sewer (Ref. III: 749) at the foot of Broad St. (see ibid., III: 750).

On April 3, 1700 (q.v.), it is mentioned as being “by the house of Capt. Cornelius D’Peyster,”—that is, near the corner of Water and Broad Sts. (see Feb. 19, 1700). The common council, on March 23, 1705 (q.v.), ordered that stairs be built “in the Dock on each Side of the little bridge.” Gradually the dock was filled in on both sides of the little bridge to a point considerably beyond the outlet of the sewer, leaving a stagnant slip (see May 4 and June 14, 1688), which became a public nuisance. On Aug. 20, 1703 (q.v.), the common council ordered that this space be filled in and the sewer extended to the “entering of the dock” (that is, even with the wall or wharf), and it was ordered that the bridge itself be re-covered with boards “A little higher than the Street.” This spot was referred to as the “little bridge” as late as Nov. 11, 1731 (q.v.). On June 18, 1717 (q.v.), the city council ordered, among other repairs to the dock and sewer, the extension of the sewer through the dock into the open river, and the erection over it (as a protection) of “A Good and substantial Bridge from the Markett house fronting the Dock to the Dock’s mouth.” This bridge, usually referred to as the “Long Bridge,” is shown in the Burgis View (Pl. 53, Vol. I). On Sept. 22, 1773 (q.v.), the common council ordered that 20 feet of the long bridge south of the exchange be arched, and the remainder boarded and “a Number of Posts . . . fixed at such places near the said Bridge . . . sufficient to prevent Carts from passing over & injuring the same.”—Ibid., VIII: 445. See 1700.

The common council appoints a committee “to View the place On which Jasper Nespeptt intends to build a Mill att Kings Bridge and make Reporte to this Board whether the Erecting the said Mill will hinder the passage of Boats & Sloops Round this Island.”—M. C. C., II: 97. See Nov. 24, 1692. For the committee’s report, see Feb. 19. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961.

Lemoine d’Iberville takes possession of the Mississippi River for France, planting his colony at Poverty Point. He had entered the river on March 2, 1699. His colony did not thrive. French missions, introduced in this year, occupied various points on the river. In 1701, Iberville was in command of the French settlements in Louisiana. See July 9.

In the accounts general of the province is a payment of £6:10 “for making coats for the Bargemen,” and one of £3:10 “for making the Furnish for the Barge to go out Oct. 15, keeping another of £1:9, for sundries in the fort and Custom house Barge;” also payments “for sailors” and “for painting” of this barge. Entered in Conveyances, Liber XXX (register’s office, New York). The expenses of Oct. 15 are detailed in the Council Minutes, which refer to warrants issued to pay Francis Vincent for sails, Cornelius Lodge for paint, John Latham for carpenter work, Jean le Chevalier for carving work, John Cooley for blacksmith work, and John Owen for joiner’s work—all on the custom-house barge; while Robert Cramer was paid for rum for the “pinrace” workmen.—Col. Coun. Min., 170-51. There was another payment of £10:10 “for clearing out the barge crew.”—Conveyances, op, cit. See also No. 10, 1702.

“At a Meeting of the Justices & Vestry men of the said City on Wednesday y^ 24th Jan. 1699,” a committee is appointed “to Enquire for a Convenient house to serve this City for a house of Coroner & other Person belonging to be kept thereon; and upon what terms they can agree for the same, and make Reporte there of to the Mayor . . . in Order that Severall Idle Vagabonds in this City may no longer be a Charge to the same, but obliged to works as the Law directs.” On Feb. 15, this board “unanimously agreed with Coll. Abraham De Peyster for his house in the broad Street within this City at the corner of Princes Street,” at a rental of £2:5 to May 1, 1701, “which house is to be Imployed for the use of the poor of this City, and a house of Correction for the punishing of Vagabonds and Idle persons that are a nuisance and common grievance of ye Inhabitants of the same: that said Coll. Abraham De Peyster shall put the said house in good & sufficient Repair; and at the Expiration of the said Termes the said house shal be re-declared unto him in like good repair. The board agreed with Matthias Boeckhout “to keep the said poor house and house of Correction” at £5:0 per annum, the city to “find” him and his wife “with Meat and Drink, & other necessaries ( apparel excepted)”.—From a manuscript copy of Minutes of the justices and vestrymen, in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (in Box No. 1, N. Y. City Misc. MSS., 1759-1790).

The king directs Bellomont to send certain pirates from New York to England, with witnesses and evidence against them, that they may be tried and punished.—N. T. Col. Doc., IV: 603-4. These include Kidd, who was seized in Boston on July 6, 1699 (Ibid., IV: 584), and Clarke, his associate, who was taken to New York from Connecticut (Ibid., IV: 597). There were 40 pirates confined in Boston, Connecticut, New York, and Philadelphia in January (Ibid., IV: 601). Bellomont wrote the lords of trade, on Feb. 28, that he was sending the pirates in charge of Lieut. Hunt, who was going to England for the purpose of obtaining recruits (Ibid., IV: p. 611). These recruits, Bellomont planned, were to be given homesteads after a certain number of years’ service (Ibid., IV: 553). The pirates arrived in England on April 16 (q.v.). See also Addenda, Jan. 7, 26, 1699.

Daniel Latham, a Quaker, is examined regarding his connection with Capt. Kidd’s crew.—Col. Coun. Min., 145. See also July 20, Aug. 16, 1699.

In a petition to the common council, Cornelius de Peyster, John Bowne van Cortlandt, and Francis Vincent state: “That there is a Certain Place within this City nigh the Little Bridge which contrary to the design in laying out the said slip is become very noisous & a Coffin receptacle of dung & filth to the annoyance & infection of the inhabitants & whereby the dock of this City is filled with a great deal of mud to the prejudice of this City.” They therefore “Pray that the said Place may be filled up by the City & made even with the Street & a Gutter & grates laid under it for the conveying of the Water thro’ that comes down the great Street.”—From the original petition in “Filed Papers, 1700-1800,” city clerk’s record-room. De Peyster’s house, which he had built in 1699, “to be y° ornament of ye sayde City” (see Pl. 25, Vol. I, and description, I: 246), stood at the foot of Broad St. facing the dock (Water St.), while Van Cortlandt’s house stood on the opposite corner of Broad and Water Sts.; that is, it was the next house east, with Broad St. separating them (cf. Dec. 10, 1695). The council appointed Feb. 26, 1699, to examine these proprietors, and the Dockage is farmed for and take Care that the farmers doe forthwith performe the Conditions they are Obliged to . . .”—M. C. C., II: 100. Apparently, favourable action was not taken until Aug. 20, 1709 (q.v.).

The common council orders “that the sessions of the Mayor Court & Common Council be held for the City at the house of Gabriel Tompson in the single [Cinnet] Street [Wall St.] And that the Bell be hung there.”—M. C. C., II: 99. At the same house “the Court of Common Council” met, on Dec. 27 following, to lease the ferry.—Ibid., II: 119. This was while the new city hall was under construction. Tompson was paid for rental on Oct. 13.—Ibid., II: 155.

The house of Gabriel Thompson was a tavern at the sign of the White Lion, at the north-west corner of William and Wall Sts.—Liber Dredz, XXXI: 184 (New York). Here Thompson kept his inn until his death in 1720.—See Nov. 19, 1720. The Bank of Amsterdam now occupies the site. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981; Pl. 174, Vol. III. Thompson had evidently been a tavern-keeper since 1683, and perhaps earlier.—See March 15, 1684.

“The Committee Appointed to View the place Whereon Jasper Nespeppett Intended for a Mill at Wee House—In these words following (Vit?) Jan 26th 1699 [1700] pursuant to an Order of ye Common Council to us directed [see under Jan. 16, 1700] Wee have Viewed the place for Erecting A Mill at Kings bridge and Wee are of Opinion that the same be Granted to Jasper Nespeppett delivered unto him in like manner take out of the way the Stones and Rocks On the Other side therewith that the same may not hinder the Passage of Boats and Canows and when Any is to pass at their Reasonable Request he is [to shut this sluices
The petition of John Marsh was read praying the Grant of the Mill to be built at Kings Bridge be made to him and Jasper Nessegot he the said Marsh being the first Projector thereof.”—M. G. C., II: 99. See, further, Jan. 25, 1701.

Bellomont informs the lords of trade that the soldiers at New York are in arms, alleging “they are in Rags.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 612. See June, 1700.

Mar.

Merchants of New York petition the king, accusing Bellomont of being the cause of the “decey of Trade,” etc. They ask the king to bring back the province “to its former manner of Administracion use conformed with the Governor of any other place, to recite state its Inhabitants in their pristine peace, safety, and prosperity.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 624. Bellomont wrote to the lords of trade on Oct. 17, opposing their proposal to have the provinces of New York and Massachusetts Bay put under different governments. He also stated that he had “no advances to make to the merchants” unless it could be proved that he had governed “arbitrarily and oppress’d them in their trade, contrary to law,” etc. —Ibid., IV: 725.

The merchants of London make accusations against Bellomont, stating, as a fact of the Leislerian party in New York, and various acts of an extra-judicial character.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 620-23. On Oct. 17, Bellomont wrote to the lords of trade regarding these accusations, which he treated as “trash.” —Ibid., IV: 725-26.

Johanna Davis, on the complaint of Mrs. Davis, against John Rodman for intending to pull down a party wall between her house and the old city hall which he bought on Aug. 17, 1699.—Col. Coun. Min., 1: 455; see also May 25, and Aug. 17, 1699; May 9, 1700; Feb. 11, 1701.

We find various later references to the altered condition and ownership of the building. Du Similier wrote, about 1700: “Environ 1694 la viole maison de ville etoit de Pierre a l’endroit ou est present Brinkerhoff et vanwyck le coin de la petite rue qui va dans Bayard Street, derriere il y avoit une petite elevation en forme de coline.” From vol. lettered “Papers relating to N. Englend, New York,” etc., formerly belonging to Du Similier, now in Ridgeway Branch of the Library Co. of Philadelphia.

Again, in a report to the common council by the corporation counsel and the street commissioner, on Nov. 14, 1689, regarding title to certain lands in Wall St., it was stated that “the first Building occupied as City Hall was situated in Pearl Street at the corner of Counties (Countess) lane opposite Counties Slip at present in part owned by Mr. Abraham Brinkerhoef, the premises being divided after it was sold into two dwellings.”—M. G. C. (MS.), IV: 248.

As late as 1811, it was observed that “In the vaults and cellars of that corner of the Brinkerhoefs, its [the first city hall’s] ruins may yet be easily traced.” —Fay, Views in New York, 13. And in 1833, likewise, it was said that the first building used as a jail and court-house in New York “was the house of A. Brinkerhoof, corner of Dock and Counties streets, the dungeons [of which] are still to be seen in the cellar.”—T. R. De Forest, Olden Time in New-York, 38. The author examined the cellars in 1909, when some of the masonry, especially in the walks on the south side, appeared to date from the period of its erection.

The common council appoints a committee “to Enquire for A Convenient house to make A Powder house till such one [time] as the Citty Cao Provide one.”—M. G. C., II: 101. On April 9, the committee was given power to hire a building and fit it as a powder-house.—Ibid., II: 102. See further April 11.

The previous repository for powder had been Point Hollandia, a building of 1725 (see March 12, and Aug. 3, 1699). The several bastions had been demolished or were undergoing demolition (see Sept. 4, 1699), making a new repository necessary.

Bellomont examines the registers of all the vessels in the three provinces within his government, and finds that Boston has 25 ships of between 100 and 500 tons, and 39 ships of under 100 tons, containing 17 ketches, 27 brigantines, and 67 sloops—in all 194 vessels; and about 70 vessels of all sorts (11 being ships of good burden) belong to other towns of the province of Massachusetts Bay. New York has 6 ships above 8 and below 100 tons burden, 2 ketches, 2 brigantines, and 8 sloops. New Hampshire has 11 ships of good burden, 5 brigantines, 4 ketches, and 4 sloops. He reported on Nov. 28, 1700: “I believe one may venture to say there are no good vessels belonging to the town of Boston than to all Scotland and Ireland, unless one should reckon the small craft such as herring boats.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 790-91. Cf. July 7, 1698.

Abraham de Peyster conveys to John Ellsion “All that piece and parcel of ground Situate lying and being within the dock water . . . Adjoining and fronting to the bridge by the Custom house [Moore St.] at the south end of the warehouses of him the said Coll Abraham D’Peyster . . . contiguous and adjoining thereto which . . . is in breadth fronting the aforesaid bridge twenty-nine foot six inches and in the rear y’other breadth and is in depth att ye North End by the warehouse aforesaid sixteen foot four inches and att ye south end fronting the wharfe or Street which faces the great dock of ye said City & which leads to the little bridge [see Jan. 16, 1700] by the house of Capt. Cornelius D’Peyster sixteen foot, . . . Liber Deeds, XXIII: 144-45 (New York). For location of the custom-house bridge, the little bridge, etc., see diagram under year 1700.

The owners of Indian and negro slaves have neglected to restrain them “from associating together on the holy Sabbath in time of Divine Service to the Great Scandal of the Christian Profession and Religion.” The common council orders that if more than three congregate such slaves are to be punished as the law directs.—M. G. C., II: 103-3.

The common council revives the order that persons who neglect or refuse to pay before their houses shall be fined.—M. G. C., II: 103. See also Feb. 16, 1695.

The corner lot on the south-east corner of Broad and Pearl Sts., later the site of Fraunces Tavern, is conveyed by “Coll Stephen Van Cortlandt” and “Getteryus,” his wife, to their son-in-law, Stephen de Lancey. It is thus described: “All that certain corner lot or soft of ground lying and being in the dock ward of the City of New York . . . bounded on the north by the dock street on the east by the house and ground of Philip Freonch on the south by the ground of Samuel Bayard and on the west by ye said Broad Street.”—Liber Deeds, XXII: 147-59 (New York). Stephen, or Etienne, de Lancey, built a large brick house on this lot at some time subsequent to April 14, 1719 (p. 12), when he petitioned for a small piece of ground on the corner of Broad and Dock Sts., and stated that he was “now going to build” upon his lot. Before July 25, 1716 (p. 12), Col. Joseph Robinson, one of the firm of De Lancey, Robinson & Co. was occupying the house as a residence, remaining until his death, May 1719–20.—N. Y. Merc., May 28, 1759. On May 28, 1760, the firm of De Lancey, Robinson & Co. gave notice that they had “removed their Store to the House wherein the late Col. Joseph Robinson lived being the Corner House next the Royal Exchange.”—Ibid., May 25, 1761. By a conveyance dated in 1728, his son-in-law, Oliver de Lancey, Beverly Robinson, and James Parker, the heirs of Stephen de Lancey, sold this house and lot to Samuel Fraunces.—Liber Deeds, XXXVII: 62 (New York). Here Fraunces opened the famous Queen’s Head Tavern, probably before April 19, 1762, by which time John Jones had taken over the Mason’s Arms on Broadway, formerly kept by Fraunces.—N. Y. Merc., Apr. 19, 1762. The first notice, however, of Fraunces’s occupancy of the house was contained in an advertisement of July 26, 1762 (p. 8). See also Landmark Map Rel. Key, III: 978. For the earliest history of this site, see Castello Plan, I: 34-15.

The conveyance of April 14 to Stephen de Lancey came just after his marriage, on Jan. 25, to Anne, the daughter of Stephen van Cortlandt. It was, therefore, a conveyance from his father-in-law and mother-in-law.—See 1700.

Etienne (Stephen) de Lancey arrived in New York on March 20, 1691, when he was elected alderman in 1691. The city is indebted to him and John Moore for its first fire-engines.—See May 6, 1711.

The common council orders that “the bridge be Run Over to the Wharfe Cross the Dock And that the Dock on the West side of the Bridge be filled up Provided it be no Charge to the City.”—M. G. C., II: 104. The bridge of “the Bridge Bridge” and also the “Custom House Bridge,” is shown on the views and maps of the city made after the Dutch period (see Pls. 100 at seq., Vol. I). It was built in 1659, and extended in 1661. Landmark Map Rel. Key, III: 986. On the Labadist View of 1679-80 (Pl. 17, Vol. I), it appears for the last time on a view. The above order of 1700 the common council is explained by a memorandum in the "Conditions" for farming the docks and slips, issued on the same date, which reads as follows: "Memorandum that the Inhabitants of the south ward or their Assigns have Liberty to Erect A Building On the West Side of ye Custom house Bridge Running from the Street into the Dock one hundred and seventy-five feet, and in breadth Seventy foot, Any thing before Mentioned in the Above Condition Notwithstanding."—Ibid, II: 105. As the market house was not erected, it is quite probable that no filling in of the dock west of the custom-house occurred at this time.
On June 12, 1709 (q.v.), however, the common council, having secured the consent of the lessee of the dock (Christopher Denne), resolved that the "great Bridge by the Custom house be forthwith New built and Carried over the Dock to the wharf . . . ."
— Ibid, II: 379. A committee, appointed to investigate the situation, reported on Aug. 20, 1709 (q.v.). The Burgis View, of 1718 (Pl. 25, Vol. I), shows the dock west of the custom-house bridge entirely filled in. Regarding the proposed market-house, see Oct.
16, 1699. See also 1700, Addenda.

The common council orders that "A Powder house be forthwith built within this City." The mayor proposes to build one at his own expense, 40 by 24 ft. and store the high, enclosed, on a fence; his proposal is accepted and it is ordered that he "have ye Stones left of the Bastians to build ye Same." He is to have the use of it for 31 years, to charge 2s. 3d. for each barrel stored there and the fines imposed for keeping in each private house over 50 pounds of powder, monthly. After 1743 it is charged to the former in the way of "rations" to the lessee of the town-house.
Mayor Provost decided not to undertake the building, and on Nov. 11 following, by public notice, he sought proposals, on terms similar to the former ones (including the use of the "Stones which are not used for building the City Hall"), for the construction of a powder-house before May 1, 1701.—Ibid, II: 134. No such structure appears to have been built until the governor took up the matter with his council the next year. See May 28, 1702.

New "Conditions for giving ye 6th Dock & Slips of ye City of New York" are framed by the common council.—M. C. C.
II, 101-2. See Sept. 28, 1694. The foulness of the dock during the term of Thomas Clarke as dock-master had been a matter of concern to the common council several times.—Ibid, II: 80, 97, 100, 101-2. It is, therefore, now stipulated that the new lessee "Shall att his own proper Cost and charge well and Sufficiently Clean the said Dock & Slip in the Dock of all the Mudn & filth therein Sde as till they finde A sandy Bottom and . . . Keep the same Clean." He is, furthermore, to keep the wharves enclosing the dock in good repair to the expiration of his lease.
"Towards the Cleaning" the lessee is to receive the next six quarters of the hire (amounting to £3 per quarter) so far as the market-master may think that the task was recognized as no slight one. Under these conditions the docks and slips were "demised" to Philip French for £40 per annum.—Ibid, II: 104-5. See May 20, 1702.

A petition of Michael Hawdon, regarding the cellar leased by him under the custom-house (see Jan. 17, 1695), is referred to

Copshee was read and granted.—M. C. C., II: 107. "Copshee"

The general assembly passes a "An act against Jesuits & popish preists." The act recites that Roman Catholic missionaries have for some time resided in the remote parts of this province and adjacent colonies, and have stirred up the Indians to sedition. The law therefore requires "That all and every Jesuit and Seminary Preist missionary or other Spiritual or Ecclesiastical person made or ordained by any Authority power or Jurisdiction derived Challenged or p'ended from the Pope or See of Rome now residing with in this province or any part thereof shall depart from and out of the Same at or before the first day of November next in this present year Seventeen hundred." The penalty for failure to obey was personal imprisonment, and in some cases death. The law was death, as in case of Idony. Lesser punishments were prescribed for persons who should knowingly conceal and succor any of the Roman Catholic clergy.—Cal. Laws N. Y., II: 428; Eccles.
Rec., I: 1530-70. "This represented the culmination of the anti-Catholic feeling of the period, which was reached by the Rev.

At a conference between Bellomont and sachems of the Five Nations at Albany, Bellomont says: "I wish you would send two or three Sachems soon out of each Nation to be kept at School at New York, where I will take care to have them taught to write and read both English and Indian, and they shall be well clothed and dyeded at the King's charge and after three or four years that they are perfect in their writing & reading they shall return home to you and other boys shall come in their places." —N.Y. Col. Divs., IV: 73. The sachems replied the next day: "that is a matter that relates to our 'wives, who are the sole disposers of their children while they are under age."—Ibid., IV: 738.

Nicholas Burger agreed to release to John Rodman, in fee simple, a piece of ground "in the Rear of the late City Hall," which was granted to him on June 23, 1690. The consideration was that the city pay Burger £15—M.C.C., II: 110.

A committee of the common council is appointed to make an exchange of "some land lying Near Inclamberg."—M.C.C., II: 112. This is the first mention of this piece in the Minutes. It is variously spelled: Inclamen Bergh, Inclamberg, Inklanbergh, Inklanberger.—See Index to the printed Minutes. Valentine defines it as "Fire beacon hill, a name of Dutch origin, and of very ancient date." from which he concludes it "would seem to denote a hillock that served as a beacon to the people of New Amsterdam the approach of savage foes ..." This hill was "situated near the present Thirty-sixth street and Fourth avenue; it was formerly a part of the common lands of the city, and was sold by the corporation in 1806, for sixty-two thousand dollars; the property embraced thirty-two acres of land."—Man. Com. Coun., (1595), 468. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 966.

A petition from John Marsh is read in the common council, praying leave "to build a Mill on flowing Island Near Hell Gate." It is ordered that he have Liberty to build the said Mill on the said Island Provided the same belong to the City."—M.C.C., II: 112. John Marsh subsequently built his mill at Flooding Island, in the East River, at Hell Gate, and it thereafter became known as Mill Rock. The island was fortified by the erection of a block-house upon it in 1814. This is shown on Pl. 82-A, Vol. III, and described, III: 754. Mill Rock has also been variously known as "Gibbow's" and "Leland's" Island.—Liber Deeds, MDCCCXLIV: 27-30 (New York).

The rector of Trinity Church informs the vestry that "his Excel the Govd" did send him for last night & desire him to call together his and the right Honour the Lords of the Crown have Liberty to set benches in the Isles of the Church for the Conveniency of the Soldiers there being so Chaplin at present to the garrison." Granted, provided "the Church Wardens be consulted in the ordering & placing of said Benches."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

The vestry makes an agreement with John Ellis, a joiner, to build "a handsome gallery in the West end of the Church from the South door to the North according to a Draft thereof made by Mr Ercets;" also "to build the pews thereto, to make a pair of stairs in the Steeple ... to make the door from the Bellfry into the Gallery & to finish this work against April or May next."—Ibid., II: 115.

The common council orders that the mayor's warrant be issued to Michael Hawdon for "Such sum of Money as was Expended in liquors in Making his Majesties forces drink on their Arrival here from England."—M.C.C., II: 115. It does not appear that this warrant was ever issued at this time, however, and on Feb. 1, 1709, Hawdon was paid £1119 "for Strong Liquors delivered to several soldiers on their Arrival here from England ... in the year 1700."—Ibid., II: 159. See Dec. 1, 1702.

The governor appoints Isaac de Riemer mayor.—M.C.C., II: 115. The mayor's warrant was dated Nov. 30, 1701 and expires Oct. 14, 1702.—Ibid., II: 159. For a brief sketch of his life see Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 397; Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 34.

Alderman Evert Beyvanke succeeds Isaac de Riemer (see Sept. 29, 1699) as treasurer of the city.—M.C.C., II: 117. Beyvanke was replaced by Nicholas Roosevelt on Sept. 29, 1701 (9.19), he refused to render an accounting for his term of office (see Nov. 4, 1702).

The following declaration of loyalty to the crown is made by members of the common council: "Whereas there has been a horrid and Detestable Conspiracy against the Government & Constitution of this Province by Papists and Other Wicked and Treacherous Persons for Assassinating his Majesties Royall person in Order to Enforce an Invasion from France to Subvert our Religion Laws and Liberties, Wes Whose Names are hereunder written doe heartily sincerely and solemnly protest Testifie and Declare that his present Majesty King William in Rightfull and Lawfull Kings of these Realms and Worlde Mutually promise and Engage to Stand by and Assist Each Other to the utmost of Our power in the Support and Defence of his Majesties Most Sacred person & Government Against the late King James the pretended Prince of Wales and all their Adherents, and in Case his Majesty Come to any Violence or untimely death which God forbid wee doe hereby freely and Ueunaniuously Oblige Our Selves Mutually to Associate and Stand by Each Other in Revenging the Same upon his Enemies and their Adherents and in Supporting and Defending the Succession of the Crown made in the Person of the said King William and Queen Mary Enacted an Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subjects and Settling the Succession of the Crown. About this date, William Penn suggested to Bellomont that "It would be much for the dispatch for trade and business, if a mint for small silver to the value of 6d were allowed in the City of New York for prevention of clipping and filing as well as wearing." (Nothing ever came of this proposal.) He also suggests that there be a common standard of value for all the northern colonies.—N.Y. Col. Divs., IV: 757.

Bellomont writes to the lords of trade of the difficulty he has in borrowing money to pay for "substituting the soldiers," saying "Why, I have not for one day any idea of having any money, but have let me have money, I should have been undone."—N. Y. Col. Divs., IV: 720. See also Daly, Settlement of the Jews in N. Y., 28.

As Augustine Graham (see Jan. 19, 1695) is found to be a "man not to be depended upon," Pieter Courtelieu (Cortelouy) is appointed surveyor of the province.—Cal. Coun. Min., 170. Cadwallader Colden was the next to hold this office (see April 21, 1720).

The governor appoints Samuel Clowes a surveyor, he having studied many years under John Flamstead, his majesty's mathematician in England.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 277. He was sworn in next day.—Cal. Coun. Min., 150.

The provincial council issues a warrant to pay Francis Chappell for rent of a committee-room at his tavern.—Cal. Coun. Min., 150.

The common council orders that the mayor appoint "A Con- stables Watch to Consist of A Constable and twelve able men to be the Watch of this City to take Care to Keep and preserve the peace. And that the Mayor and Alderman Edward Ward doe take their turns and that the High Constable take Care the said Watch be duly sett and kept And that the Mayor Provide fire wood for the same."—M.C.C., II: 120. No watch was established for the summer season until 1714. Five months of service in the winter, from about Nov. 1, were regularly arranged for.—Ibid., II: 207, 243, 281, 364, 454.

Abraham Gouveneur is appointed recorder of the city by Gov. Bellomont, and his commission entered on the minutes.—M.C.C., II: 119. The appointor was a prominent Leidener, and was elected clerk at the time of the rebellion in 1689.—See Oct. 1, 1689.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1700 In Cal. Gown Min., 150, Gouverneur is spoken of as being appointed Oct. 26 is meant, who had been appointed by Fletcher as an anti-Leislerian (see Sept. 1, 1692), and, therefore, was not in Bellomont's favour.—See also Sept. 6.

18 The recrues from Ireland, whom Bellomont describes as a "parcel of the vilest fellows that ever wore the King's livery, the very scum of the army in Ireland," arrive at New York, and mutiny, demanding "full sterling pay, and sea pay during their voyage," but succumbing to the demands of the fort without arms and a few at a time. When he has 500, he arms them and then the soldiers submit. He reports to the lords of trade that "all the Townsmen and Merchants of all parties have been very unanimous this day in showing their zeal to suppress the mutiny."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 770. A court-martial condemned four of the mutineers and two were shot.—Ibid., IV: 781.

A deed of this date indicates the location of the early syna- gogue. It is a conveyance from Jacob "Melyen" of Boston to Katherine Kerfbyl, widow, of "a house and lot on the north side of the street, bounded south by Mill street [76.6 ft.], west [110.6 ft.], and north [78 ft.], by the house and ground of David Provost, Esq., and Lawrence Van Hook, east [97.4 ft.] by the house and ground of John Harpending, now commonly known by the name of the Jews' Synagogue."—Ibid., Deeds, XXIII: 359; "Points in . . . N. Y. Jewish Hist." by Dyer, in Publications, Am. Hist. Soc., III: 49. See also Castello Plan, in Vol. II. From this deed it appears that Harpending's lot was 28 feet front, and Melyen's lot . . . was 76.6 feet.

Dyer, op. cit., III: 51. Dyer locates this "first Jewish synagouge of North America, and probably of the Western Hemisphere," at No. 8 So. William St.—Ibid., III: 520. Miss Jennie F. Macar- thy, historical expert of the Title Guarantee and Trust Co., traces its location by title search to No. 16 So. William St. This was the first synagogue of the Congregation Shearith-Israel.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 929.

Nov. 17 The militia of the province of New York numbers 3,182 men, — of whom the city and county of New York supply 684. For master-rolls of the officers, see N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 807-11.

2 The new City Hall on Wall St, is in process of construction, the common council orders "That for the future this Court of Common Council doe sit at the City Hall the last saturday in Every Month in Order to hear any publick business that may be brought before them."—M. C. C., II: 122. This reference probably means that meetings of the common council are to be held only once a month, on the last Saturday, "lest it refer to the mayor's court, however, as the sessions of the common council were not always held on Saturdays. It should also be observed that the tavern or other place where the common council met, while the new city hall was being constructed, received the title "City Hall" in the Minutes. The occupation of the new hall began late in 1793 or early in 1794.—See summary, Oct. 16, 1699.

The common council orders that "the Mayor Provide firewood for Bonfires" on Nov. 4 and 5, the former date "being the birth day of our sovereign Lord King William" and the latter being "an Ordinance of the said day."—M. C. C., II: 121. This is the first record in these Minutes of the bonfires being used to celebrate these or other stated events. There are, however, two earlier references to bonfires, one, on May 6, 1693, being a payment for wood for a bonfire, and the other, on Jan. 16, 1695, for "fire wood Capt. George Cunliffe & Cash paid for firewood for A Bonfire."—Ibid., I: 375. 374. After 1700, annual celebrations became more and more a feature of the city's life, on the birthday anniversary of the English sovereign, the accession to the throne, the coronation, and the discovery of the "Gunpowder Treason plot, 1605," for other events. The place where the bonfire was held is almost invariably referred to as "the usual place.

The exceptions are as follows: On Aug. 18, 1715, it was mentioned as "the Green before the Fort" on Feb. 6, 1714, it was "the usual place in this City before the Fort" on Oct. 20, 1719, the celebration of the king's coronation, evidently without a bonfire, was at the house of "M's Catalina Post Widdow" from 1724 to 1735, inclusive, the bonfire was at "the usual Publick place" on July 10, 1745, "it was "without Spring Gardin;" and on Oct. 19, 1755, it was "in the Common House."—See under these dates; also Nov. 4, 1694; March 17, 1703; Feb. 6, 1703.

The provincial legislature passess an Act for the Encouraging of the brewing of Beer and making of Malt within this province.

The act states that this industry has been discouraged by "the great Quantity of Malt furnished at the work house to prevent this import duty of nine shillings per barrel of beer and one shilling per bushel of malt is imposed.—Cal. Laws N. Y., IV: 439.

It is ordered by the common council that three parcels of land be sold to the dehby for building the new city hall and ferry-house, and to meet other public charges. One parcel is near William Beckman's and Mr. Sydcham's land at the "Bowery;" another lies on the north side of Tennis Isle; and the third is near Henry Cordaz's, "by Inclausberg."—M. C. C., II: 122, 125, 128.

At a town meeting in Harlem two superintendents of highways are chosen.—Harlem Regt. (MS.), 648.

The governor's council orders that barracks be erected outside the fort.—Cal. Coun. Min., 151. On Nov. 27, it was ordered that bedding be provided for the soldiers.—Ibid. It is probable that the governor's council, to the order of 1690, "requisitions fromRecruits in Ireland" who arrived on Oct. 28 (p. 20), and who are described as "the vilest fellows that ever wore the King's livery."

Capt. Benjamin Faneuil sells oak plank, latin, lead, etc., to the city for use in the new city hall. His account for £131557 was paid Nov. 21, 1707.—M. C. C., II: 359.

In the city's general account is a payment (no day or amount given) for building "his Majesty's Ship fortune," and, on Nov. 27, a payment of £56 for Rigging &c for the ship fortune.—Entered in Commenancies, Liber XXX (register's office, New York).

In a letter to the lords of trade, Bellomont reviews the case against the mutineers of whom he wrote on Oct. 28 (p. 28). Their leader, Corcomor M'Corrie, and one Robert Cotterell, "an Ensign in the late King James's Popish Army in Ireland," have been shot for the mutiny. He reports that "some of the lawyers here had put it in their heads that in time of peace it was against the law of England to exercise martial law" also that he told the mutineers that they knew very well that the lawyers here "broke English laws every day, and were disaffected to the present Gov-

A town meeting in Harlem two superintendents of highways are chosen.—Harlem Regt. (MS.), 648. He explains the promising character of the province as a wine-growing country, and otherwise productive.

On the comparative number of vessels in the three provinces under his jurisdiction (see April, 1700) but is unable to do so in regard to imports and exports. "Colonnell Courtland tells me there was this last year imported at 25, 26 cent (which is the duty on English goods) here at New York to the value of £15,000. The said duty has amounted to £2000 this money."—Ibid., II: 321. Boston merchants "computed that Boston had four times the trade of New York, and New York four times the trade of New Hampshire; but I afterwards examined the entries and clearing of all the three Custom Houses and found that the trade of New York was almost as great as that of Boston, and the trade of New Hampshire (except for lumber and about 1500 quintals of fish) not the tenth part of New York, from the 25th of December. 98 (1698) to the 25 of December. 99 (1699)."

He blames Fletcher's extravagant grants of land for the back- wardness of trade of New York, and is surprised to find here want for land that several families within my own knowledge and observation are removed to the new country (a name they give to Pennsylvania and the Jerseys) for, to use Mr. Graham's expression to me and that often repeated too, what man will be such a fool to become a base tenant to Mr. Dellius Collonel Schuyler, Mr. Livingston (and so he ran through [the] whole rule of our New York town for creating a river that man can for a song purchase a good freehold in the Jersey!"

"... Mr. Ranslaers grant of 24 miles square, in the centre of which stands the town of Albany was not of Collonel Fletcher's passing, neither was Mr. Livingston's, of 16 miles long and 20 or 25 broad, but was as extraordinary grants as any that his land reaches 30 miles in length on Nassau Island, which is the prime part of this Province. I know no merit Mr. Nichols has, except his being broker between Coll. Fletcher and the pirates, and being affected to the government, and the chief incendiary and author of Isaac Royall's may pass for virtue; otherwise his grants ought to be looked into as soon as any of the rest.

"... I believe no part of the King's dominions is under so loose a management as these three Provinces are, or that practice unlawful trade so much." He describes some of these conditions at Boston and elsewhere. "Here at New York the merchants run all the goods they can, and too much unlawful trade there is. That from Madagascar seems to be at a stand at present, and I think piracy too is in it's wane."

He concludes: "The harbour of New York ought to be well fortified, or 'tis odds if this town be not laid in ashes the next winter."

"The old part of the house in the Fort here is falling down, and is so one of the soldiers barracks [see Jan. 2, 1701], and how to repair them I cannot tell; the revenue is so clogged with anticipations that we can apply no part thereof to those uses."

"The old part of the house in the Fort here is falling down, and is so one of the soldiers barracks [see Jan. 2, 1701], and how to repair them I cannot tell; the revenue is so clogged with anticipations that we can apply no part thereof to those uses.

30 Bellomont complains to the lords of trade regarding James Graham being both attorney-general and recorder, and of his corruption in office. When the mayor told Graham that "the city were now in the power of the French and the war," Graham advised the city the tax that is brought from the country. Bellomont considers it "tresson to levy money on the subject without an act of Parliament or of an Act of Assembly." He finds it necessary to name a new recorder."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 781-96.

Bellomont informs the lords of trade that "it appears plainly the [Dongan] Charter of New Yorke is not a legal Charter, for the Original I have lately seen; 'tis sealed with the Duke of York's seal, and neither the Great Seal of England nor Seal of the Province.

Yet it bears date the 23rd of King James, so that the whole foundation is wrong. In strictness this is no City, and all the judgments that have been pass'd in their Mayor's Court are void; yet Colonel Dangan I am told, and Mr. Graham, got a good sum of money for this Charter. I send you the printed Copy of the said Charter."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 812. The same objection was made in 1691 (see Addenda).Mr. Benson has stepped into his place in the time of Gov. Montgomerie.—See Feb. 11, 1711.

27 The common council appoints a committee "to Demise the ferry," this afternoon, together with "the New Brick house Barne and Pen thereto belonging," for seven years beginning March 25. The conditions of the lease are similar to those of Feb. 2, 1699 (q.v.). Instead of "security," as provided for in that lease, however, the former shall "Give Bond with such sufficient surety" Dec. 27, as the common council shall approve. Instead of the indefinite providing Hudson's call for regarding his quarterly payments, this lease requires that he "Shall be Obliged to Pay the Rent of the Ferry [for] the house &c." (see description of Burgis View, I: 245-46) to the treasurer in quarterly payments. The provisions are renewed for maintaining boats for cattle, etc., and passengers; also regarding the pound, place of landing, public house, repairs, and the scale of carriage tolls. The ferry is accordingly leased to Direck Benson, boatman, for £15 per annum.—M. C., II: 150-52.

It was ordered on Jan. 20, 1701, that Benson give a bond for £500. At the same time the mayor reported that he had executed the lease on Jan. 3, and demanded that Benson execute his counterpart and give bond, but that Benson refused and demanded in addition to the house. This, the mayor told him, he could not include in the prescribed conditions. The common council then demanded that Benson execute the lease, but he again refused, unless the house was added in the lease, or the rent reduced £50 per annum. It was therefore ordered that the ferry be again demised, on Jan. 27, and that action be taken against Benson for damages.—Ibid., II: 152-53. On Jan. 27, however, to prevent a law-suit or the continuance of further differences, the common council decided to let the ferry to Benson for £300, and it was also ordered that he be allowed "the Benefit of the City ferry house in which Thos. Hooke now dwelleth if this City have Any Right thereunto During the Term of the said Lease Although the same be not Mentioned in the Lease thereof."—Ibid., II: 135.

The European "War of the Spanish Succession" brings the French and English colonies of America into conflict. It was known in America as Queen Anne's war, and ended with the Treaties of Utrecht and Rastadt in 1713.—Winston, op. cit., V: 420.

About this date, and ten years later, Richard Sackett, a millster, kept his brew-house, and also a pleasure-resort, garden, tavern, and bowling-green on the shore of the East River, commonly known as the Cherry Garde or Sackett's Orchard.—See Liber City Grants, B: 1 (compt. office); Liber Deeds, XXVII: 344; and see June 4, infra. On the modern map, this garden would be bounded west by a line running between Nos. 22 and 24 Cherry St., north by the line of Batavia St., if extended; south by Cherry St.; and east by a curving line from the corner of Roosevelt and Batavia Sts. to the corner of James and New Chambers Sts. See description of Burgis View, I: 256. For other references to Cherry Garden, see Feb. 26, 1703; May 2, 1719.

Bellomont writes to the lords of trade: "Tis great pity this town should be exposed to the mercy of an enemy; 'tis the grow-nigest town in America. Since my coming hither there are not fewer than a 100 fair brick houses built, and a very noble Town-hall."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 152.

The crown not yet having approved the Vact Act, passed by the New York legislature a year and a half before, for vacating some of Fletcher's extravagant grants of land, including the King's Garden and the King's Farm, Bellomont writes fresh arguments to the lords of trade urging action.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 815, 820-27.

Bellomont writes to the lords of the treasury: "The Kings house in the Fort here is ready to fall on my head, the soldiers barracks much out of repair, and the fort in an ill condition, one of the Bastions ready to fall, and the greatest part of the Palisado wanting."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 829. See also Nov. 28, 1700.

27 The ferry to Brooklyn is leased to Dirck Benson for seven years, beginning March 25, at £130 per year.—M. C. C., II: 135.

28 The first agreement with Benson called for a payment of £135 annually (see Dec. 27, 1700); cf. Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. at an 18th Cent. Municipality, 133-37.

Feb. 3 A "Certaine Messuage or dwelling house and ground . . . without the fortifications of the said City in a certaine Street called . . . Queen [Pearl] Street upon the North side thereof and fronting the said street . . . ." The property is bounded on the east by the street which leads from Queen St. to Green Lane (Maiden Lane), and on the south by Queen St.—Liber Deeds, XXV: 35 (Nov. 1706). Roger Baker's tavern, which stood at Pearl and Liberty Sts., was distinguished by the sign of the "King's Head." By July 23, 1702 (q.v.), Baker had purchased a new site for a tavern, on William St. He died in 1702, and his widow was soon thereafter married to another tavern-keeper named Richard Harris (see Dec. 23, 1704). Before Sept. 19, 1715 (q.v.), the house had been turned over to Thomas Coke, son-in-law of Mrs. Harris.

4 The court of general sessions convenes at the new city hall (see Oct. 16, 1699), but is compelled on the following day to "Adjourn to the house of Gabriel Tomson" because of the "Insufficiency of the present City Hall and the Extremse Snow that has and is now falling."—Min. See also May 9, 1700.

19 The consistory of the Dutch Church in Garden St. reports that the house and lot of Jan Pieterse Meet (alias Jan Tawbour) have been bought for £140, to be used for an alms-house. It is "bordering on the Wall, to the east of the house of Jacoby de Draaiser; to the west of that of Jan Otto van Tull, and to the north of the ground of the church." To help pay for this property, the consistory resolves to sell the present parsonage, which has become dilapidated.—Eccles. Rec., III: 146-62. This house and lot have been identified as the site of the present No. 37 Wall St. The deed is not of record, but the location is established by recitals in neighboring deeds. Miss E. Berlin notes that alms-houses were common in 17th century Dutch cities, and that this alms-house was located at the southwestern corner of the city on the site of the present Burke School. The deed is held in the name of Isaac Kip, a quaker claimant deed of it.—Ibid., III: 1514. This was the second alms-house of the Dutch Church. It was situated on Broad St., south of Exchange Pl.—See Castello Plan, Block C, No. 37, Vol. II. Feb. 26 This deed to Van Dyk was probably not given, however, as it does not appear of record; there is a later memorandum in the church minutes (without date), but placed with the records of 1706 in the Eccles. Rec. Where this statement is contradicted, the deed to Van Dyk says that he "Paid Hous [sic] in the street and house [was] sold to Issac Kip, was deeded to him."—Ibid., III: 1802. These recitals in the church minutes, printed in the Eccles. Rec., are the only records we have of these deeds to Van Dyk and Kip; such deeds were never filed in New York or Albany.

Bellomont dies. The continual worry and annoyance to which he was subjected by his numerous enemies, both in America and England, had a bad effect on his general health; and in consequence, the gout, which had lately begun to give him serious trouble, made rapid headway. His death produced "a profound feeling of grief in the provinces."—De Peyster, Life and Administration of Richard, Earl of Bellomont (1789), 57. For brief sketch of Bellomont's life, see also N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 853, citing "Sketch of the Earl of Bellomont," by Jacob B. Moore, in Stryker's Am. Quarterly Register, I: 434.

The council orders that a proclamation be issued announcing his death. Lieut-Gov. Nanfan being absent at the Barbades, the council assumes the administration of the government. Absent members are called to town. Col. Abraham de Peyster, an elder member, is to act as president of the council until the return of Lieut-Gov. Nanfan for the elder member. Col. William Smith.—Col. Coun. Min., 153; Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 280.

Immediately, accusations of oppression spring up against Bellomont on the part of Nicholas Bayard, who desires that the next governor may be "a worthy person of honour profity and justice by whose sedate and peaceable temper and disposition our breaches and divisions may be healed."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 870. Regarding the state of affairs throughout British America at this time, see Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., I: 103.

In the absence of Lieut-Gov. Nanfan, four members of the council, "A. D. Peyster," "S. Staats," "R. Walters," and "T. W. Bayard," write to the lords of trade that the administration of the government is at present in themselves, as the other three members of the council have not yet returned to the city on being summoned. The letter reviews briefly the state of the province.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 850-71. On April 30, the other three members, "Wm Smith," "Petr Schuyler," and "R/. Livingston," wrote separately to the lords, stating that Smith, the eldest member and president of the council, having arrived on March 11, claimed acknowledgment by the four already in town that he had the powers and prerogatives of president, including the "Negative Voice" (veto). This the four refused to grant. Smith also claimed that in the absence of the governor and commander-in-chief, the assembly could not sit. These three members of the council transacted affairs of government without the concurrence of the other four, and reported independently to the lords regarding the state of the province.—Ibid., IV: 872-93.

The clerk at the city hall has noted for the first time: "for the making and fitting of Goblets for holding & Keeping several Soldiers Upon the Late Great Mutiny."—M. C. C., II: 136.

14 The council requests Col. Beeckman of Kings County to attend the funeral of Lord Bellomont with his regiment, as there is to be a funeral procession around the city previous to the interment.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 281. See March 14 and 27.

The consistory of the Dutch Church in Garden St. resolves "That so much of the ground around the church as is necessary shall be used for burying the dead" also that the charge for burial there shall be half that paid for a grave in the church. Permission is to be asked of the city.—Eccles. Rec., III: 1462. The city's permission does not appear in the M. C. C., but that the ground was appropriated as a burial-place appears from the petition of this church for a new burying-ground, Jan. 31, 1766 (p.v.).

A "Memorandum," entered in the Minutes of the Common Council of an agreement, made this day "with William Mumford Stone Cutter to finde Stones and to Carve thereupon the Kings Arms, the Earle of Bellomonts Arms and the Lieut Governors Arms According to the Dimensions of the several Squares left to the front of the City Hall for putting up the same." The work is to be done "within the space of Six Months Next Ensuing the Date heron." He is to "make Mouldings of Stone Round Each Respective Coate of Arms," and each is to be put upon a single stone if possible or otherwise on two. The city is to pay him £414 at the rate of eight shillings per week until the balance is paid; and the half of the profits of such salary which may have been received by him is to be taken from the profits of his position until the amount has been made good.—Blathwayt’s Journ. (trans.); II: 137. But see Dec. 1, 1702.

The commissioners of the treasury direct Lord Bellomont to withhold the salary of Mr. Weaver, collector of revenue, during an annual period. He is a half species of such salary which may have been received by him is to be taken from the profits of his position until the amount has been made good.—Blathwayt’s Journ. (transcripts); III: 73-75, in Lib. of Cong.

Lord Bellomont is buried with military honours, in the chapel in the fort.—Cal. III: 1707; May, 1701. Mayor De Riemer took special care that the city streets should be made clean for the occasion.—M. C. C., II: 154-55. When the fort was taken down and the battery levelled, in 1790, the leaden coffin was removed and finally deposited in St. Paul’s churchyard.—“Sketch of the Earl of Bellomont;” by Moore, in Styerken’s Am. Quar. Register, II: 434; and see June 18, 1790.

It is also ordered that a plan be drawn of the land belonging to the adjoining owners.—Ibid., II: 140. See also May 25, 1699, and July 23, 1723.

The common council’s committee, appointed Jan. 25 (M. C. C., II: 134) “to Agree with Peter Jansen Messier what he shall pay for A Grant of the Land from high Water to low Water Marking his house and Ground where he now dwelleth by Hudsons River,” reports an agreement with him as follows: that this piece of ground, “containing in breadth Along the Strand According to his Petition,” shall be granted to him in fee simple on payment of £50 to the city, provided that he, his heirs or assigns, “Shall not Inclase the same or build thereon nor lay Any Dock or Wharfe thereupon untill such time as the Ground on the North side of him between him and the Kings farms is Docked or Wharfed but thine a publick place for fishing or passing through the same as itt is at present that whenever he shall Dock the same he shall Make a Street or Wharfe of forty four foot wide at low Water Marking fronting on Hudson River in such Manner as the Street to be made on the south side of the same by John Hutchins his Heirs or assigns which shall Remaine for the Publick Street or Highway for Ever.” The report is approved, and it is ordered that the mayor execute the grant.—Ibid., II: 138. This grant is recorded in City Grants, Liber A: 591 (comptroller’s office), under date of April 15, 1701. These water lots were between the present Dey and Cortlandt Sts. The street he was required to make was part of the present Greenwich St. John Hutchins and others had a similar grant, Sept. 30, 1699 (p.v.), between Cedar and Cortlandt Sts. See also Feb. 13, 1723.

The lords of trade write to Bellomont (having not yet heard of his death and the half of the profits of such salary which may have been received by him is to be taken from the profits of his position until the amount has been made good) to “take care of their fortifications which are the main thing necessary for their security.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 856.

The assistants of each ward are required by the common council to go with two freeholders of the ward, promptly, “to the several houses in the same and Know of the Inhabitants what they severally are Willing to Contribute for the present of the Cleaning of the Streets and Carrying Away the Dirt thereof.”—M. C. C., II: 141.

Rev. Peter Brissac is installed as chaplain of the fort.—Coun. Min., 136.

Robert Livingston, writing to the lords of trade (in the absence of their Governor) on the affairs of the province, reports, among other things: “A labouring man at New York has 3 days and a soldier’s week’s subsistence is but 3 6d which with ease they consume in two days, and this is a great cause of their desertion...”

Two Caravans iye in garnison in the fort in New York, which is of very little strength, or use, more than a convenient lodging for the King’s Governor, and a few to keep century at his door may do well enough in time of peace at New York.” Regarding the character of the soldiers, he states: “Idleness is the great motive of many of them, which makes them leave their trades and industry in the King’s province, to take them where they please and can have liberty, yet will not like to be compelled thereunto, especially for one third part of the wages which a Negro slave receives every day in New York for splitting of firewood and carrying the holt.” He further states: “A man, whose Majesty’s fore ours, in the same workshop of that in New York is all to pieces and the walls want new pointing, the pallissadoes round the fort (last winter) were cut down and burnt for firewood and new carrigages are wanted to the guns, some of them being dismounted, others scarce able to abide once firering.

There are two platforms before the City with fifteen guns each, to defend the town against the water. One of which is washed away by the South East storms and high tides, and the other the Magistrates of our City saw cause to give away to the widow Ledyer as a present, the ground between high and low water mark, to the value of about 2100 pounds, which is since laid out in lots, and some part of it built upon.

The breastwork and pallissadoes which were round the town and the two stone bastions on the land side, are quite demolished. They were never well built nor of any great service, and were first erected by the Dutch Governor when the Dutch took this Fort, as a defence against the English from Connecticut and New England. Livingston recommends what he thinks “may be necessary in this juncture for the defence and preservation of this Province in time of war."

That a Governor be appointed who is a soldier, a man fearing God and hating covetousness, and who will administer impartially without siding with any faction.

That two large platforms be erected, one on each side of the river at the place called the Narrows, three leagues from the City, to consist of fifty cannon each, the Channel being upwards of one mile broad.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 777-78.

Numerous other grants of lots between high-water and low-water mark in this vicinity were made in July and August of the same year, with the obligation that the grantees should build wharfs within three years.—City Grants, Liber B: 4, 10, 16, 23, and 33; M. Cornwallis's commission was signed by the king Nov. 26, 1701. It has never been printed.—See "List of Commissions, Instructions, and Additional Instructions, Issued to the Royal Governors and Others in Am.," ed. by Prof. Charles M. Andrews, in Ann. Rep., Am. Hist. Atn. (1913), I: 495. Cornwallis, however, stated, in a letter of July 15, 1705: "The late King was pleased to grant me a Commission under the great Seal of England bearing date the 9th day of July 1701."—N. Y. Col. It should be distinguished from the "Vault under one of the Bastions for the security of the powder," the construction of which was started the following year (see May 28, 1702). The common council orders "that the Old market house near the Custom house be for ever henceforth Appropriated to a publick Market house for the Benefit and Convenience of all persons that shall Resort thereto in as full and ample manner as any Other Market house or market place within this City or Lawfully Ought to be."—M. This warrant is read to the common council, which orders that the recorder (Abraham Gouverneur) and Alderman de Peyster be a committee "to Acquaint his Honour that the Common Council . . . are the sole Judges of the due Elections and Returns of the Magistrates and Other Officers for this Corporation and that itt is un-presidential for this Corporation to be Served with Such a Warrant," and to ask him to recall it.—M. C. C., ii: 151. The next day, the committee reported that they gave Nanfan the opinion of the common council, and returned the warrant to him; and that he put this "into his possett and told them he would Consider the matter, and give an Answer in A day or two." On Oct. 4, complaint was made by William Morris and Jeremiah Tottil, inhabitants of the East Ward, that on Sept. 29 de Peyster made "an undue Return of the Alderman and Assistant and Other Officers Elected for the service of the said Ward wherein Complaint has been made of undue Returns," and report as soon as possible what persons are duly Elected.—Ibid., ii: 152—53. They reported on Oct. 10 that the returns were right, and the court approved. At the same time, the mayor produced six writs of mandamus (presumably issued by Nanfan), requiring the mayor, alderman, and recorder to swear into office the opposing candidates. In reply, the common council (acting as a court, evidently) ordered that the writs be returned, with protest of the mayor and the other officers elected. The mayor employ such counsel as he should think fit.—Ibid., ii: 153—54. The mayor and common council thus directly opposed the lieutenant-governour and the Leislerian party.—Drapel, Hist. of New Neth., etc., ii (1840): Appendix T, XLIX (foot-note).

The situation was serious when Thomas Roosevelt, the mayor, was sworn in on Oct. 14. He stated at the next meeting of the common council, on Nov. 11, that from the day of his appointment, in the absence of a "settled Magistry" (or common council), he had kept a journal of the public events transpiring in the city. This, at his request, was read and entered into full in the Minutes. It reviewed the whole problem and some dramatic scenes regarding the establishment of a common council during the past month, resulting in a changed composition of that body, which now consisted of members named in writs of mandamus issued by the governor on Oct. 14.—Ibid., ii: 157—81. See Dec. 30. For the charter prescription regarding swearing in new officials and its bearing in this controversy, see Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 13—34. See also the transcription of the original records of the transactions in the controversy, printed in Man. Com. Coun. (1877), 715 et seq. The continuance of this factional strife was felt in the election of the next year (see Nov. 4 and Dec. 1, 1703).

Several inhabitants having petitioned the governor that the wharf between Wall St. and Burger's Place may be ordered a "common and public Place," an ordinance was made: "That there be a wharf between Wall St. and Burger's Place, as near as may be from the side of the same, and that a public footpath be made thereon for the entrance of vessels. As the same water is necesary for the use of the citizens, the property of the city, and the Custom-House, it is therefore directed by the council of the said City, that the same shall be under the management and superintendence of the aldermen and other officers of the City of New York, and that the Surtees or Watermen keep guard and watch over the same, for the safety of all persons using the same, and that the said respective officers be charged with the performance of the same. To the use of all persons free of toll,"—Pub. Recs. (N. Y.), ii: 181.

The common council orders that the mayor be paid $4146 for boards and labour "for the making the fence about the Burial Place."—M. C. C., iii: 157. Nov. 6.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for Encouraging the City of New York." The treasury of the city is exhausted, and large sums are required to build and maintain public buildings, particularly the city hall. A fund for this is to be raised by import duties on barrels of naphtha, herring, beef, etc., to be called the "City Fund," and that the City ferry to the Island of Nassau shall have the benefit of its old standard of "Rates and prizes."—Col. Laws N. Y., ii: 449.

The governor's council issues a warrant to Robert Walters for firewood for the fort. Another warrant followed under date of May 1, 1702.—Col. Coun. Min., 160, 168. There are preserved in the State Library at Albany some "Observations on the New York Acct" which are to be Rectified," from which we know that the first warrant was for £213; in part of £213; for 3 months firewood, and the second, £3316; for "One months firewood," which charges, says the auditor-general, "are so Excessive, as that the Same will not be allowed by the Lords Treasurers."—Col. Min. 1800, XLIX: 16 (Albany). An account for candles for the fort, of later date (see April 1, 1703), meet the same criticism.

Resolved, That application be made to our most gracious Sovereign Lord the King for a new Charter to our Church under the Great Seal of England, and that Mr. Petres, by the Grace of his Grace the Arch Bishop of Canterbury the Bishop of London & Col Robt Quarrey who is to be desired to solicit this matter, that a Copy of our present Charter be sent to Col Quarrey & that a Committee be appointed to Consider of what alterations may be proper [lie] to be made in our Constitution & what Additions may be proper to be desired in the new Charter.

Ordered, That Reverend Mr Vesey, the present Church War- dens Mr Emot Mr Jamison and Mr Anderson be a Committee to consider of what alterations & amendments may be of Advantage in this new Royal Charter."—Trin. Min. (M.S.).

1701 Work on the fort has continued until now, as evidenced by an order of the executive council on Feb. 17, 1703, to pay Dirck Vandenburgh, a bricklayer, £142115 for work on the fort from May 16, 1699 to this date.—Col. C. Min. (MS.), TX: 575-80 (Albany).

See also Nov. 16, 1702.

Dec. The feud between the Bayard and Leisler factions breaks out afresh. About 800 Protestants sign and send to the king a petition complaining of the late Earl of Bellomont's treatment in turning them out of places in the government, in branding them "with character of disaffection and infamy." They ask for relief.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 933-42; and see Jan. 20, 1702.

In this year, Cotton Mather's Magnalia Christi Americana: or, The Ecclesiastical History of New-England, containing a map of New England, was published in London. It is "the most famous book produced by any American during colonial times."—Church Catalogue, No. 866.

A New York inventory of this year mentions "a billiard table 53."—Lockwood, Colonial Furniture in Am. (1961), 227.

William C. Compte of New York, merchant, petition the governor and council for compensation for damages done to his house, which has been used as a hospital for soldiers.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 239.

"The general accounts of the province show a payment of £135 11s for billiard and billiard plasterer's work done in her Majesties fort."—Conveyances, Liber XXX (register's office).

The lieutenant-governor and council take up consideration of certain papers reflecting on the government, which are being circulated. On Jan. 17, Nicholas and Samuel Bayard were put under bonds and John Hutchinson is ordered to produce the papers. An examination of the charges was held on Jan. 19. This was continued on Jan. 21, and Col. Nicholas Bayard was committed to prison, charged with sedition. On Jan. 24, a proclamation was issued concerning the disaffection expressed in these inflammatory papers.—Col. C. Min., 162. The N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1921), 592 refers to its date, Nov. 17, 1701, March 2, 16.

The lieutenant-governor writes to the lords of trade that there is "a conspiracy to raise sedition and mutiny here and to defame the Administration of the Government of this Province under his Majesty which appears to have been carried on by a factious party, the head of which is one Col. Bayard," etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 942-43.

Adolph Meyer, Isaac de la Metie, and Johannes Waldron take the oath of office as overseers of Harlem.—M. C. C., III: 186.

Nanfan issues a proclamation, printed by Bradford, against Col. Nicholas Bayard, Alderman John Butts, and others, who are "disaffected to this his Majesties Government," and "have in contempt of his Majesties Laws, and to the manifest Disturbance of the Peace, conspired to defame the past & present Administration."—From N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1901), 61.

He issued another, of similar import, on March 10.—Ibid., 62.

Samuel Bayard (son of Nicholas) writes to Adderly and Lodwick, their agents in London, that he and his father have been "bound over in 1500 pounds Recognizance" each, for being subscribers to treasonable papers. He states that these papers were intended "to sett us to Rights in the eyes of the Court, that we are no Jacobites Pyrats or Ill men as represented," The crime for which they are put under bonds is that they "were present at the Coffee house" when the petition to the king of Dec. 30, 1701 (q.v.), and other addresses were signed. Nicholas Bayard is in prison. He wrote on Jan. 28 to the London agents that the recent outbreak was occasioned by three addresses, one to the king, one to parliament, and one to Cornbury. Although the attorney-general gives his opinion that Bayard has been committed to jail without cause, a company of militia guards the jail as if to prevent rescue.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 944-48. See further March 2.

The anti-Bayard outbreak develops, the Leisler faction being in control. Samuel Bayard (son of Nicholas) writes to Adderly and Lodwick, their agents in London, that he and his father have been "bound over in 1500 pounds Recognizance" each, for being subscribers to treasonable papers. He states that these papers were intended "to sett us to Rights in the eyes of the Court, that we are no Jacobites Pyrats or Ill men as represented," The crime for which they are put under bonds is that they "were present at the Coffee house" when the petition to the king of Dec. 30, 1701 (q.v.), and other addresses were signed. See further March 2.
Bayard, to save his life, signs a confession that the evidence against him at his trial was true,—namely, that he endeavoured to subvert the government of the province by certain addresses to the king, parliament, and the governor.—An Account of the Commitment of Nicholas Bayard (N. Y., 1706). He thus acknowledged himself guilty in the seventh of the several humble petitions which he had made, after he had been for days "loaded with irons," and after the day of his execution had been appointed and he had been notified of it. He thereby obtained a reprieve.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 966.

Bayard's Account (ep. etc.), written and published by himself, closes with the statement that Atwood and Weaver, apprehensive that Cornbury would call them to account "for their illegal Proceedings," made their escape to Virginia, and sailed for England assumed names.—Ibid., 32. This was in Sept., 1702.—See also The Case of William Atwood, Esq. (London, 1705). Bayard wrote to the lords of trade on April 24, reviewing his case.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 951–953; see also Howell, State Trials, XIV: 471–516; Chandler, Amer. Criminal Trials, I: 210; Hist. of the U. S., II: 197. The Bayard trial involved the question of liberty of speech and opinion.

George Clarke, destined to become secretary of the province, declares that in July 30, 1703, and lieutenant-governor (see Oct. 30, 1768), declares that Eneddar Burroughs (a 13-year-old boy) wrote the insulting words on the governor's proclamation (see March 29). The court regards the Clarke character sketch as covering the writer.—Col. Min., 165, 167. See May 13.

The council orders that wine and beer be laid in for Lord Cornbury, and that the house in the fort be put in order for him.—Col. Min., 166.

The proprietors of East and West Jersey draw up a deed surrender "their Power of the Government of those Plantations" to Queen Anne. This was presented to the queen on April 17.—N. J. Archives, 1st ser., II: 43–52. Under Cornbury (after May 3, q. v.), New York and New Jersey were united under one government. The union continued 36 years, with a single executive, but two separate assemblies.

In a memorial to the lords of trade, Adderly and Lodwick (merchants in London) review the circumstances leading up to the arrest of the two Bayards on the charge of treason. Nicholas Bayard is threatened with execution, until the arrival of a ship at New York hearing news of Cornbury's coming. This memorial asks that the lords will put a stop to these "violent and unaccountable Proceedings which are carried on purely to gratify the Revenge of a relentless faction in the Province."—N. T. Col. Doc., IV: 949–951.

The governor signs a bill for declaring Confirming and Extending the Charter of the City of New York relating to the Electing of their Magistrates.—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 174.

It is ordered by Lieut.-Gov. Nanfan and the council "that Abraham Gouverneur who hath been appointed by the Lieu' Governor to be Corrector of the press in this province have and receive a salary for his trouble in the said office of Thirty pounds 50 annu from the date of his commission or warrant."—From the Colonial State Papers, series 5, vol. 1184, Public Record Office, London. The original Ms. Council Minutes containing this entry (see Col. Min., 168) were destroyed in the Capitol fire at Albany. For a list of the burnt council minutes, which at various times and records were sent to the home government and are now preserved in the Public Record Office, see the Report of the Am. Hist. Assn. (1908), I: 478.

The published Colonial State Papers (America and West Indies), for this period contain a number of references to Gouverneur, whose appointment as speaker, notwithstanding the fact that he was an alien, led to much controversy. There is no reference in the indexes of the published volumes, to any "Corrector of the press." From its apparent meaning, the duties of the position seem to have been to handle government documents in their course through Bradford and his associates. It is further evident from Bellomont's report to the lords of trade on May 15, 1699 (q. v.), that a correct copy of the provincial laws could not be sent to England because the printer "had nobody to correct the press at the time he printed them." The phrase is also used in modern times, as, for example, in A Treatise on English Punctuation; designed for letter-writers, authors, printers, and correctors of the press, by John Wilson (Boston, 1836).

Edward Lord Cornbury. Having published his commission at the fort and city hall as captain-general, governor-in-chief, and vice admiral, he is sworn in at the house of the sick chief-justice, Atwood.—Col. Min., 168. He writes to the lords of trade the same day reporting these facts, and that he has "had many applications in his instructions to the Indians." He takes Cornbury under sentence of death for treason; many eminent merchants who fled "into the Jersey's" have returned on his coming.—N. T. Col. Doc., IV: 955, 1152; Diary of Samuel Sewall, II: 35–36.

Cornbury is met on his arrival by the rector of Trinity Church. The wardens and vestrymen welcome him with an address, referring to him as a "healer & restorer amongst us."—Diary, Hist. of Trin. Church, I: 155–56.

The common council orders that the soldiers of the garrison at Fort William Henry in New York be made freemen of the city, gratis.—M. C. C., II: 190. The next day (q. v.), Abraham Gouverneur, the recorder, who belonged to an opposite faction from that of the mayor, petitioned the governor "against the usurpations of Thomas Noell," the mayor.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 293. At the next meeting of the common council, however, the order was reiterated and the reasons recorded. The ordinance provides that "all the Officers and soldiers (who are his Majesties Natural born subjects) be made freemen of the corporation, gratis. These forces had been sent over by the king "during the Late War" to protect and secure the province "from the Insults of our Enemies the French and their Indians." The cost of "all manner of Provisions and Apparel" is "much dearer in this City then in England whereby the said soldiers Cannot Conveniently subsist of their pay only," but most of them being "Tradersmen" they would be enabled to live comfortably if they could exercise their trades. Deserptions would be less frequent, they would be encouraged in their duty, and others would be led to enlist. At present, "by the By Laws of this Corporation No person Whatever so Can Keep Shop or Exercise Any handy Craft Trade or Occupation but such as are Freemen thereof under the penalty of five pounds for each offence." Also, by this ordinance, the common council aims to repay the many "princely favours" of the king.—M. C. C., II: 193–94. See also July 11.

An address to Cornbury, prepared by order of the common council, is approved, and is ordered to be engrossed and presented. It congratulates him on his safe arrival, and expresses gratitude for the king for sending "A person of so great and Noble birth Skilful in the Art of War and Acquainted with the English Laws and Government to heal our Divisions to secure us from the danger of the Enemy Abroad and Cause us to flourish with peace plenty and Tranquility att home," etc.—M. C. C., II: 195. It was presented on May 12.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 296. In news of the king's death, on March 8 (q. v.), did not reach New York until June 18 (q. v.).

Mary Burroughs petitions the governor in behalf of her 13-year-old son Eden. Because he appended the words "and hang John Nanfan" to a proclamation (see March 26), he was taken into custody on April 19, and still remains in the custody of the sheriff. By such confinement the child's health has been impaired and he is now dangerously ill and "likely to turne to the Smallpox." She adds that the boy is too young to be "capable of any evil Intention against the Government," that he "att play did Subscribe the said words," and, perhaps, "by Encourage-ment of some other Children," and that surely it was not by any instigation "of direction" of the petitioner or her husband. She seeks his discharge and release from all "prosecution & punishment for the Said OFFENCE."—Col. MSS., XLVII: 18 (April 19).

The recorder and five members of the common council petition the governor, stating that Mayor Noel, in his desire to make "free Citizens" of the soldiers of the garrison, intends to make a by-law to set aside the charter provision in that regard. They put before him the language of the charter involving the granting of freedoms, and implore him to disapprove any such measure.—Col. MSS., XLV: 115 (Albany).

Cornbury writes the lords of trade that "the small Pok is very much here, but except that the Province is very healthy."—N. T. Col. Doc., IV: 959.

The city having paid £5 to Phillip French on May 12, re-

1702. Lish his lease of the dock (M. C. C., III: 190), the dock and slips of the city are now "farmed" (leased), "at the sign of the King's Arms Near the Custom house," to James Spencer, see June 27, who secures them for £25 per annum for the term of seven years. Besides cleaning the docks and the slips (a task which Frenchmen had apparently failed to do—see April 13, 1700), Spencer is required to build, within the next 18 months, at his own expense, "the Wharf Next the River Inclosing the said Dock." That is, he is to make them "one foot and a half English Measure higher then they now are in the highest place thereof with good and sufficient timber." The dock reconstruction is "to begin att the Privy house and from whence the whole length of the said Wharfs to White hall," and "after the said Wharfs are made soe much higher with Stockadoes the said purchaser Shall Cause the same to be well Loaded with Ballast Gravel or Stones," and upon this the wharves are "to be well Covered Over with the Dock Mudd to secure the said Wharfs from being broken or Damnified by the Violence of any Storme or Sea." The other part of the wharfs, "Inclosing the said Dock Next to the River," the lessee shall repair; and he "Shall Cause Eight substantial posts to be fixed on the said Wharfs," thirty or forty feet apart, "Convenient for the haling [hauling] Down Vessels thereby to Creae" (to careen there).—Ibid, II: 191-92. For the construction and location of the great dock, see Nov. 19, 1676. The custom-house (near which was the King's Arms tavern, as above stated) stood at the present 33 Pearl Street—Landmark Map 1722. N. Y. C. Docks, 1926. A hint as to the ceremony of proclamation appears in a letter from Duncan Campbell to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, dated June 18: "The forces are to bee all in Armes; at ten of ye Clock ye King's Death is to be solemnized with firing of Guns at 11 of ye Clock ye Queen is to be proclaimed with all ye solemnity that may. Most people will be in making ye next lords day."—Winthrop Papers, XI: 112.

5. In a letter to the governor and council of Connecticut, Col. Nicholas Bayard writes: "Since it has pleased our Goodness, We must every Adore, to rescue my life out of the hands of bloodthirsty men, by the happy arrival of his Excellly Our Governour my Lord Viscount Cornbury by Whose Impartial Justice, I hope to obtain such release as the Innocency of my Case Deserves; I am now to return my Grateful acknowledgements for ye Cotic Intercessions towards my release, by ye voluntary recommendation Letters to ye late Lt Govr and the same did not meet with ye Candid Complyance & Success, as yo Christian endeavors deserved, yet I am no less sensible of ye Sincerity & favour therein, with I shall ever retayne with a dutful regard, until I can be of any capacity to make some Suitable returns."—Winnthrop Papers, XI: 142, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

6. Thomas Weaver, the collector and receiver-general, and William Carter, the compromitter of the customes, memorialize the governor and council regarding the custom-house boats and the bad condition of the harbor, whose roof and walls are so decayed as to render it "unfit."—Cal. Colo. Docs., XLVI: 128 (Albany).

7. The provincial council resolves to build a powder-vault.—Col. Colo. Min., 170. On June 15, William Hodgson (Hudson) was named as the builder.—Ibid, 171. The general accounts of the province, under date of June 50, show a payment of £100 "towards the building of a Vault in the Fort Wm Henry for Powder."—Conynessay, Liber XXX, unnumbered page 86 (register's office). On Dec. 18, there was another payment of £60 "for Bricklayers work into the fort for a Vault under one of the Bastions for the securing of it."—Ibid, 177. Another warrant was issued to Rip van Dam, on March 6, 1703, undoubtedly for work on the same vault, then referred to as in Fort Anne.—Col. Colo. Min., Eng., 308; Col. Colo. Min., 180. See also April 13, 1700; June 16, 1703. Apparently this vault was supplemental to the one from Fort Frontenac, a task which work of his predecessor the new governor speaks of so disparagingly in his report to the lords of trade on Sept. 24 (g.v.). There does not appear to have been any depository for powder outside the fort until Nov. 21, 1728 (g.v.), when a new powder-house was completed on the site of the former fort, having the fresh water.

In some "Observations on the New York Accts" (accounts "which are to be Rectified"), between June 10, 1703, and March 25, 1703, made by Wm. Blathwayt, auditor-general, the charges for finishing the work over the fort Gate" and "for making a May Vault for powder," he says, "ought to be more particularly made out."—Col. MSS., XLIX: 16 (Albany). The governor and council allow house rent to Rev. William Jones, Col. Colo. Min. (a task which Frenchmen had apparently failed to do—see April 13, 1700).

10. John Bridges, I.I.D., who came to New York on May 3 with Lord Cornbury (M. C. C., II: 197), is appointed by the governor to be second justice of the supreme court and judge of the admiralty court. He was sworn in on June 13.—Col. Colo. Min. 171. See further, April 13, 1705.

12. Cornbury grants permission to Nicholas Bayard to print an account of his (Bayard's) trial. This fact was stated later in the printed work, for title of which see Sept. 27.

13. Cornbury informs the lords of trade that he has suspended from the council Mr. Atwood (the chief-justice), Mr. Weaver, Col. De Peyster, Dr. Staats, and Mr. Walters.—N. T. Col. Docs, IV: 950-60. Weaver made his escape, "as having been concerned in a Violent and Malicious Prosecution for High Treason against Two persons of Note" (Bayard and Hutchins).—Blathwayt Jour. (transcript), II: 315 ff; Roberts, New York, I: 225-26. See Sept. 27.

14. On news of the accession to the throne of Princess Anne of Denmark, she is proclaimed Queen of England by Cornbury at New York.—Landmark Map 1722. N. Y. C. Docks, 1926. A hint as to the ceremony of proclamation appears in a letter from Duncan Campbell to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, dated June 18: "The forces are to bee all in Armes; at ten of ye Clock ye King's Death is to be solemnized with firing of Guns at 11 of ye Clock ye Queen is to be proclaimed with all ye solemnity that may. Most people will be in making ye next lords day."—Winthrop Papers, XI: 112.

15. Gov. Lewis Morris wrote (evidently after June 18) to the secretary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts: "The Queen has a Farm of about 32 Acres of Land, with Rents for £56 p. Ann: Tho the Church Wardens & Vestry have petitioned for it & my Ld four months since gave you a promise of it the proceeding has been so slow that they begin to fear the Success wont answer the expectation. I believe her Mty. would readily grant it to the Society for the asking. N. York is the Center of English America & A Proper Place for a Colledge— & that Farm in a little time will be of considerable Value, & its pity such a thing should be lost for want of asking, whb at another time wont be so Easily obtained."—Dict. Hist. of Trin. Church, I: 145, footnote, citing Archives, S. F. G., I: 171. See June 13, 1705.

16. The Lord Bishop of London wrote an appeal to the lords of trade to "take into Consideration the Twenty Six pounds allowed annually by his late Majesty for ... providing of an house for the Minister of Trinity Church ..."—Extract from the Lambeth MSS, made by Rev. Evan Evans, filed with Hawkes MSS, in Church Mission House, N. Y. City.

Nicholas Bayard is permitted by the queen and council at St. James's to appeal his case to them.—N. T. Col. Docs., IV: 961-62. Regarding the result of the appeal, see June 19, 1705.

17. James Spencer, dock-master (see May 20), is authorized by the common council to arrest and bring before the mayor any person who is indebted to him for dockage. The occasion for granting such special power was thus explained by the dock-master: "sandy Boats frequently Come into the Dock & Ships of this City and the Masters thereof Refuse to pay unto him the Customary Rates for Dockage & before he can get the Mayors Officer to summon them before the Mayor to Cause them to make payment as Aforesaid they weigh Anchor and are gone."—M. C. C., II, 197-98. Spencer had served previously as high constable and these elusive slipperers would naturally try his patience. Messrs. Symmes, Denue, and the fort gate, in the great fire was leased, in 1703, made haste to secure the same authority.—M. C. C., II: 257. See Oct. 19, 1685.

18. The common council for the first time makes an honorary gift of the freedom of the city. It is "Resolved that this Court in the Name of this Corporation do give and grant unto his Excellency the Viscount Cornbury Cap. Gen and Governor in Chief of this Province &c: with A Freedom of this City and that the Mayor Execute the same and Cause the seal to be Covered with a Gold Box." Akerman Boilem is directed to "make the said Box Common for the use," and the mayor is required to issue his warrant to the treasurer to pay for it.—M. C. C., II: 197. On Dec. 1, it was ordered that "this Court forthwith waite upon" the governor to make the presentation, Mr. Broughton, the recorder, being appointed to "make A speech to his Excellency suitable to this occasion."—Ibid., II: 194.

It is also resolved that John Bridges, LL.D., Robert Willard, Charles Congreve, Edward Rich, Phillip Rookey, William Lovell, John Freeman, John Pierson, Peter Fauconnier, Henry Swift, Mr. May Bickley, William Carter, Mr. Mott, and "such Others of the household as Came into this Province with his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant," shall be "Free men of this Corporation to the Contrary Notwithstanding Provided they be all her Majesties Natural borne subjects or Naturalized or Denizized as by the Charter of this City is Required."—Ibid., II: 197.

It is resolved further "that all persons that are now dwellers within this City that are his Majesties Natural borne subjects or Naturalized or Denizized that are poor and not able to purchase Their Freedoms he made Freeman of this City Gratia." The mayor, recorder, and aldermen are required to "Admit unto such as the Of, A Freeman," and the mayor to "Execute Certificates thereof under the seal of the said City."—Ibid., II: 197.

These transactions show whatever difference existed in the substance of the gift to Cornbury on the one hand, and to the poor of the city on the other. Apparently, the same gift was conveyed upon both, but in a different form and by a different method.

The power of the city magistrates to make free citizens, conferred by the Dongan Charter and continued by the Montgomerie Charter, "has ceased to be of any importance, and is used only as a testimonial of respect or gratitude, on the part of the corporation, towards persons in high stations, or who may have entitled themselves to the honor by personal merit, or some distinguished service."—The Charter of the City of New York, with notes by Chancellor Kent (1836), 152. For further account of the proceeding of conferring the "freedom of the city," historically considered by Chancellor Kent, as well as the records of such events in New York, see N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1853), 420, passim.

The old English custom is thus described: "In exercise of their power to admit burgesses by election, it is the custom for the magistrates of the more important cities and towns of the United Kingdom . . . to admit persons of distinction, whether residents or strangers, to the position of honorary burgesses. This is popularly known as 'presenting the freedom of the city.' The names of such honorary burgesses are entered in the burgess list or register of municipal electors, but they are not entitled, nor entitled to the ordinary municipal duties or responsibilities of a burgess. . . ."—Chamber's Encyclopaedia (London, 1888), II: 534 (title "Burgess"). The following is an American account of the same subject: "The practice of conferring the freedom of the city, which at present amounts to little more than an expression of esteem on the part of the public magistrates, may be traced back to mediaeval times, when the principle of freedom of domiciles was by no means universally recognized, and cities partook almost entirely of the nature of private corporations, admission into which was haphazard, by means of noble birth or title. . . ."—Ibid., II: 534.

Thomas Weaver, collector of the royal revenue in New York, is suspended from office by Lord Cornbury. Wm. Blathwayt, the minister-general of accounts (see Sept. 29, 1700), presents an "Abstract of Mr. Weaver's Acc'" (from Jan. 6, 1700, "when he enter'd upon his Office of Rec' Genl," to the date of his suspension. The total amount received from "Customs, Excise, Quit Rents & Casual Revenues" was $65,345.14.11—Blathwayt Journal. (transcript), II: 123-24.

The common council orders the repeal of "the Third Printed Law of this Corporation Called (Concerning Freeman)."—M. C. C., II: 198. The text of this law is not available at the present day, no copy of the city ordinances printed by Bradford in 1694-5 (see Oct. 25, 1694, and Jan. 16, 1695) being now (1925) extant. A new and brief statement of the law or regulation on the subject of freemen is supplied by the common council. No person or persons whatever, in the city or its "Liberties," shall engage in retail trade, or exercise the craft of trading, or be allowed to be Freeman, or "soe Admitted by the Mayor Recorder & Aldermen or by the Mayor or any three or more of the Aldermen." As before, there is the penalty of £5 for each violation after a warning; but there is a new scale of charges for being made a Freeman, every merchant, trader, or sempliceman being required to pay every "handy Craft Tradesman" six shillings "with Customary fees on being made free," and those not able to pay "Shall be made free Gratia."—Ibid., II: 198-99. The soldiers of the fort, who were "Natural borne," had been made freemen gratis on May 12 (q.v.). Orders, in the list of the names of citizens of this Corporation to the Contrary Notwithstanding Provided they be all her Majesties Natural borne subjects or Naturalized or Denizized as by the Charter of this City is Required."—Ibid., II: 197.
1702. Regarding the condition of the soldiers and fortifications, Sept.
Cornbury informs the lords of trade that there are two companies occupying the garrison at New York, one of 80 men and the other of 76 men, besides officers. They are "naked," he says, and there are only 27 muskets, 12 swords, and 12 bayonets.

27 Cornbury had found in a magazine of the fort a parapquet which is of solid wood being fallen down in many places, not one platform good but most of them quite rotten many of the guns dismounted most of the Carryages rotten and some of the guns so honey-combed that they are not fit to be fired, . . .
The Magazine of the fort at York is a building of Brick made by Lord Bellamont over the gate going into the fort [see June 27, 1701]. It cost eight hundred pounds, and was built under Col Romer's directions. But I am well satisfied that a better building might have been made for two hundred pounds Besides that it is the most improper place in the world for a Magazine for Powder because of the great storms of thunder and lightnings which are very frequent in this country. Besides many people that live near the fort have been very earnest with me to remove the powder from thence it being very certain that if the Maga-nee should by any accident blow up it would destroy many houses [as well as the Fort].

Regarding coast defences at New York, he states: "there lies just over against the town a small Island of about four score Acres of Land, called Nutter Island, which lies on the South East side of the town A Bomb vessel may lye behind that Island and Bombay the City as they place have they cannot hurt them.
The way to prevent this will be to erect two stone Batteries at a place called the Narrows One upon long Island and the[other] upon Staten Island. The sea is but "a little mile" across in this place, and "Batteries being placed thence it which I will be impossible to hurt us by sea. I would have these made of stone because stone is cheaper here than brick and there is no turf to be cut in this Country besides that would be a continual charge always repairing.

27 I look upon this to be the more necessary to be done because in Summer 1701 Mons D'Ivrberville came into the Port of New York to a place called the watering Place within the Narrows and sight of the City He was in a french man of war of fifty Guns
He was supposed to stay there upward of a month during which time he sounded all the harbour from the City of New York to Sandy Hook so that for the future he will want no Pilott to conduct him in.---N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 967-69.
It was in July, 1700, not in the summer of 1701, that D'Ivrberville was in the harbor.---See July 9, 1700.

Cornbury sends to the lords of trade the two original addresses made to the city to trade and parliament upon which Bayard was pronounced guilty of high treason. He also sends copies of all papers relating to Col. Bayard's trial, obtained from the clerk of the council. There were no court minutes, however, as Justice Atwood who presided in the case would not permit any to be taken. Col Bayard has lately printed his trial upon such Minutes as he was able to take himself while he was at the Bar which I likewise send to your Lordships.---"N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 972.
The printed case is entitled An Account of the illegal Prosecution and Tryall of Coll. Nicholas Bayard, in the Province of New-York for supposed high treason in the year 1700. Collected from several memorials taken by dves persons privately, the commissioners having strictly prohibited the taking of the trial in open Court. New York. 1702. The trial is reprinted in Collection of State Trials, IV. Cornbury appeals to the lords of trade in Bayard's behalf.---"N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 954.
Bayard appealed to the lords of the island against the order of the sickness has swept away up to five hundred people of all ages and sexes. Some men of note and amongst the rest Capt:
Speake dyed two days ago, he was Commander of her Majestys Ship Jersey and brought me into this Province."---"N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 964.
In December the sickness was "quite over."---Ibid., IV: 1004.

Cornbury informs the lords of trade that Thomas Weaver, the collector and receiver-general, who served as solicitor-general in the trial of Bayard, took the account books when he ran away [see June 16, 1701]. I have found no record of the event.---"N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 973.
Chief-Justice Atwood and Collector Weaver are traced to the Jersey coast but are not captured.---Ibid., IV: 1005. Cornbury gives his reasons for suspending from the council Atwood, Weaver, De Puyter, Walters, and Staats, because (briefly stated) of their unlawful prosecution of Bayard and Hutchins, whom they condemned to death until repealed.---Ibid., IV: 1010-17. Atwood in England answered the allegations against him in condition in the Bayard case.---Ibid., IV: 1032. But it was in order in council at St. James's, on Jan. 21, 1703, reversed the sentence passed in New York by Atwood against Bayard and Hutchins, and another order of the same date removed Atwood and the others from the council.---Ibid., IV: 1027-24. Weaver's account-books were afterwards returned to Cornbury.---Ibid., IV: 1039. See also Sept. 25, 1701; June 19, 1703; Jan. 13, 1709.

The governor, with the consent of the council, appoints
27 Philip French to be "Mayor Coroner Clerke of the Market & Water Bayfift of the City of New York for the year ensuing." The former mayor, Thomas Noell, is on the point of death, the alderman of the South Ward (Brant Schuyler) is already dead, and the rest of the aldermen and assistants are very sick or in the country to avoid the "Pestillential distemper."---M. C. C., II:
203. For a brief sketch of the life of Philip French, see Man. Com.
Gonn. (1853), 406.

The common council, consisting at this meeting of merely the recorder, one alderman, and three assistants, unanimously agrees that Johannes Jansen be treasurer of the city for the next year.
The smallness of the board was due to the fact that "Almighty God hath for our Manifold sins Immorality & profaneness been punished with great sickness and Mortality whereby great Numbers of the Citizens of this Corporation are Dead and Many att this time lye in A Languishing Condition."---
M. C. C., II: 205. Jansen was succeeded by William Anderson
(see Oct. 14, 1703).

76 George Keith, A. M., missionary from the Society for Propagating the Gospel, preaches, at the request of Mr. Vesey, "at the Weekly Fast, which was appointed by the Government, by reason of the great Mortality that was then at New York, where above Five Hundred died in the Space of a few Weeks; and that very Week, about Seventy died."---Keith, Jour. of Travels (1703), 50. He also preached in New York in November, 1702 (ibid., 55), and a year later (ibid., 76, 77). See also Nov. 24.

An address to Cornbury, signed by 346 inhabitants of New York City and by deputies from the other counties, expresses confidence in his "great prudence justice, courage and conduct," and they expect to "enjoy safety and protection from our enemies abroad, Liberty of conscience, Peace and tranquility at home, and that the name of Party and Faction may henceforth vanish with every thing contradictory to the true English Interest."---N. Y.
Col. Docs., IV: 1005.

From this date until Nov. 14, inclusive, the council met at Jamaica, L. I., where Gov. Cornbury and family had gone to ecape the "great sickness and mortality lately happening in the City of New York."---Jour. Leg. Coun., II: 176-83. The change of venue produced confusion in the return of legal processes, and the supreme court adjourned in consequence. A "Commission" was passed by the provincial legislature on Nov. 27, making processes returnable at the next session, in April, at New York---Col. Laws N. Y., I: 522.

Cornbury, in his first address to the assembly, recommends erecting public schools.---Jour. Leg. Coun., II: 177. On Oct. 30, the assembly approves erecting "a publick Free-School."---Assemb.
Journ., I: 148. See Nov. 27.

It is ordered by the governor and council that a message be sent to the house of representatives, acquainting them of the usage and custom of parliament to appoint a chaplain to read prayers to them every morning before they proceed to business, and desiring them to do likewise.---Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 175.

Cornbury recommends to the assembly that they provide for the defence of the city and port of New York, "which seem . . .
much exposed."---Assemb. Journ., I: 145.

The common council orders that there shall be "three market days kept one whereof to be at the little Bridge by the Dock."---

Nicholas Bayard is required by the governor and council to give his bail for his appearance before the queen.---Col. Coun. Min., 174.

This law specifically asserts that it is not to be construed "to allow or give a slave to any Negro, or to any Indian Slave or Servant to be Listed or to do any Duty in the Militia of this Province." It provides also that three months shall elapse after any offence before suit or seizure of the offender's goods. When the legislature passes an act to raise and pay men for the defence of the frontier, the captains shall detach as many men of their companies as required by the captain-general and other superior officers to leave "a Note in writing at their respective Houses or last place of abode Signifying when & where they shall appear ten days inclusive . . . , under penalty of £6 for failure so to appear, which shall be recovered by court proceedings and given to the person summoned to serve in the place of the offender.―Col. Laws N. T., I: 500-7. This law was extended by successive reenactments, until repealed by a new Militia Act on July 27, 1721 (q. v.)

The common council having represented to the general assembly that, in the recent "Calaminous Diatemyr" the number and needs of the poor have greatly increased, an act is passed for their better support.―Col. Laws N. T., I: 507.

Four "bellmen" or watchmen are appointed, whose duty is to go "Every hour in the Night through the several Streets of this City and publish the time of Night and also to apprehend all disturbers of the peace Felons &c also to take Care that No Damage be done in the City by fire or Other Casualties." They are to be paid £44 for their services from Nov. 1, 1702, to April 1, 1703, and are to be provided with "A Lanthorn Bell and hour Glass" at the city's expense.―M. C. C., II: 299-10. See Oct. 17, 1698.

The governor's council issues a warrant to pay Michael Hawdon, a tavern-keeper (see Sept. 24, 1700), for the rent of his house by the assembly.―Col. Coun. Min., 177. Another warrant was issued for the same purpose on July 1, 1700.―ibid., 186.

The occasional occupation of taverns for the regular meetings of the assembly was the practice until 1704.―See June 27, 1704.

The common council orders that "the Arms of the late Earl of Bellomont and Capt. Nanslau which are fastened in the Wall of the City Hall be by the Marshal of this City forthwith pulled down and broken that the Wall be filled up," etc.―M. C. C., II: 212.―See March 17, 1701

The officials of the East Ward who were returned as elected (M. C. C., II: 202) are declared by the common council irregularly chosen and a different set "sworne into the respective Offices." This action was taken in consequence of the report, rendered by a committee that "Inspected and scrutiny'd the Voices," to the effect that Isaac de Rienner and the other officials returned as elected received the votes of 19 persons whose dwellings were in the North Ward, but who voted in the East.―M. C. C., II: 211-12.

Cornbury, whose first commission (see June 13, 1701), bearing date Nov. 26, 1701, was given to him by the late King William III. Neither has ever been printed in full.―See Prof. Chas. M. Andrew's voluminous "List of Commissions [etc.] Issued to the Royal Governors and Others in Am.," in Ann. Rep., Am. Hist. Asn. (1911), I: 495; see also Dir, Hist. of Trin. Church, I: 137. The commission of this date, elaborately engrossed on two large sheets of parchment, its ornamental border having in the upper left-hand corner a beautifully drawn portrait of Queen Anne (see Pl. 27, Vol. IV), is now owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. It was purchased on Nov. 1, 1700, for $2700, and presented to the society by six of its members, together with Cornbury's instructions (two documents, both dated Jan. 29, 1703, q. v.), and the original box which contained them (a wooden box, about 11 in. long, 8 in. wide, and 2 1/2 in. deep, covered with old tanned calf-skin, and lined with black-and-white figured paper).

Although no attempt has hitherto been made in this Chronology to give more than a very brief reference to governors' commissions or instructions, a fuller digest of the contents of this hitherto unpublished document and the accompanying "Instructions" may be found interesting. As Prof. Andrews, op. cit., observes:

"The commissions and instructions issued not only to the royal governors, but to the proprietary governors also, are among the most important constitutional documents of the colonial history. In the case of the royal governors they formed the chief constitutional basis of the Government and became the medium through which the mother country declared its Dec. policy. . . .

"The governor's commission was issued under the great seal. It is a long document couched in general phrases, and it underwent considerable revision during the eighteenth century."

“The instructions are more important than the commissions for they are specific and not general, and contain, when studied chronologically, a complete exposition of British policy. They were prepared in the plantation office, as a rule, but frequently under the revision of the Act of Parliament or the Secretary of the Privy Council and the Secretary of State. They were customarily submittted to the attorney general, and certain parts of them went to the treasury, the admiralty, the commissioners of customs, and the Bishop of London for inspection and criticism. Frequently these same boards and individuals were invited to make suggestions, and did so, particularly the commissioners of customs and the bishop, and they and others were in the habit also of making proposals on their own account, which were submitted in the form of drafts. Most of the trade instructions were drawn up by the treasury or the customs commissioners, and many additional instructions originated with the privy council or the secretary of state.

"An interesting feature of this early process of drawing up the governor’s instructions is the advice obtained from unofficial sources. A rough draft of the instrument was generally submitted to the appointee, if in England, and he was invited to send in recommendations and to suggest changes and improvements. In one case a prospective governor was allowed to search the files of the plantation office that he might post himself on the affairs of the colony. . . ."

"The governor generally took his instructions with him when he sailed for the colony. . . . The governor did not publish the instructions as he did the commission, and as a rule did not make them known even to his council. He might read one or more clauses in his address to the assembly, and such would be printed in the sessions papers or, may be, found in the proceedings of the assembly as kept by the clerk. In fact, the instructions were secret orders, intended only for the governor’s use as the guide to his administration. . . ."

Queen Anne's commission to Cornbury, written without paragraphs or punctuation, and in the old English style of engrossed lettering, difficult to decipher, has been skillfully transcribed by an expert on colonial land grants, Mr. Aloys Maerz, for the purpose of establishing in court that Cornbury had power to grant land with whatever quit-rents he saw fit, not being limited in any way, as has been claimed; also for the purpose of establishing the fact that patents for lands were required to be in writing. From the typed copy of this transcription, owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc., the following digest of the commission has been prepared. Separating the various subjects into paragraphs, for clearness, the document begins

"Anne by the Grace of God of England Scotland France and Ireland Queen of ye Britishe Worlde and of the County of Manhattaen in ye Island of ye Newes of Yorke and of ye Countie of the Faith &c To Our right Trant and Wbl beloved Edward Hyde Commynly called Lord Cornbury Greeting."

"Wee reposin especiall trust and Confidence in the prudence Courage and loyalty of ye said Lord Cornbury of our especial Grace certain knowledge and more moone have thought fit to Constitute and appoint and by these presents doe Constitutie and appoint you the said Lord Cornbury to be Our Captain General and Governor in Cheife in and over our Province of New York and the Territories depending thereon in America . . . ."

Then follow the queen's orders that Lord Cornbury, after publishing "these our letters Patents," shall take five different oaths. These are: (1) "the oaths appointed by Act of Parliament Dec. to be taken instead of the Oathes of Allegiance and Supremacy," (2) "the Oath mentioned in the Act entitled an Act to declare the alteration in the Oath appointed to be taken by the Lords and Commons of the Privy Council and the Secretary of State, but no act of the further security of his Majestie's person and government in the event of any failure of Succession of the Crown in the protestant line and for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales and all other panderers and their open and secret abettors and for declaring the association to be determined," also, (3) "the Test mentioned in the Act entitled an Act for the better securing the Dominion of the Reign of King Charles the Second entitled an Act for preventing dangers which may happen from Popish recompute;" together with, (4) "an Oath for the due execution of the Office and Trust of our Captain General and Governor in Cheife in and over our Province of New York and the Territories depending thereon as well with regard to the equal and impartial Administration of Justice in all Causes that shall come before you as elsewhere"; and likewise, (5) "the Oath required to be taken by Governors of plantations to doe their utmost that the laws relating to the plantations be observed." All these oaths "our Council of our said Province or any three of the members thereof have hereby full power and authority and are required to administer unto you and in your absence to our Lewtenant Governor if there be any upon the Place. [Cornbury is required to administer] if there be any to the member of the Council. Wee do ordaine, that the Governor of our said Province, the Oaths the numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4 in the above summary."

The queen gives Cornbury "full Power and Authority to Suspend any of the members of our said Council from sitting voeting and assisting therein," if he finds just cause for so doing.

Three councillors shall constitute a quorum. In case of a vacancy in the council, due to death, departure from the province, suspension, or otherwise, Cornbury is required to "sign the same unto us by the first opportunity that Wee may under our Signett and Sige Manuall constitute and appoint others in their Stead. But that our affairs at that distance may not suffer for want of a full number of Councillors if ever it shall happen that there be less than seaven of them residing in our said Province," authority is given to him to "choose as many persons out of the Principall Freedholders Inhabitants thereof as will make up the full number of our said Councill to be seaven and noe more." Such appointees shall be councillors until confirmed by the queen or others are appointed "under our Signe manuall and Signett."

Power and authority are given to Cornbury, "with the advice and Consent of our said Council from time to time as need shall require to summon and call general assemblies of the said freedholders and Planters" which are to be held at the county seats. Such a representative assembly is to have "the full power and Authority to make all such Laws and Acts as shall be thought meete to the publick good of the said Province.

"And Wee doe hereby require and command you to doe and execute all things in due manner that shall belong unto your said Command and the trust Wee have reposed in you according to the several powers and directions granted or appointed you by this present Commission and the Instructions and Authorities herein given and also unto our said Letters Patents and all other Powers, Privileges and Authorities as shall at any time hereafter be granted or appointed you under our Signett and Signe Manuall or by our Order in our Privi Councill and according to such reasonable Laws and Statutes as are now in force or hereafter shall be made and agreed upon by you with the advice and consent of the Councill and assembly of the said Province or any Government under your Government in such manner and forme as is hereafter expressive."

He is empowered, as it also anyone authorized by him, to administer "the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy" to residents in the province.

He is authorized, with the advice and consent of the council, to establish "Courts of Judicature and publick Justice," both criminal and civil, according to law and equity; also to appoint fit persons in the several parts of his government to administer the laws there enforced, 1, 2, and 3 in the above enumeration; to appoint judges, and, in requisite cases, "Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer Judges of the Peace and other necessary officers and ministers in our said Province for the better administration of Justice and putting the Laws into execution," and to administer or cause to be administered the laws of the Commonwealth to all persons for such terms and under such moderate quit-rents, services, etc. to be reserved unto us, as Cornbury (with the council's consent) shall think fit. Such grants shall be sealed with "our Seal of New Yorks," and when recorded shall be good and effectual in law against us our heirs and successors.

He is given power, with the advice and consent of the council, to appoint "laires martis and marlets;" also ports, harbours, bays, havens, etc. for the convenience and security of shipping.

All officers, etc., both civil and military, and all inhabitants, are commanded "to be obedient aiding and assisting" to Lord Cornbury in the execution of this commission. In case of his death or absence from the province, they are to be likewise obedient to "our Lieutenant governor or Comander in chief," and to him is given, "by these presents," all the powers and authorities granted by Cornbury such as "to be by him executed, and enjoyed during our pleasure or until your arrival within our said province and territorys." If, in the event of Cornbury's death or absence, "out of our City Province and Territories," there is no person "upon the place" commissioned or appointed "by us" to be lieutenant-governour or commander-in-chief, "the then present Council of our said Province do take upon the administration of the government and execute this commission . . . ," and such councillor who, at the time of Cornbury's death or absence, shall be residing within the province ("and nominated by our instructions to you"), before any other at that time residing there, "doe preside in our said Council with such powers and preheminences as may be necessary in these circumstances for the due and orderly carrying on of the publick Service in the administration of the government as aforesaid until our pleasure be further known or until your arrival.

Lastly, Cornbury is to execute and enjoy the office of "Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over our Province of New York and the Territories depending thereon . . . ." As there are "divers colonies adjoining to our Province of New York for the defence and security whereof it is requisite that due care be taken in the time of war," Lord Cornbury is appointed "Captain General and Commander in Chief of the Militia and of all the forces by sea and land within our colonies of Connecticut and of East and West New Jersey and of all our forces and places of strength within the same," and, for this purpose, he is given (or, in his absence, the commander-in-chief of the province is given) "all and every the like powers as in these presents are before granted and recited for the ruling governing and ordering our Militia and all our forces flotts and places of strength within our province of New York . . . ."

"In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made Patents Witness our Selves at Westminster the 5th day of December in the first year of our reign." (The great seal of England attached.)

For Cornbury's instructions, see Jan. 29, 1703.

The aged Peter Peirce, minister of the French congregation, is granted a pension of £60 by Cornbury and council, in response to his petition, in which he recites that Bellomont ordered a yearly pension to be given to Vesey and himself, to May 1, 1699, out of the revenues of the province. —Dec. Hil. N. T. (40th ed.), III: 250. See Sept. 5, 1704, Dec. 13, 1709.

Cornbury describes, in a letter to the lords of trade, the difficulty of communication with England: "I intreat your Lordship to consider that but few ships go directly from this port to England, So that I must depend upon the Boston and Philadelphia Posts for conveying my letters to such ships as may be going to England; And some times both these Conveyances fail. N. T. Col. Decr., IV: 1017.

The council orders that a proclamation issue forbidding the distilling of rum in New York City, or within a mile of the city hall. — Cal. Coun. Min., 177. See Dec. 24, 1702, and June 19, 1703.

The chaplain and surgeon (probably of the troops) reside in the fort, as appears from a council order of this day to supply furniture for their lodgings there. — Cal. Coun. Min., 177.

The common council resolves to petition Gov. Cornbury to recommend to the Bishop of London, in behalf of the city, "to send over hither A person of good learning of plious life and Vertuous Conversation" 1703 and likewise to recommend to the queen to "Appropriate A parte of the . . . This address, when duly drafted and approved by the common council on Jan. 15, 1703, retracted the act of Nov. 27 (for this purpose), and stated that it was doubtful whether either this or "the neighbouring counties" supply New York with the desired person for schoolmaster.—Ibid., II: 215-16.

Benjamin Faneuil, in a petition to the governor and council, stated that he purchased a barrel of rum for distilling from molasses, on the march of the Fresh Water, and asks permission to continue this business, notwithstanding the recent proclamation (see Dec. 18, 1702), and to erect a wharf on the waterside.—Cal. "Christe, Deign (to the Carpenter) is paid £100 "for work done and materials provided by him for the Publicque Building in her Majesties Fort at New York."—Correspondence, Liber XXX, unnumbered p. 92.

In the same general accounts of the county, is a payment of £5.00 for "making of a chimney in the Custom house where there was none before."—Ibid., II: 1703.

A census of the city of New York was taken "about the year 1709." It shows the names of 818 "Masters of Families," by city wards and the number of "Males from 16 to 60," of "females," of male children and of female children, respectively, of male and female negroes, and male and female negro children, respectively, and "all above 60." The total number of these inhabitants was 4,416. This number is computed; none of the totals for the different family enumerations appearing in the record.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., 310. The same figure for the total population is given in A Populous City, 11. See also the same or a similar census list in Valentine's Hist. City of N. Y. (1853), 344-65. This census shows an apparent loss in population since the census of 1665, p. 76.

Elias Neau calls the attention of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts to the great number of slaves in New York who are "without God in the world," and of whose souls there is "no manner of care taken." He proposes the appointment of a catechist to undertake their instruction. "He himself finally being prevailed upon to accept this position obtained a license from the Governor [see Aug. 4, 1704], resigned his position as elder in the French church and confirmed to the Established Church of England, . . . He was later licensed by the Bishop of London."—Jour. of Negro History, ed. by Carter G. Woodson, (1926), I: 320, quoting Pasco's Digest of the Records of the S. P. G., 55-57. For earlier references to Elias Neau, see the order of the provincial council on Sept. 7, 1699 (Cal. Coun. Min., 142), and his enrollment as a voter on Sept. 27, 1701 (M. C. C., II: 174, 177). See also An Account of the Enquirers Used by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, To instruct the Negro Slaves in New York. Together with Two of Bp. Gibson's Letters: on that Subject (n. d.), an extract, now very scarce, from Dr. Humphrey's Historical Account of the Incorporated Society from its foundation to 1728 (London, 1730).

At this time, Benjamin Wynkoop, the silversmith, was living in New York City. Between 1700 and 1723, he served as collector and assessor at various times. For information regarding his life, and descriptions and illustrations of his work, see Met. Museum of Art Catalogue of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South, with note on early New York silversmiths by R. T. Haines Halsey (1912), 65-67.

Inventories of this period mention "8 leather chairs very old," and "a large elbow leather chair." The high value placed on these latter leads authorities to think that they were of the fine Spanish leather variety.—Lockwood, Colonial Furniture in Am. (1901), 134-146. Leather chairs, as first used in Europe, were really of Italian design, coming to England from Holland during the Commonwealth. The colonists who came directly from Holland may have used them even before that time.—Ibid., 134.

The consistory of the Dutch Church agrees to sell the poorhouse, which stood at the present No. 34 Broad St., to Franz van Dyk. This purchase seems not to have been completed, for, in Sept., 1709 (I), the consistory record reads: "The Poor House in the Schape Wytye, which was sold to Isaac Kip was deeded to him."—Church Records, Liber 41. See Ecles. Rec., III: 1802; Castello Plan, II: 248-49; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 953.

The common council orders that, for the better Encouragement of the Ferry of this City," a petition be made to the governor and council for a grant of "all the Vacant Land from High water to Low water Markeeting the harbour of this City from the Red house upon Nassau Island to the Wallaught . . . for the better and more Convenient taking in and out Landing Passengers," etc.—Ibid., II: 215-22. This petition was passed upon by "this Court" on Feb. 15, and entered in the minutes.—Ibid., II: 221-22. An order was issued on it by the governor and council on March 11.—Cal. Coun. Min., 180; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 308. But a caveat by the town of Brooklyn against a patent to the city of New York was discussed in the council on Mar. 25, special attorneys appearing for each side.—Cal. Coun. Min., 181. There were other hearings on April 17 and 22 (ibid., 182, 183), and evidently the patent did not issue at that time.—See Jan. 23, and March 3, 1708.

The common council orders the clerk to deliver to William Anderson (see Oct. 14) clerk of the committee on auditing the public accounts, the "Booke of Acc" of Mr. Evert Beyvyanke late Treasurer of this City" (see Sept. 29, 1700).—M. C. C., II: 217.

George Clarke's deputation and instructions as deputy auditor of revenues in New York are signed and sealed. On March 29, further instructions were issued to him, and Abraham Depyster's commission as such officer is revoked.—Blathwayt's Jour. (transcript), III: 139.

Queen Anne signs "Instructions for Edward Hyde Esq. commonly called Lord Cornbury (Son and Heir apparent to yr. Maj. of Clarendon) Our Captain General and Governor in Chief of Our Province of New York and the Territories depending thereon in America." The original document, comprising 28 pages, legibly written, signed, as usual, at the top of the first page, "Anne K," and on the last page, "AR," and sealed with the royal seal, is owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. These instructions, in 100 paragraphs, briefly stated are:

With the instructions Cornbury will receive "Our Commission under Our Great Seal of England" (see Dec. 5, 1702).

He is to take upon himself "the execution of the place and Trust" reposed in him, and "forthwith to call together the Members of our Council for that Province."

He is, "with all due and usual Solemnity to cause Our said Commission under Our Great Seal of England . . . to be read and published at the Said meeting of our Council.

After this, the governor shall himself take, and administer to each of the council members, "the Oaths appointed by act of Parliament to be taken instead of the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy . . . as also the Test . . . together with an Oath for the due execution of your and their places and Trusts, as well with regard to the equal and impartial Administration of Justice in all cases that shall be committed to you, and likewise the Oath required to be taken by Governors of Plantations to do their utmost that the Laws relating to the Plantations be observed."

He is immediately "to communicate unto our Said Council Such and so many of these Our Instructions wherein their advice and consent are mentioned to be requisite."

As the inhabitants of the province "have of late years been unapply divided, and by their Enmity to each other Our Service
Jan. 29

And their own general welfare have been very much obstructed," Cornbury is thus pre-occupied "in the parties which have been formed amongst them to use such impartiality and moderation to all, as may best conduce to Our Service and the good of the Colony.

The members of the council are to "have and enjoy freedom of debate and vote, in all affairs of public concern."

Though the commission directs that three members shall make a quorum, "it is nevertheless Our Will and pleasure that you do not Act with a quorum of less than five members."

In order that the queen "may be always informed of the names and characters of persons fit to Supply the Vacancies which shall happen in Our Council at New York," Cornbury is to send "with all convenient Speed the Names and Characters of Six persons inhabitants of the Said Province... whom you shall esteem the best qualified for that trust."

In the choice and nomination of council members and other officials, he is to take care "that they be men of good life, and well affected to Our Government, and of good Estates and abilities, and not necessitous people, or much in debt."

The number of members in the council is to be neither increased nor decreased, and no one is to be suspended unless the reasons for such action are entered upon the minutes and also transmitted to England.

Any member of the council who is absent from the province for more than a year without permission is to lose his place.

The "Stile" of enacting laws is to be "by the Governor, Council, and Assembly and no other."

In enacting laws, Cornbury is to see that matters entirely separate and distinct from one another are treated in different acts, and "to take care that no Clause or Clauses be inserted in, or annexed to any Act, which shall be Forreigne to what the Title of Such respective Act imports."

Copies of all laws passed are to be sent to England within three months of their passage, unless some unexpected circumstances shall retard the shipping.

In all acts "for levying money, or imposing Fines and penalties," there is to be a specific mention "that the Same is granted or reserved to Us, Our Heirs and Successors for the Publick uses of that Our Province and the Support of the Government thereof."

No money is to be granted to any governor or lieutenant-governor, except according to the style of parliamentary acts,—i.e., the money is to be nominally granted to the crown "with the humble desire... that the same be applied to the use and behoof of such Governor," if the queen "so think fitt."

When the governor is absent from the province, "One full moiety of the Salary and of all perquisites and Emoluments whatsoever, with... would otherwise become due" to him are to be paid to the deputy head of the government.

Under no circumstances is Cornbury to leave New York "to come to Europe," unless he first obtains permission "under our Sign Manual and Signet."

A detailed account of all receipts and payments is to be kept and transmitted semi-annually to the treasurer of Great Britain.

No public money is to be paid except on warrants signed by the governor, but the assembly may from time to time examine into the disposition made of the money appropriated by them.

All laws relating to taxes on wines or liquors are to be sold for less than a year, and other acts are to be made "indefinite and without limitation of time."

Cornbury is not to pass any law "whereby the price or Value of the Current Cown within your Government... may be altered."

And no law which might tend to lessen the queen's revenue is to receive his consent.

No fines above £10 may be remitted without permission from England.

At the first opportunity, Cornbury is to send "a Map with the exact description of the whole Territory under your Government, with all the several plantations upon it, with Fortifications," and likewise a map "of all ye Indian Country in the neighbourhood of Our Plantations in those parts, marking the Names of the Several Nations... and the places where they inhabit."

He is also to send a list of all government officials and an account of the present revenue.

The governor is ordered to examine the "capacity and behaviour of holders of offices," granted under the great seal of England," and to report them to the crown.

All the goods and money taken from pirates are to be safely secured, until he has received instructions for their disposal.

The laws of England regarding pirates and trials for piracy are to be strictly enforced.

Cornbury is to send a detailed account of all courts, their officers, powers, fees, etc.

A court of exchequer is to be called, in order that the queen's "rights and dues be preserved and recovered, and that speedy and effectual Justice be administered in all cases relating to Our Revenue."

All the inhabitants, "except papists," are to be permitted liberty of conscience.

An annual report of the population is to be sent to England, together with an account of the number "fit to bear Arms in the Militia."

All "Planters & Christian Servants" are to be provided with arms, and trained in the use of them, so that they may be ready to defend the province in case of need.

Military law is not to be established without permission from England.

The colonists are ordered to draw up a law for punishing mutiny and desertion, and for the "better preserving of good Discipline amongst... Soldiers."

Upon application made by ships of war for additional seamen, the governor is to see that such ships be furnished with the number necessary for good service.

Cornbury is warned not to exercise, too extensively, his power of suspending commanders of warships.

He is to demand an account of all the arms, ammunition, and stores received or bought at New York, and to send a report of the disposition of them, together with an inventory of all such stores now in the garrisons of the province.

He is likewise to send an exact account of all the goods and ships that enter the port.

The parliamentary acts concerning trade and navigation are to be put into execution in order that all illegal trade may be stopped.

Cornbury is to take special care "that God Almighty be devoutly and duly served... the Book of Common prayer, as by law established, read each Sunday & Holyday, and the blessed Sacrament administered according to the rites of the Church of England... that the Churches already built there be well and orderly kept, and that more be built as the Colony shall by Gods blessing be improved, and that besides a Competent maintenance to be assigned to the minister of each Orthodox Church, a convenient house be built at the common charge for each minister, and a competent proportion of Land assigned him for a Glebe, and exercise of his Industry."

No minister is to be assigned to an ecclesiastical benefice unless he has "a certificate from... the Bishop of London, of his being conformable to the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church of England, and of a good life and conversation."

A schoolmaster without a license from the Bishop of London is not to be allowed to teach in the province.

A "Table of Marriages, established by the Canons of the Church of England," is to be hung up in every church and duly observed.

"Drunkennes & debaucery Swearing and blasphemy" are to be "discountenanced & punished."

Merchants, who bring trade to the province, or in any way "contribute to the advantage thereof, and in particular to the Royal African Company of England," are to be invited to settle at New York.

An annual account of the number of negroes shipped, and of the rates of shipping is to be made to England.

The governor is also to give, from time to time, a general report of the province, its products, needs, improvements, etc.

A law "for the restraining of any inhuman Severity, which by ill masters or Overseers may be used towards their Christian 1703 Servants and their Slaves, and . . . that the willfull killing of Indians and Negroes may be punished with death," is recommended to be passed.

Cornbury is directed to use every means "to facilitate and encourage the conversion of Negroes and Indians to the Christian Religion."

He is "to provide for the raising of Stocks and building of publick workhouses in convenient places for the employing of poor and indigent people."

He is to call upon the neighbouring provinces for the money which . . . King William III ordered them to raise to help build forts on the frontiers of New York, and also to recommend to the New York assembly that provision be made for "what further shall be requisite for repairing erecting and maintaining of such Forts."

In case the frontiers should ever be in danger, the neighbouring provinces are to be called upon for specified numbers of men to help in their defence.

The forts at Albany and Schenectady are to be kept in good repair, as well as new ones built.

Cornbury is to transmit, as soon as possible, a report of all the forts and fortifications in Connecticut as well as New York.

He is "not to suffer any Innovation within the River of New York, nor any goods to pass up the Same, but what Shall have paid the duties at New York, to the end the chief benefit of that Trade be preserved to the inhabitants and Traders of New York and Albany."

He is to call upon the Five Nations to renew "their Submission to Our Government," and to assure them "that we will protect them as Our Subjects against the French King and his Subjects."

He is to prepare an account of "what goods, Arms and other stores & have been sent from hence to the last two Governors to be distributed as presents to the five Nations of Indians aforesaid, and how the Same have been distributed."

As the queen has been informed that New York "doe abound with Vast Numbers of pine trees proper for the production of pitch and Tar r . . . and that there are likewise great Numbers of Oaks and other Timber trees fitt for Beams, planks and other uses in Our Navy Royal and it being highly for Our Service and the advantage of this Kingdom that all Sorts of Naval Stores be as much as possible produced in Our Plantations in America, and from hence imported hither," Cornbury is directed to apply his "utmost care and diligence towards the promoting of So necessary a work."

He is to see to it that no person keep any press for printing nor that any book or pamphlet or other matters whatsoever be printed without a license, as "great inconveniences may arise by the liberty of printing."

The queen ends by saying that she considers "the good of Our plantations and the improvement of the Trade thereof, by a strict and punctual observance of the severall Laws in force concerning the Same, to be of so great importance to the benefit of this Our Kingdom and to the advancing of the duties of Our Customers," any failure in the observance of those laws within New York, due to Cornbury's neglect, will be looked upon as a breach of the trust reposed in him and be punished "with the loss of your place in that Government, and Such further marks of Our displeasure as Wee Shall judge reasonable to be inflicted upon you."

Additional orders and instructions to Cornbury, bearing the same date as the foregoing, and forming a separate document of 30 pages of manuscript (on 16 leaves), accompany the "Instructions."

It forms part of the Cornbury items purchased and presented to the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (see Dec. 5, 1702). This document, in the same handwriting as the "Instructions," begins, likewise, with the royal seal and signature, and bears the title: "Orders and Instructions to Edward Hyde Esq commonly called Lord Cornbury (and Heir apparent to the Earle of Clarendon) Our Captain General and Governour in Chief of Our Province of New York in America; And in his Absence to the commander in Chief of the Said Province for the time being, in pursuance of Several Laws relating to the Trade and Navigation of this Our Kingdom of England, and Our Colonies and Plantations in America, and the Rights of subjects resident upon the Continent of America, by Charter or Letters Patents, shall at any time hereafter Allen, Sell or dispose of any of the Said Islands Tracts of Land or Properties, other than to the Naturaliln born Subjects of England, Ireland Wales or Berwick without the License and consent of Us, Our Heirs and Successours, Signed by Our or their Order in Council first had and obtained," he is commanded to "give Notice thereof to Us, Our heirs and Successours or to the Lord high Treasurer of England or Commissioners of the Treasury in England . . . in putting in Execution the Several Acts of Parliament be fore mentioned . . ."

In case of actions at law, on any law or statute "concerning Our Duties, or Ships or Goods to be forfeited, by reason of any unlawful Importations or exportations," the jury shall be composed of natives of England, Ireland, or the plantations.

If he shall "discover that any persons or their Assigns claiming any right to or Interest in any Island or Parts of Land upon the Continent of America, by Charter or Letters Patents, shall at any time hereafter Allen, Sell or dispose of any of the Said Islands Tracts of Land or Properties, other than to the Natural born Subjects of England, Ireland Wales or Berwick without the License and consent of Us, Our Heirs and Successours, Signed by Our or their Order in Council first had and obtained," he is commanded to "give Notice thereof to Us, Our heirs and Successours or to the Lord high Treasurer of England or Commissioners of the Treasury in England . . ."

He shall "take care that all places of Trust in the Courts of Law or what relates to the Treasury of Our Said Province of New York to be in the hands of the Native born Subjects of England or Ireland or the Plantations."

Persons of "known Loyalty, Experience, Diligence, and Fidelity" shall be appointed to fill vacancies in office.

He shall "from time to time Consulter with the Commissioners of Our Customes in England," and advise them regarding negligence of customs officials, etc.

He shall enforce certain provisions of the "Act for preventing frauds and regulating abuses in the Plantation Trade," particularly with reference to the registry of ships, prize ships etc.

He shall also enforce certain provisions of an "Act to prevent the exportation of Wool out of Our Kingdoms of Ireland and England into foreign parts, and for the encouragement of the Wooden Manufactures in Our Kingdom of England . . . ."
GERARDUS BEECKMAN petitions the common council "for A Feb. Grant of A slip of Ground in Queen Street in Order to make A new Publick Slip," and a Committee is appointed to examine the subject.—M. C. C., II: 220. What appears to be the original MS. of this petition, although not dated, is filed with the "Misc. MSS." in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. It shows: "That adjoining to his Land Fronting to Queen-street there lyes A small slip of Land belonging to the City, whereof the Council of the City would be satisfied in breadth for A street or slip but at the south end thereof it Comes to nothing abutting upon the Land of Coull. Courtland as by A small draft thereof hereto affixed will appear. See that to make A Convenient Slip, there must be Added as much as 650 ft. ^ of petitioners land as the City hath there vacant, whereupon your petition would be very willing to Comply with: on Condition that the City would let yr. slip at their own Charge and grant him the Land before his Lott to Low-water mark if any belonging to yr. City."

15 The grant was not executed, however, at this time, and on April 17, 1719, Beeckman made application again.—Ibid., III: 200-1. The committee, then appointed to survey and lay out the land, made its report on April 24, 1722, when, again, the grantor was directed to execute the grant under the seal of the city.—Ibid., III: 255-86. The ground between the slips which the city desired to reserve for a public slip, and which Beeckman acquired, became known as Beeckman's Slip. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 988.

The common council orders that part of Queen St. be paved, "beginning at the house of Mr Adams the Stannier and Running West Ward Along the Said Street to the Corner house of Giesse Lewis."—M. C. C., II: 224. It was moved which way the Kings Farme which is now Vested in Trinity Church shall be "let to Farm," the vestry agrees that the rector and churchwardens shall "wait upon my Lord Combe the Govr to know what part thereof his Lord [ship] did design towards the Colledge which his Lordp designs to have built and therupon to publish Placarts for the letting thereof at the public outcry to the highest bidder."—From the original Trin. Min. (MS.), not in vestry-book. Cf. Eccles. Soc., III: 156-19, citing Dist. Hist. of Triin. Church, 145, 146, 149, where it is stated that "The movement culminated in the founding of Kings (now Columbia) College, fifty years later." See also Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1904), 5.

"Ordered, That Capt Wilson, Capt Willet & Mr David Jamison do meet with Mr Isaac De Riemer and treat with him concerning the Lot of ground which he has lying [near] to Trinity Church and agree with him for the same upon the most easy Terms they can for the use of Said Church."—Trin. Min., op. cit.

"Ordered, Capt Tothill and Capt [Lancaster] Sims wait on Maj' de Brown and get him to Execute the Deed for parcel of Ground he pretended to, now within the bounds of Trinity Church Charter."—Ibid. This was the house of Cornelis Jansen Flavier, described as in Block A, No. 17, Castello Plan, II: 224-25; C. P. 82. See, further, May 17, 1703; Feb. 1, 1708.

It is also ordered that Tothill and Sims, "with Capt Morris and Capt Wilson do also meet with the manngers of the Dutch Church and endeavouer to get them to Sigo the Resignation of that piece of Land which they lay pretensions to, but is Contain'd in Trinity Church Charter."—Trin. Min. (MS.). This was the house of a ground purchased by Samuel Drissius, quy, "Minister of the place," Nov. 5, 1654.—Libel Deeds, A: 9 (New York); see also Block B, No. 18, Castello-Plate, II: 225-26; C. P. 82. Wardens (managers) of the Dutch Church probably advanced some part of the money to buy this house for Drissius—they were also interested in getting the grant in the houses "in the years of the City of New Amsterdam" (Block B, Nos. 2-13, Castello Plan, II: 220-21; C. P. 82). Isaac de Riemer, a grandson of Margriet Drissius, usually represented the Drissius heirs in real estate transactions, after the death of the domine and his widow.—See Block K, No. 1 Castello Plan, C. C. 82, and C. P. 82. Isaac de Riemer, the Drissius family, and the manngers of the Dutch Church (who evidently were to re-

"Ordered, That the Rector with the two Church Wardens and Mr. Jamison treat with my Lord [Cornbury] concerning some money that was Collected for the Redemption of some Slaves out of the Church, which is appropriated for Trinity Church by order of Council, which now lies in Holland for want of orders."—

The governor having received advices from England of the victory of the British fleet and forces against the French and Spanish at Vigo, Spain (in taking and destroying 17 French men-of-war, 17 Spanish galleons, and also in taking the towns and castles of Vigo), as well as the success attending the Confederate arms in Flanders against the French and Spanish, the council orders "that a publick bonfire be made this Night within this City att the usual place that ten Gallons of wine And A Barrel of Beer be also provided,." at the city's expense, "to Drink to her Majesties health, the Prince's and success to her Majesties Arms." It was also ordered that notice be given to all the housekeepers of the city "that they make publick Illuminations this Night As a further demonstration of their Joy for the said Victory."

—J. G., III: 227. The cost of the bonfire, beer, and wine was $1515—ibid. II: 231.

25 Sir Jeffrey Jeffreys, in England, proposes that packet-boats be established between the Isle of Wight and New York. He offers to furnish two ships, each of 150 tons, carrying 14 guns and 40 men, and all necessary provisions, and all orders that shall be proposed to the chile of H.M. He also proposes that they make regular trips, carrying packets, passengers, and freight. The charge for the undertaking is left for the consideration of "the Officers of the Navy and Post Office." The proposal has the king's approval.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 1305-31. The lords of trade, however, see no benefit to the public unless the stay at New York is limited to five days.—ibid., IV: 1013-21. There is no record in these documents or elsewhere that this proposal was put into effect, even experimentally. We find, that, on July 17, 1790 (vol.), Cornbury wrote to the board of trade: "I wish with all my heart the packet boats be established to some part of this Continent." He described at that time the only ways then open for communication.

26 Francis Darwall petitions the common council for "A Grant of Confirmation of A Parchell of Land lying Near Mf. Sacketts formerly Called the Cherry Garden which was bequeathed to her by her Grandfather Thomas Delavall Merchf deceased." A committee is appointed to have the land surveyed and a draught made.—M. G. C., II: 228. Cf. 1791; and June 4, 1791.

The new city hall not being completed, the common council meets during the winter "at the house of William Davis for the Conveniency of trade Room and Fire which the said William Davis furnished . . . a warrant for $2 for the room and firewood is accordingly issued.—M. G. C., II: 229. The tavern of William Davis (see July 31, 1700) stood at the present 64 Pearl St., next to the old Stadt Herbergh.

Mar. 9. The common council orders "that Elias Desgrange Peruke maker who Came hither with his Excellency the Governor be made a Freeman of this Corporation Grant."—M. G. C., II: 231.

11 The tavern-keepers of the city of New York petition for compensation for having had soldiers billeted on them.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 708.

16 The queen, at Westminster, gives a commission to George Clarke to be secretary of New York Province, in the place of Matthew Clarkson, deceased.—See Voyage of George Clarke, Esp., to America for Collection and News, by E. B., O'Callaghan (J. Munnell, Albany, 1867), xxv-xxvi. See, further, July 23.

Apr. 1. The governor's council issues a warrant to Elias and John Pelletreux "for candles to the fort;" also, on the following day, a warrant to Peter Schuyler for firewood.—Col. Coun. Min., 181. The council, in general, in its council of his "Observations" previously referred to (see Nov. 6, 1701), showed that these charges were "after the Rate of" £900 per year, and "will not be allowed by my Lord Treasurer."—Col. Hist. MSS., XLIX: 16 (Albany).

11 News is received that Mr. Bridges, the second justice (see June 15, 1702), is appointed chief justice and will be the first, Mar. 7. on the Circuit.—Col. Coun. Min., 181. See, further, July 6, 1704.

The council meets at "fort Anne." This is the first mension in the Journal of the change of name from Fort William Henry to Fort Anne.—Jour. Leg. Coun., i: 188-9.

Cornbury informs the members of his council: "since your Adjournment, I have received Information, that the French intend to attack this Place, by Sea this Summer." The best way to prevent this, he thinks, is by the advice of Council, which now lies in Holland for want of orders."—

Cornbury informs the members of his council: "since your Adjournment, I have received Information, that the French intend to attack this Place, by Sea this Summer." The best way to prevent this, he thinks, is by the advice of Council, which now lies in Holland for want of orders."—

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for the Laying out Regulating Clearing and preserving Publick Comon highways throughout this Colony." Among the measures it directs "That there be laid out preserved and kept for ever a broad and Sufficient Repair one Publick Comon & General highway to Extend from the now Sitte of the City of New York thro' the City and County of New York and the County of Westchester of the breadth of four Rod English Measurement at the least, to be Continue and remain for ever the Publick Comon General Road and highway from the said City of New York to the adjacent Collony of Connecticutt." The act also applies to the preservation of trees along highways; against encroachments, and to the repair of highways by the townships and masours through which they pass. Commissioners are named to carry out the various provisions of the act. Those for the city and county of New York are William Anderson, Clemenc Elsworth, and Peter Oplonbus (Oblinus).—Col. Laws N. T., I: 532. The survey made by these commissioners was filed on June 16, 1707 (p. 2). The act of 1703 was explained by Hoffman, another act, passed Oct. 30, 1706.—Ibid., I: 612. See also Treatise upon the Estate and Rights of the Corporation, II: 249 et seq.

The legislature passes "An Act Declaring the Illegality of the Proceedings against Col. Nicholas Bayard & Alderman John Hutchins for pretended High Treason, and for Reversing and making null every Conviction and all proceedings therein" (p. 2). The act refers to this prosecution (see Dec. 30, 1701; Jan., Feb., March, and Apr., 1702) as "Crafty and Malitious," and states that the case was examined by the queen in council at St. James's on Jan. 21, 1703 (see N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1023), when it was ordered that the "ancient and proper document concern'd with the evidence against them and to their reinstatement in their honours and property." The act carries this order into effect.—Col. Laws N. T., I: 531, 590.

The legislature passes a bill for raising $1,500 toward erecting two batteries at the Narrows, the South End of Staten Island and Long Island "leading from the main Sea into the bay or harbour of the City of New York." The object is to gain security for the city. The open passage "hath some time since given Encouragement to Strangers in a bold and warlike manner to enter our port and sound our Channels to the Surprise and Terror of this City." The money is to be raised by special levy upon the different classes of inhabitants. For example, members of council shall pay 40 shillings, but representatives only 20 shillings; lawyers, 20 shillings, but "every person wearing a Periwig" only 5 shillings; 6 pence; a bachelor who is a Freeman of 25 years or over, 3 shillings, but if only 16 years or over, 9 pence; and the master or mistress of every slave of the age of 16 years and under, one shilling for each slave. Also a tax is laid of three pence per gallon of liquor, distilled during the next year.—Col. Laws N. T., I: 550. By July 1704 (p. 9), the erection of the batteries had begun, but two years later the money had not been collected, and the batteries had not been completed.—See May 29, 1706.

The legislature passes an act to enable the minister (Pieter Pieret or Peiret) and elders of the French Protestant Church to erect a larger building. The act describes the church lot (see 1688) as follows: It is situated on the south side of Petticoat Lane,—that is, "butting northerly" to the street. It is bounded on the south by the ground of Jaspar Nissepat, deceased; on the west by that of Isaac de Forest, deceased, and on the east by that of Henry van Feurden. It is 48 ft., 9 in. long; has a street frontage of 27 ft., 7 in., and measures 28 ft., 6 in., in the rear. On the west side, from frost to rear, there is taken off from this width a strip 3 ft., 3 in. wide for a common alley. The act enables the minister and elders to sell this ground and the church that stands on it, and to purchase other ground on which to build a larger church and dwelling-house for the minister. The money derived from the sale shall be put in the hands of the other parties, and the minister shall have such new property in the name of "The Minister and Elders of the French Protestant Church in the City of New York."—Col. Laws N. T., I: 556. See July 8, 1704. It is interesting to observe that the Huguenots who settled at Westchester and other places around New York Father Amout's, among the French Catholic Huguenots in New York.—Dunlap, Hist. of New Neth. (1830), II: Appendi, cliii. Those residing in New Rochelle, before the erection of their own church, came on foot, a distance of 18 miles, for Sunday morning service.—Waliron, Huguenots of Winchester, 43 sq. citing John Fintar's Recollections.

1703 Majesty, to extend her gracious Bounty to these impoverished May Forts, in bestowing what in her royal Pleasure, she shall judge fit, towards the finishing the intended Fortification of the neighbouring counties assisting in proportion to the benefits they receive.—Assemb. Jour., I: 166-67. The legislature made allusion to this address on Oct. 9, 1718 (p. 4). 27 Corbury writes to the lords of trade: "I have directed the Act of Assembly in which Her Majesty has been pleased to disallow to be taken out of the Secretary's Office, and to be destroyed."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1044. On July 29, they replied: "We can not approve of that method; it not being proper to destroy any Record, which for some time was in force, and to which recourse ought to be had in cases that have happened in the time it was in force, noe has till this method been practiced in any other of Her Majesty's plantations. —Ibid., IV: 1066.

June An evidence of the "draft" and of the acceptance of "substitutes" in the second intercolonial war appears in the court records of this date, when Moses Levy, the plaintiff, asserts that he paid George Jewell, the defendant, five pounds to "goe and serve in the Room and Stead of him the said Moses at Albany in the quality of a soldiery."—M. C. M. (MS.), June 1, 1703.

3 Trinity vestry orders "That Col Wenham pay Mr. David Jamison, what is reasonable for his pains & trouble in drawing the Deed of the property stated from the Town of New York to Trinity Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.). The deed is dated and recorded April 22, 1703, to Liber City Grants, B: 47.

It is agreed by Trinity vestry "with Mr. Ebets Bricklayer that he will point the Steeple, y^ Western part of y^ Church, makes middle Bells, and all other works & plaine sufficient y^ to be finished on [or] before the 15th day of Sep^ next, for which he is to have sixty pounds by y^ following payments. viz: Fifteen pounds presently, fifteen pounds when y^ worke is half done & the remaining thirty pounds at the finishing thereof, the Church is to find y^ Iron Work."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See July 3, 1697; Feb. 27, 1706.

Col. Robert Quary, judge of the admiralty in Penn., reports to the lords of trade regarding the state of all the English provinces. He refers to "Your Lordships directions for a meeting once a year of all the Queens Governors," which he says, "would be of very great service upon several accounts and more especially in order to the removing all scruples and objections which may be raised against that general good of bringing all the Governments under one systeme form and Constitution."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1050. A congress of governors, to be held in New York, was proposed again, six years later.—See Sept. 26, 1709. Compare this early suggestion with the conferences of state governors eventually held in Washington in 1806, 1809, 1910, 1911, and 1912, and described in Harper's Ency. of U. S. Hist., IV title "Governors."

Corbury's report to the lords of trade states, further, that Corbury "hath for a small charge built an extraordinary vault [see May 28, 1702] which will effectually close the powder from those accidents [which might happen to the magazine over the entrance to the fort], and hath already put the Fort into some order, and in a little time designs to complete that work."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1052.

The provincial legislature presents to Corbury an address to the queen regarding the state of the province, with request that he convey it to her. It refers to "the great Hardships and Difficulties this poor Province hath laboured under during the last War." This "hath rendered it utterly impossible for us to support and defray so great a Charge as must necessarily arise, from the building, erecting and repairing such Fortifications as only, will be absolutely necessary for the Safety and Defence, not of this Province alone, but of all other your Majesty's Territories to North America, especially, when it comes to be considered, that through the great Neglect, ill Management, and Misapplication of the Revenue, by those who lately exercised the Power of Government, in this Province, the Fortifications on the Frontiers are totally decayed and ruined, and your Majesty's Revenue here burthened with considerable Debts, which must be paid by the assistance, therefore, from the crown.—Assemb. Jour., I: 171-72.

The first act of the provincial legislature establishing a standard of sizes for casks, weights, and measures, is passed.—Col. Laws N. T., I: 554. A resolution of the assembly, on May 5, provided that the standard of England should be followed.—Assemb. Jour., I: 162.

In an address to the council and the assembly at the opening of a new session, Lord Cornbury says: "I must now acquaint you, Gentlemen, that the great Queen of England, my Mistress, has been pleased to ease this Province of a Burthen, which by Custom, has long lain upon it, I mean, that of Presents to the Governor, Chief of this Colony, her Majesty's Grace has been graciously pleased to confirm that Act, by which the last Fall you were so kind as to give me a very great Present [see Col. Laws of N. Y., I: 1—13] but at the same Time, her Majesty has commanded me to acquaint you, that she has given the necessary Orders, for preventing any Governor, Lieut. Governor or Commander in Chief, from receiving any Presents for the Future."

On the same day, the messenger of the council takes the "oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy" and subscribes "the Test" (see March 29, 1673), and the speaker and the members of the assembly take "the Abjuration oath."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 205—6. The oaths of allegiance and supremacy are also administered to the officers of the independent companies.—Col. Coun. Min., 189. See also Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Rev. George Keith preaches at Trinity Church, having now come to the Province of New York after a widely different career in his religious theories. His sermon on this occasion was published in 1704 by Bradford, with the title The Notes of the True Church with the Application of them to the Church of England, and the sin of Separation from her. Delivered in a Sermon preached at Trinity Church in New York, before the Ordination of the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper the 7th of November, 1704. In his "Epistle to all Unprejudiced Readers in these American parts," Keith makes violent charges against "those called Quakers and their Leaders, who abound in these American parts, and who most insolently in their assemblies, teach and practice such things as are abnormal to the State and Sacraments, in the said Church, with notorious Lyes and Falsehoods that the Quaker Teachers belch out against her, especially in their Meetings on Long Island."

There was also published by Bradford in 1704, probably at the same time as the above item, another sermon of Keith's, entitled The Great Necessity and Use of the Holy Sacraments of Baptism and the Lords Supper, delivered in a Sermon preached at Trinity Church in New York the 8th November, 1705. This contains no address to the reader, but has an appendix attacking the Quakers, and stating that many people of Pennsylvania were deserting their meetings on account of the "vilest and grossest Errors" taught by them.

The great dock and slips are leased to John Ellison for the term of nine years. He is required to clean the dock "to the hard Sandy foundation," while two yearly sums of money shall be paid upon his own Cost and Charge in the broad Street Joyning to the South End of the Common shore that now is and running from thence in length to the North End of the fish bridge in Said Street and the Said Shoaar to be made of two Inch board or of hard brick." This common sewer is to be completed by the following June. Ellison is also required "to make A Head on the End of the North End of the Said Bridge of good Stockadoes or Stone Wall to the full height of the New Street." His rental is to be one pepper corn per annum for the first three years, and £35 per annum for the last six years.—M. C. G., II: 247. On Dec. 9, Ellison having "fallen from his Agreement," the common council leased the dock and slips to a trio of lessors, Lancaster Symes, merchant, Gerritt Vanhorne, boltier, and Christopher Denne, carpenter, for 12 years from Nov. 1, 1705. The conditions about cleaning these properties were the same as those formerly agreed to by James Spencer. The new lessees were also required "att their own proper Cost and Charge" to make "A Common Sewer from the fish Bridge to the Other Common sewer in the broad street," to be finished by the following June; and "to make A head of stone or Stockadoes the height of the Bridge att the North End thereo." Ellison is also required "to fill up a Corner of the Dock Next Alderman Cortlandts and also A Slip of the Dock on the West Side thereof Next to white Hall or to Clean the same att their discretion.——"Ibid., II: 250-51.

Vanhorne soon retired from the combination (Feb. 13, 1705), and the lease was changed accordingly.—Ibid., II: 278. A combination of lesses proved no more satisfactory than a single one.—See Feb. 15, 1706; also Peterson & Edwards, N. Y., as an 18th Century Municipality, 120-22. See diagram of the dock, Addenda, 1700.

A city ordinance is passing provided that no carrame shall drive his cart over the Common sewer the lower end of the broad street of this city upon penalty of three shillings.——M. C. G., II: 229. It remained in force until 1712.—Ibid., II: 257. See Nov. 6, 1704.

The sum of £10 is appropriated by the common council "for the Covering of the Markethouse by the custom House building." Workmen are to be employed by the town.——Ibid., II: 249. On Dec. 9, an additional sum of £16 was appropriated "for the Shingling the Markethouse by the custom house."——Ibid., II: 251.

"Ordered, That Mr Wm Bradford & his Wife do sit in that house of the Pew which was formerly Mr Saml Burts along with Mr Dirck Ved Burts and continue till the said Burts Male children are of years to use the same."——Trin. Min. (MS.).

Capt. Congreve, writing in this year to the Soc. for the Propagation of the Gospel regarding the "State of the Church in New York, 1704," said that "Before Colli: Fletcher was Govr of 1704 the Province of New York, no maintenance made for — Maintenance or Support of a Minister of the Church of England, nor Church erected in any part of the Province . . . . " Fletcher obtained contributions from "Colli: Nicholson Govr of Virginia" and others, founded and erected Trinity Church, and granted a charter to "the Rector, Church-Wardens," etc. He also procured the passage of an act which settled a maintenance of £100 per annum on the minister, who had also £26 per annum paid "out of his Majesty's Revenues" for house rent (stopped by Bellomont, but restored by Cornbury); but no "Paronage House" had yet been built. Lord Cornbury, "who religiously promotes the true interest of the Church & generously protects Servants & Members," also obtained an act to increase the minister's maintenance £60 per annum.—From transcript in Library of Congress of Clarendon MSS. (in Bodleian Library, Oxford), cited 102, f. 152 ("Extracts in Letters and Memorials relating to Lord Cornbury while governor of New York, 1702-1705") ; this extract is also among those from the Lambeth MSS. made by Rev. Francis L. Hawks, D.D., in 1836, and filed with Hawks MSS. in Church Mission House, N. Y. City.

A free Latin school was established, with George Muirson as instructor.—Ecles. Rec., III: 1570. William Blathwayt reports favourably to the lord treasurer Jan. (see May 25) regarding a new grant to the Trinity church-wardens of the Queen's Farm and the Governor's Garden "without reserving any acknowledgment to the Crown." He speaks of the farm as containing about 100 acres, already granted to Trinity Church, and for which the crown receives a yearly acknowledgment of six bushels of what amounting to £12 a year. He values the entire farm at £200.

Of the Governor's Garden, which lies before the church in a convenient location for the minister's house, he says: This half acre "does now lye wast, and is of the smallest Value to be Sold."——Blathwayt, A Visit to New York, 273-77.

In negotiating with Dirck Benson for continuing his lease of the ferry, the common council requires him to "Land all Flower brought over to this City in the ferry Boats at the Slip ater Burgers path and also to Land passengers and other Commodities brought Over to this one tide at the Said Slip ater Burgers path and the Other tide att Countes Key."——M. 18 Dirck Vanderheyden presents his account for wine furnished Lord Cornbury. His excellence gives his prominent note.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 320. The transaction is significant of the character of this governor, who became bankrupt in New York (see Mar. 9, 1700), and whose young son died a drunkard later in Europe (see April 15, 1712). For a description of Cornbury's character and foibles, see Man. Coun. Coun. (1869), 765. See also April 25.

Mar. 18 Ingoldsby, writing from New York to Lord Nottingham on June 14, stated that, having arrived at Virginia with the fleet on Jan. 9, he returned to New York the beginning of March. Cornbury ordered his commission as lieutenant-governor published the next day in the council.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV: 1529-30. The commission had been granted by the queen Nov. 26, 1702 (q. v.). It was revoked April 11, 1706 (q. v.).

8 This being the anniversary of proclaiming "her present Majesty Queen Anne," a celebration, consisting of a bonfire, with wine provided for toasting the queen's health, is held. A similar celebration was held on April 23 (erroneously recorded "the thirteenth of April"), on the anniversary of her coronation. It is ordered by the common council that it shall be lawful for any person "to Kill any Swine that Shall be found Running at large in the Streets or Commons of this City on the south side of the fresh water."—M. G. C., II: 258; VI: 152.

The common council issues a peremptory order that all the swine on the south side of the great dock must be completed (raised and paved), as required by the terms of the grants of the lots fronting them. Likewise, the owners of the lots fronting the dock are required to have the "Said Street" raised, levelled, and paved, and the street now is "before the door of Mr. John Vanhorn." All these improvements must be finished by May 1 next.—M. G. C., II: 258.

The first printing-press in the English-speaking colonies of America was set up by Stephen Daye, in Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1639 (q. v., Mar.). Fifty years later, the earliest product of the press having the character of a domestic newspaper, was printed. This was a journalistic broadside, called The Present State of the New-English Affairs, bearing the imprint "Boston, Printed and Sold by Samuel Green, 1689." It may fairly be called "the precursor of the American newspaper." A specimen of this scarce sheet is preserved in the Massachusetts Archives, State House, Boston; the only other known copy is in the author's collection. Following this, and prior to the appearance of The Boston News-Letter, there were other sporadic papers of a news character published: Publick Occurrences both Foreign and Domestick (Boston, Sept. 25, 1690); Letters Written by John Campbell, Postmaster of Boston, and sent to the Governors of New England (April-Oct., 1703); and Letters Written by Duncan Campbell of Boston and sent to Governor Winthrop of Connecticut (May, 1700).—See An Historical Digest; Green, Ten Fac-simile Reproductions (1901); ibid. (1907).

It is ordered by the governor and council that the following warrants be issued: to pay William Smith for use of his house as soldiers' quarters; and to pay the commissioners of the revenue for fitting up the chapel's and surgeon's quarters in the fort, and for entertaining the governor's house.—Col. Coun., 195, 196.

The common council orders that Thomas Byerley, the receiver-general, and George Clarke, the secretary of the province, "be Complimented with the freedom of this City."—M. G. C., II: 263.

It is ordered by the governor and council that warrants be issued to pay Daniel Ebbetts for bricklayer's work in the fort; and Anne Daniels and Elizabeth Stokes for nursing sick soldiers.—Col. Coun. Min., 196.

The governor's council assigns a committee to "agree with workmen as Cheap as possible ... for the making of such repairs and doing of such things and finding Materials for the same in and abt her Majities 9th Fort in New York as were yesterday reported to this board to be of most absolute necessity to be done at present." Christopher Denn, the carpenter, had presented to the council "to Coosider off," at the meeting on May 4, a detailed estimate of the cost of repairs totalling £335. The governor ordered the council to inspect the work and "absolutely necessary to be done at p'tent." The report called for the expenditure of £300 only, including the "Glazing of the fort windows," three "Centry Boxes," 24 "Carriages for the Great Gunn's," and repairing "the Barracks" and "the fence round the fort."—Col. MSS., XLI: 69, 70 (Albany). There is a misleading entry in Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 325, under date of May 8, Denn's estimate of work for the council "to Consider off" being labelled "For carpenters' work, &c., done." See, further, May 13.

The committee of the council appointed to let a contract for 13 repairs to the fort, makes a report of the difficulties encountered. No glass has been found in town "for Glazing of the Windows," failing to find any one to undertake the mason's work "by the Great," they have arranged with Daniel Ebbitts as "the most proper man to performe the same" on a day basis. He does not wish to undertake it "unsuited to his Fort" in New York as were yesterday reported to this board to be of most absolute necessity to be done at present."

William Blathwayt, the auditor-general, writing to Sec. Clarke from Whitehall, states that he has received the draughts of the Queen's Farm and of the Governor's Garden; he reports thereon to the lord treasurer, and comments on the public accounts of the province of New York.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 325, citing XLI: 79, of Eng. MSS. in sec. of state's office, Albany; and Blathwayt's Jour. (transcript), II: 265–66. This has reference to the desired May transfer of these properties to Trinity Church.—See Jan. 27 and June 27, 1704, and June 13, 1705.

25 Thomas Coddington having desired to purchase the town lot, "A Certain Gore of Land Situate and being between the Rear of his fence and the Common Road or highway Containing about forty acres of land in the Lots or town lots not sold But Leased for A Term of years."—M. C. C., II: 264. On Oct. 3, it was resolved that 60 acres be leased to Coddington for 21 years at six pence per acre annum. The land is thus described: "beginning where the North West Line between William Hoos and the said Coddingtonley Lotts End that Line Extending its Selle to the Road or highway thence along and between the Road and the Harlem Line Running North till it makes up the Number of Sixty Acres which Shall be Confined by Another Line Running North West and south East between and A Cross from the Road to the Said Line."—Ibid., II: 273. This marks the beginning of the city's policy of leasing (rather than selling) the public lands, which has resulted in great advantage to the municipality.

28 "A Petition by Mrs. Peterson..."—Trinity Church. The Oct. 27, 1704, and June 28, 1705, are noted. The petition is signed by "Robert Thos. the Day after, had a good and comfortable Meeting there [Quaker], and though I had heard... that the Lord Cornbury had threatened, that if ever I should come into his Government he would confine me, for some Words falsely alleged to have been spoken by me to my Testimony, some Time before I was in Maryland, (with which he had no Business at New-York) about the National Church of England, her Sacraments, Order, and Catechism; yet I did not go one Step out of my Way, nor at all shun him about it."—Jour. of the Life of Thomas Story, 370.

29 Cornbury again complains to the Lords of Trade (see Dec. 12, 1702) of the difficulty he has in communicating with England: "The post that goes through this place [New York] goes Eastward as far as Boston but Westward he goes no further than Philadelphia, and there is no other post upon all this continent, so that if I have any letters to send to Virginia, or to Maryland, I must either send an Express who is often retardcd for want of boats to cross those great Rivers, they must go over—or else for want of horses, or else I must send them by some passengers who are going thither—The least I have known any Express take to go from here to Virginia, has been three weeks, so that very often, before I can hear from Colli Nicholson, we are told—M. C. C., II: 278. The corporation law called for a payment of £112 from "every Merchant Trader or Shop Keeper."—M. C. C., II: 321.

June 12 In 2 Sloops. We hear 500 French and Indians are Marched from Canada, to attack some parts of New-England.—N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, June 12–19, 1704.

14 Lieut.-Gov. Ingoldsby reports to Lord Nottingham that the consumption of Bour, the staple manufacture of New York Province, having ceased in the Spanish West Indies on account of the war, the inhabitants within his jurisdiction are much impoverished.—N. T. Col. Docs., IV: 1090.

23 An act of provincial legislature is passed appropriating the room on the south side of the city hall, where the Court's court is usually held, for the general assembly's sessions, and the room in the north-east part for a lobby. To fit up these for the purposes intended, the act provides for raising £1411010 by taxation before the last of October. The city and county of New York are required to pay £31178 of this.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 569. The amount raised by this act is to pay workmen's bills, buy furniture, and buy Alderman Totten "a Pair of Gloves, for his Care and Trouble in the Surveying the Work."—Assembly Jour., I: 180–81.

On June 30, Cornbury wrote to the lords of trade that he signed this bill because "till this time the Assembly has always sat in a Tavern," which he thought "was a scandalous thing."—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 1114–15. For example of such occupation of a tavern, see Dec. 1, 1702.

The property owned by Trinity at this time is described in the act as follows: "Beginning at the corner of the burying-place, and a certain tract of land belonging thereunto, bounded easterly..."—ibid., I: 561. On account of imperfectness in the first charter (see May 6, 1697), this act reincorporates Trinity Church.—Eccles. Rec., III: 1595.

1704 Rip van Dam petitions the common council for “A Grant or July Lease of the swamp lying to the Northward of Mr. Beeckmans Orchard,” and a committee is appointed to examine the city’s title to the property.—M. C. C., II: 266. They reported on Aug. 25 that, after examining “several Ancient Patents,” they found “that the Right and property thereof is in this Corporation,” and a committee was appointed “to treat with Mr. Van Dam or any Other person or persons about farming of the said swamp for the Term of twenty one years.”—Ibid., II: 269. On Oct. 3 (q. d.), it was resolved to lease the Swamp to Van Dam at an annual rental of 20 shillings.—Ibid., II: 274.

2 The common council pays the executors or administrators of John Cooley, blacksmith, “for Iron work done to a Battery of Guos under the Trees on the East Side of Burgars path in the year 1703.”—M. C. C., II: 266. It was constructed prior to 1695.—See “Half-moon at Burger’s Path (second site),” in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

8 A petition to Cornbury is read in council from the rector, etc., of Trinity Church, asking that certain funds, raised for the redemption of captives in Barbary, may be applied toward “finishing the building of 3d Church.”—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), III: 253-54. On Aug. 14, a committee reported favourably on the petition.—Ibid., III: 255.

24 Trinity vestry orders “That a Convenient place be fitted in the lowest flour [sic] in the Steeple for the Rector to retire in & that the same be left to the Discretion of the Church Wardens.”—Trin. Min. (MS.).

25 A French privateer, having overtaken and plundered several sloops, comes to anchor at Sandy Hook, where she continues her depredations. A Dutch privateer, commanded by Capt. Claver, engaged the French vessel on July 28, but “without affecting any thing.” On July 29, “Capt Everett and Capt Pennistoon in two good Sloops” started in pursuit of the French privateer.—From N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, July 31-Aug. 7, 1704; Col. Coun. Min., 199. See also July 26, 1705.

29 Peter van Dyke’s name appears in the “list of men that have signed to goe with Capt. Nicholas Everetson on an expedition against a french privateer which appeared off the coast.” Van Dyke ranks as one of the most expert of American silversmiths. He was an active participant in the factious strife which kept the city in a state of political unrest during the administration of Gov. Cochy. For a sketch of his life and work, see Met. Museum of Art Catalogue of Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1916), xxviii-xx, 58-60.

27 The militia is called out because of the report that ten large ships, supposed French, have come within Sandy Hook. On the following day they were found to be prizes of Capt. Claver (see July 25), who was allowed to bring them into port.—Cal. Coun. Min., 199.

30 Capt. George Rogers of the man-of-war “Jersey” refuses to obey an order for cruising, except by request in writing. Such a letter to him is signed the next day by order of the governor’s council. On Aug. 7, he went in pursuit of the French privateer (see July 25), which, it is reported, intends to go toward Boston. The council warns Gov. Dudley of Massachusetts.—Cal. Coun. Min., 199.

31 There is a house, owned by Augustus Lucas, a mile from New York (i.e., north of the Fresh Water Pond). It is offered for sale.—Boston News-Letter, July 31-Aug. 7, 1704.

34 The council for Propagating the Gospel opened “a Catechising School for the Slaves at New York, in the year 1704, in which City there were computed to be about 1500 Negro and Indian Slaves.” They recommended that “The Legislature in the Colonies, would, by a law, oblige all Slaves to attend for their Instruction.” A teacher was found in Capt. Elias Neau a Lanter in New York City as a Trader.” He commenced his labours in the year 1704, with great Diligence,” the schoolhouse being “the uppermost floor in Mr. Neau’s House.”—From An Account of the Endeavours used by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign parts. Aug. to instruct the Negro Slaves in New York, together with Two of Bp. Gibson’s Letters on that Subject (London, 1750), reprinted in A Short Account of that Part of America (1850), II: 117. Extracted from divers Authors, in order to shew the iniquity of that Trade, and the falsity of the Arguments usually advanced in its Vindication (3rd ed., Phila., 1762). London, reprinted, 1768. See also Chronology, April 7, 1715; March 11, 1715. Regarding Elias Neau’s religious activities, see Eccles. Rec., III: 1559. “The most effective work of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among Negroes of the Northern colonies was accomplished in New York.”—Jour. of Negro Hist. (1916), I: 356. For other references to Neau’s work, see Desc. Hist. N. T., III: 75, 78, 82, 84, 566; and a brief reference to his career in Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 85-86. Gov. Cornbury returns to New York from Albany, “which place with the rest of the Frontiers, he found in a very good posture of Defence.”—N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, Aug. 14-21, 1704.

15 Trinity corporation petitions the common council for “A Re- lease of the Title of this Corporation to the Land Adjacent to the Church & Buryal place &c.;” and a committee is appointed “to Examine into the Quantity of the Land Desired.”—M. C. C., II: 268.

20 A new lease is granted by the common council to Dirck Benson, “the farmer of the ferry,” on his application, which shows “the great decay of the Revenue thereof Occasioned by the late sickness, by Another ferry being settled at yellow hooke, and by the Transport-ation of the Corne of long Island Another way and by Several Other ways and means,” etc.—M. C. C., II: 267-68. See Jan. 27, 1701; Jan. 27, 1704; April 11, 1705.

32 Elias Neau (see Aug. 4) writes from New York to Mr. Cham- berlayne: “I went with Mr. Moor to His Excellency’s [Cornbury’s] House, & we spoke to him concerning the Designs of the Society for the Prop. of the Gospel, for the Instruction of the Indians & Negroes, who promised to assist us both with his Authority . . . If Mr. Vesey had as much affectation for ye Illustrious Society as my Lord Cornbury, I should not meet with ye least Difficulty.”—From transcript in Library of Congress of Clarendon MSS. (in Bodleian Library, Oxford), cited 102, f. 150 (“Extracts of Letters and Memorials relating to Lord Cornbury while governor of New York, 1702-1707”).

30 In accordance with the act of the general assembly to enable the city to raise money to defray the annual public charges, the common council resolves that £50 be raised by taxation “for the making of sufficient Goals,” to pay the city’s share of the expense “for the finishing the Assembly Room and Lobby,” and to pay salaries and other necessary charges.—M. C. C., II: 270. A copy of this letter of the French congrega- tion is buried.—Boston News-Letter, Sept. 4-11, 1704. See Dec. 10, 1702.

8 A ship, supposed to be a French privateer when seen off Sandy Hook on the 6th, is bought to the city. The crew was ordered ex- amined, and on Capt. Claver’s statement it was a prize to be taken by Capt. Rene Toogreton (commander of a privateer) from one “L’Roux,” who had been trading illegally with the Spaniards.—Cal. Coun. Min., 200. A letter from Martineau written earlier in the year mentioned a “M. Laroux” who was connected with the Spanish trade there. The similarity of his activities and those of the above-mentioned L’Roux make their identity seem probable. “There is lately arrived a small Spanish ship of 6 guns from Laverderouse with about 800,000 pieces of eight, they have two French-men-of-war, each 50 guns, getting richly loaded to the coast of New Spain . . . and the convoy of this fleet has 50 guns richly loaded with money and merchandise, which has been trading on that coast this two years and commanded by M. Laroux.”—Cal. State Papers: Am. and W. Indies (1704-5), 184. See Oct. 10, 1695.

10 A warrant is issued by the governor and council to Capt. John Riggs, the commandant of the fort, to permit the burial of Mary Slaughter, widow of the late Gov. Henry Slaughter, in a vault in the fort beside her husband.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng. 311. The coffins deposited here were removed when the fort was demolished. See June 18, 1700.

3 A Jacob Regnier, barrister-at-law, is accorded the freedom of the Oct. city.—M. C. C., II: 278. He was living in New York City.

3 The city leases more outlying lands. Twenty-one year leases are given of Beeckman’s Swamp and of 60 acres in Harlem.—M. C. C., II: 273. See May 25 and July 11.
The city pays John Ellison £11:6:3 for Plank Nails and Oct. worke done for the Rails Round the market house by the Bridge.—M. G. C., II: 274. See May 17, 1700.

There is laid before the clergy of the English Church, convened at New York by Lord Cornbury and Col. Francis Nicholson, a "Summary Account" of the state of the church in the province. Among the benefits of Trinity Church, enumerated by Rev. William Vesey, is the gift of a bell, valued at £50, from the Bishop of London. Vesey also states that Cornbury, in view of the past and present expense of the parishes of Trinity "in raising the Edifice and steeple to that perfection they designed it," recommended to the town to bestow a further aid to this noble and available object. The said City, known by the name of the King's Farm, to the use & benefit of the said Church, with half an acre of ground adjoining to the said Church designed by his Lordship [Cornbury] for a Garden and a house to be built for the said Incumbent." Cornbury has also "contributed to the building a French church." He has been instrumental "in erecting a law for establishing a Latin free school, and to endow it with a salary of Fifty pounds per Annum, to which station his Lordship hath preferred the ingenious Mr. George Muirison, who for sometime discharged that function with approbation & Success. Two other Schools are likewise established in this City by his Excellency's care, &c.

Vesey continues (and this portion of his "Account" appears to be addressed to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel) by recommending that "the Worthily and ingenious Mr. Muirison be appointed, instead of "the pious and deserving Mr. Elias Neau," to the school in Dec. 1670.—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), III: 74-75. The original MS. of this "Account" is with the Clarendon MSS., in the Bodleian Library, Oxford.

John Talbot writes from New York to Mr. Keith that Cornbury on this day signed the commission of Mr. Sharpe to be "Chaplain for Her Majy Fort & Forces at N. York," in place of "Mr. Mott who dyed about 3 Months ago" (see July 22).—From transcript in Lib. of Cong. of Clarendon MSS. (in Bodleian Library, Oxford), cited 1021 f 151 ("Extracts of Letters and Memorials relating to Lord Cornbury while governor of New York, 1702-1707"). The text of the commission is in Dec. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), III: 250. Sharpe continued in this capacity until March 11, 1713 (p. 9).

Nov. Daniel Ebbets, a bricklayer employed to make repairs on the fort (see May 13), petitions the governor for the payment of his account of £410:0:07, which, he says, "has been audited and found just." Having procured "materials for the said work, on his promise to pay for them in a very short time," he is every day "threatened to be arrested and put in prison for the Victuals he & his family eat while he was working in the said Garrison, & for the materials he used about the work." He adds that he has no money to pay for "his labour," and that the contractors, "in this Extremity or else he shall inevitably Starve in Goale this winter and his family perish for want of Sustenance."—Col. MSS., L: 17 (Albany). The records give us no information regarding the outcome.

Cornbury reports to the lords of trade that, since his last letter of June 30, a French privateer of 14 guns has taken a ship just outside Sandy Hook, bound from England to New York, on which were packets addressed to him by the lords.

He refers to his intention of proposing the introduction of a bill in each province to lay a tax to maintain "the post" (the press-riders), "which then might have gone from Boston to North Carolina."

He explains "how necessary it is to have a standing Force in this Province, where we are exposed to the invasions of the Enemy by sea," adding that "there have not a hundred barrels of powder left, and several of them are spoiled, I have no small arms at all, no Cartouch boxes nor paper, not one bed for the men to lie upon, but what has been peeced over and over again, not a sword in the Garrison, nor a dagger yet the Enemy should attempt any thing upon our frontiers this Winter, we shall not have powder enough left for salutes."—N. Y. 7: Col. Doc., IV: 1120-21.

Ebenzer Willson, the high sheriff, is paid £100:0:09 for "the fitting and making sufficient the Goals of this City."—M. G. C., II: 276.

Alderman Jeremiah Tothill is paid £11:18:8 by the common council as "the Quoitation and proportion of the City and County of New York for fitting and furnishing A Room for the Genl Assembly with A Lobby in the City Hall of New York Pursuant to the Act of Genl Assembly for Raising of the same."—M. G. C., II: 276. See June 27, 1704.

Carmen are forbidden to drive their carts "over the Common Sewer in the broad Street near the Little Bridge upon penalty of £5 to be paid to the Freeman who first shall discover the same."—M. G. C., II: 277. This action was probably due to the fact that the sewer was not extended through to the dock, but was open and covered with plank at the foot of Brant St. On Aug. 20, 1709 (p. 7), the sewer was ordered extended and the open space beneath the little bridge filled in. For location of the little bridge and the development of the adjacent water front from 1648 and 1709, see diagram, Add. M. C., 1709.

The court of chancery is revived by Cornbury's order.—Col. Coun. Min., 202. See also An Ordinance of His Excellency, Edward Vincs Cornbury, Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over the Province of New [farr] York, New Jersey and Territories depending thereon in America, and Vice-Admiral of the same, etc., in Council (printed by Bradford, 1704). This court had been suspended by a previous ordinance, June 13, 1702 (p. 9).—Col. Coun. Min., 171.

A proclamation is received in Boston, signed by the queen, affecting the rates of all foreign coins in the English colonies, and specifying their value in shillings and pence. These coins include "Seville Pieces of Eight," old and new, "Ducatons of Flanders," "Crusados of Portugal," "Old Rix Dollars of the Empire," etc.—N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, Dec. 4-11, 1704. This proclamation was reached New York Jan. 23, 1705— Ibid., Jan. 29-Feb. 5, 1705.

"The Cittie of New York is a pleasant, well compacted place, situated on a Commodus River wth is a fine harbour for shipping. The Buildings Brick Generally, very stately and high, though not altogether like ours in Boston. The Bricks in some of the Houses are of divers Coullers and laid in Checkers, being glassed lock very agreeable. The inside of them are neat to admiration, the wooden work, for only the walls are plastered, and the Sumers and Gist are plained and kept very white scow'd as so is all the partitions of made of Bords. The fire places have no Jams (as numberes have) But the Basics run flush with the walls, and the Hearth is of Tyles and is as far out into the Room at the Ends as before the fire, wth is Generally Five foot in the Low'r rooms, and the peice over where the mantle tree should be is made as ours with Joyners work, and as I suppose is faster'd in order rodd's inside. The House where the Vendue was, had Chimney Corners like ours, and they and the hearths were laid wth the finest tile that I ever see, and the stair cases laid all with white tile which is ever clean, and so are the walls of the Kitchen wth had a Brick Floor. They were making Great preparations to Receive their Governor, Lord Cornbury from the South, and for that End raised the militia to Gard him on shore to the fort. "They are Generally of the Church of England and have a New England Gentleman for their minister, and a very fine church set out with all Customary requites. There are also a Dutch and Divers Conventicles, as they call them, viz. Baptist, Quakers, &c. They are not strict in keeping the Sabbath as in Boston and other places where I had bin, But seem to deal with great exactness as far as I see or Deall with. They are sociable to one another and Curtees and Civill to strangers and fare well in their houses. The English go very fashionable in their dress. But the Dutch, especially the middling sort, differ from our women, in their habit go house, were [were] French muches [vile] are like a Capp and a head band in one, leaving their ears bare, which are set out wth Jewells of a large size and many in number. And their fingers hoop'd with Rings, some with large stones in them of many Coullers as were their pendants in their ears, which You should see very old women wear as well as Young. "They have Vendues very frequently and make their Earnings very well by them, for they treat with good Liquor Liberally, and the Customers Drink as Liberally and Generally as is by paying for that to which they Bidd up Briskly for, after the sack has goe plentifully abouto, tho' sometime good penny worths are got there. Their Diversions in the Winter is Riding Slews about three or four Miles out of Town, where they have Houses of entertainment at a place called the Bowery, and some go to other Hands House who handsomely treat, and Mr. Burrell has car'd his spouse and Daughter and myself out to one Madame..."
THE CONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1704. Dowes, a Gentlewoman who lived at a farm House, who gave us a handsome Entertainment of five or six Dishes and choice Beer and meathin, Cyder, &c. all which she said was the produce of her farm. I believe we met 50 or 60 slays that day. They went to the market and set the wheels turn out of the path for none except a Loaden Cart. Nor do they spare for any diversion the place affords, and sociable to a degree, they're Tables being as free to their Naysboors as to themselves.

22. Thursday, Dec. 21, set out for New Haven with my Kinsman Trowbridge, and the man that waited on me about one [in the] afternoon and about three came to half-way house about ten miles out of town, where we Baited and went forward, and about 5 came to Spitting Devil, Else Kings bridge, where they pay three pence for passing over with a horse, which the man that keeps the Gate set up at the end of the Bridge receives."—The Journals of Madame Knight, and Rev. Mr. Buckingham. From the Original Manuscripts, Written in 1704 and 1710 (N. Y., 1825).

23. Richard Harris, who had married the widow of Roger Baker, a tavern-keeper in William St. (see Feb. 27, 1704), is allowed the sum of £6218/6, by the common council "for an Entertainment given by this Corporation to his Excellency the Lord Cornbury upon his Arrival here from his Government of New Jersey."—M. G. C., II: 275. For a number of years, Harris's tavern was a favourite public-house. See Nov. 24, 1710.

Rev. William Vesey, in writing (probably this year) regarding the "Benefactions of Trinity Church of New York," mentions that Lord Cornbury " hath contributed to the building a French Church [see July 8, 1704]. And since the death of the late minister of the French congregation [see Sept. 2, 1704] resolves to use his interest to introduce a French minister that shall have Episcopal ordination and conform to the constitution of the church."—Ecles. Recs., III: 1552. See June 12, 1804.

3. New York inventory of this year mentions "a fine chest of drawers of walnut and olive wood £.6."—Lockwood, Colonial Furniture in Am. (1901), 53. Chests of drawers were mentioned in the earliest New York records. The first mention, in America, of a tea-table is in a New York inventory of this year.—Ibid., 239.

Feb. A Protestant declaration is signed by the "Justices by &c. City & County of New York" on Feb. 5, and by the "Aldermen & Assisants of New York" on Oct. 14 (all signatures being on the same document), stating: "I do believe that in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, it is not any Tradition of the Church of England used in the Preparation of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ at or after the Consecration thereof by any Person whatsoever and that the Invocation or Adoration of the Virgin Mary or any Other Saint and the sacrifice of the Mass as they are now used in the Church of Rome are superstitious and idolatrous ..."—From the original declaration, in metal file labelled "Filed Papers 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room.

A proclamation from the queen "for settling and ascertainings the current rates of the Coin in the Plantations" is published in New-York, and the city is soon drained of ready money, causing Cornbury to write a protest to the lords of trade. This being "the day the Boston Post sets out from hence," as soon as the proclamation was published "several persons here (pursuant to the directions sent to them from Boston) sent away as much money by the Post, as he could carry, and for four or five days all manner of Trade was stopped: there was no Market, nor one could [sic] buy anything with ready money." Cornbury recites several instances to show how the proclamation has injured trade.—N. Y. Col. Dirs., IV: 1131-33.

Foster Stamps, a citizen of New York, is committing depredations on the Queen's Farm and the Queen's Garden to Trinity Church. It describes the Queen's Farm as "formerly known as the Duke's Farm, and the King's Farm," and now occupied by George Ryder, "yeoman." It is "bounded on the east, partly by the Broadway, partly by the Common, and partly by the Swamp, and on the west by the Hudson's River." The Queen's Garden is described as "on the south side of the churchyard of Trinity Church ... fronting to the said highway by way of Beach to the Hudson River on the West." The patent requires the yearly payment on Christmas Day of three shillings to the receiver-general, and, in case the governor fails to provide the yearly payment of £26 for the rector's house rent, the church shall pay the rent until a suitable house is built for the rector.—Ecles. Rec., 259-61 also The Manatus Maps, II: 191-92. The committee on vacant grounds, regarding the wharfs on the north side of the dock (Pearl St.), that the boards of the dock are forced off, oppose the market-house, the ware-house of Col. Abraham de Peyser, and the house of Mr. Ellison, so that "great quantities of Dirt Runs into the Dock." There are several heaps of stones and trash on it, "which with the Rain is Carried into the Dock." The lessees complain that...

Feb. A “Dunghill made by the market house near the Custom house,” and another “by Whitehall, are carried into the dock by storms. This might be prevented “if the Inhabitants along by Whitehall Cross would be employed to make the waste of these drains, and carry it to the south Ward of Whitehall fronting the River,” also preventing “the Dirt from running of [off] the wharfs on the North-side into the Dock.” The committee thinks “the Inhabitants ought to fix a Piece of timber on the Wall Plate that should rise about Six Inches above the Pavement.”—M. C. II, 394.

Robert Puddlington and others have petitioned the governor and council (Cal. Coun. Min., 280) for a patent for a lot of ground at the ferry, known as the Cherry Garden. A further payment of £144014. 8” for the Effectual Repairing of the Common sewer at the lower End of the Broad Street near the little Bridge was authorized on Jan. 31, 1707.—Ibid., II: 318. See Addenda, 1700, for diagram.

The queen approves, and it is ordered that a warrant to this effect be prepared for her signature.”—N. Y. Col. Doct., IV: 1174-75. These were: on Jan. 8 (an unspecified event, perhaps the victories of the Duke of Marlborough, for which proclamation was to be issued on Dec. 5, 1705—see Cal. Coun. Min., 207) on Feb. 6, Queen Anne’s birthday, her accession, on March 8, her marriage, and on April 21, a bonfire was held the following month, on St. George’s Day (April 23), on the anniversary of the queen’s coronation, as ordered by the common council on April 19.—Ibid., II: 299. Leg. Coun, It 238. Regarding the misappropriation of funds by the colonial governors of New York, Cadwallader Colden wrote to his son in 1739: “There has been a mighty clamour at all times made in general terms of the misapplication of public money by Governors but when they were called upon to give particular instances, they never heard of by the Governor, and granted for fortifying the Narrows on the river below New York which Lord Cornbury applied to building a pleasure house on Nuten Island for himself and succeeding governors to retire to when he inclined to free himself from business.” —N. Cornbury says to the house of representatives: “I cannot help taking Notice to you, how much I am surprised to see that you take no manner of Care for repairing this her Majesty’s Fort, which wants it so much.” —Assem. Jour., I, 212–13.

And the militia of the city and neighboring counties appeared here under arms, to the number of about 300 men. The day before there were 700 under arms in New Jersey, who intended coming to New York, but “their Harvest obstructed.” It is estimated that, in 24 hours’ time, it is possible to have in this city between 4,000 and 5,000 men.—N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, July 1–3, 1706.

Definite advice is received of a French fleet coming to this coast.—Col. Coun. Min., 301. Action was taken by the city on July 24 (g.v.).

The common council passes an ordinance “for the Carrying on the fortifications of this city, as authorized by the act of June 27 (g.v.). It provides that “The Citizens Freeholders and house-keepers Inhabiting of the Five Wards of the said City on the south side of the Fresh water Shall be Compell’d and Obliged by themselves or sufficient Labourers to Work att or upon the said Fortifications by Equal Tutos & wards;” that the day before such labour is to be done, the city “Cryer” or other person appointed by the mayor is to give out that there are 1,500 men, and that the inhabitants of the wards when and where the labourers are to meet; that every one appointed to labour shall come provided with “A good Spade Shovell Axe Pickax or Other Necessary Tool or Instrument,” and shall do the work as directed by the overseers or directors of the fortifications under penalty of £200.—M. C. C., II, 305–5. On each of the following dates ordinances were passed continuing the above orders in force for three months longer: July 26, 1707 (ibid., II, 352); Oct. 28, 1707 (ibid., II, 337); and Apr. 15, 1708 (ibid., II, 355).

A petition is read in common council, approved, and ordered signed and presented to the governor, which states that they have “Received Advice from Antegos that four French Privateers are Sailed out of Martingue for this Coast and also that Monseur Deberville with a Strong Squadron of Ships of War design Speedily to Attaque this City and Provincie” and they therefore ask him “to lay an Embasure in this Port... for the better Security of our City and Navigation.” —M. C. C., II, 305–6. See July 4.

Last week an Embasure was laid here for 60 days, and all per- sons forbid all manner of Labour, and all the Shops shut up until the Fortifications of this City be finished, so that we have near 1000 men at work every day.” —From N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, July 29–Aug. 5, 1706.

“Our Fortifications we hope will be Compleat this week, and Aug. we shall have 1000 Men in this City, besides the Fort, which is also put into very good Repair & Order.” —From N. Y. Letter in Boston News-Letter, Aug. 5–12, 1706.

Sods used in the construction of the fortifications of New York City are paid for.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 349. The payment indicates, doubtless, the progress of the operations, now nearly completed. See July 11.

Lady Cornbury dies in New York City. Her body was buried with much pomp in Trinity Church on Aug. 13.—N. Y. Col. Doc., IV, 1183. See also A Sermon Preached at Trinity Church in New York, in America, August 13, 1706. at the Funeral of the Right Honourable Katherine Lady Cornbury, etc., by John Sharp, A. The governor notifies the legislature that by consent of the Sept. queen they may appoint their own treasurer when they raise “Extraordinary supplies for particular uses.” —Jour. Leg. Coun., II 241.

Robert Loring replaces William Anderson (see Oct. 14, 1703) as treasurer in the cap. M. C. C., II, 308. On Sept. 29, 1706, he was ordered to render to the board “A yearly Acc’t of his Office during the time he has been Treasurer.” —Ibid., II, 417. He resigned his office on Sept. 29, 1711 (g.v.), and on Sept. 29, 1712, was appointed mayor.—Ibid., III, 393.

The common council orders eight ladders and two fire-hooks and poles, to be used in case of fire.—M. C. C., II, 309. These were paid for (4192) on Jan. 21, 1707.—Ibid., II, 316.

Chronology: The English Period: 1664-1763

1706 being detained in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, the people of New York "ran a line of Stockades from the North River to the East River, which is about 45 chains; and raised a good breastwork and another there, but along the River side." He adds: "We have raised three Batteries upon the East River one of two and twenty guns, one seaven guns and one of eight guns; three Batteries on the North River, one of nine Guns, one of five guns and one of three Guns, and one Battery upon a point of Rock upon the river with ten guns. We have raised such number of the Queen's to supply all these Batteries but the City have borrowed 18 guns out of a Scotch Ship which lay at Amboy, and some Merchants here who have some few guns for sale, have likewise lent them. I thought this a favourable opportunity to get the Fort repaired, which was in great need of it; and they repaired everywhere, the Parapet (which is of sodd work) all new done and all the guns that wanted carriages, new mounted and others repaired, so that now I have six and forty guns mounted upon the walls and the Courtines and Bastions of the Fort in as good repair as they can be without New building."—N. Y. Col. Docc., IV: 1185.

21 The legislature passes an act for raising $5,000 by taxation toward defraying the expense of fortifying the city. The appor- tionment of the city and county of New York is $5,000.—Col. N. Y. 1664-1763, II: 599. June 14, 1706.

News reached England that the present of New York has raised $5,000 "for fortifying that town" (New York); that 100 great guns have been mounted upon the walls, and 1,500 men put into the garrison.—Diary of Narcissus Luttrell, in Hist. Mag. (1860), 2d ser., III: 237.

8 The treasurer is ordered to pay Joseph Prosser £1,074 4s. "for repairing the little Bridge by the Dock of this City and the Wall that Supports the Same."—M. C. C., II: 312.

Dec. 21 A woman is appointed by the common council to hold public office. This is Rebecca van Schalck, widow, who is made pound-keeper of the Oat Ward in place of John Brevoort. She is required, at her own expense, to make "a good and sufficient pound and keep the same in good Repair during the time She shall be Keeper thereof;" to render an account under oath every three months, if required, to the common council, and to pay half the profits of the pound to the city treasurers. A pound-keeper's fees are prescribed as follows: "For the poundning every Horse mare or Colt Nine pence, for every Bull Cow Ox heifer or Other Neat Cattle four pence half penny, and for every Sheep or hog three pence."—M. C. C., II: 315.

1707 Jan. Presbyterianism is introduced into New York. Two itinerant Presbyterian preachers (Non-Conformist), Francis Makemie from Virginia and John Hampton from Maryland, come to the city, and, without asking Cornbury's consent, apply to the Dutch and French Churches for permission to preach in them. This is refused, in the absence of a license from Cornbury. On Sunday, Jan. 20, Makemie preached in the house of William Jackson, a shoemaker, to Pearl St., "in as public a Manner as possible, with open Doors," and Hampton preached in a public meeting-house, offered by the inhabitants of Newtown, Long Island. Cornbury, hearing of this on Monday (Jan. 21), informed a warrant to the Sheriff of Queen's County to bring them to New York. This warrant accused them of intent "to spread their pernicious Doctrine and Principles, to the great Disturbance of the Church by Law established, and of the Government of this Province." The sheriff returned with them on Jan. 25, and brought them before Cornbury at the fort. Cornbury claimed, by advice of the attorney-general (May Bickley), that the Act of Toleration, which governed their case, required that they should obtain a license before preaching, to satisfy the government that they were not Papists. Makemie maintained that the law was not applicable to them in Virginia, and that the queen gave liberty of conscience to all her subjects without reserve. But Cornbury found Makemie "so prone to bid Defiance to Government!" that he ordered his imprisonment and prosecution. The grand jury indicted Makemie, but the petit jury acquitted him, and he was freed, but required to pay costs amounting to £53. Cornbury reported the case to the lords of trade on Oct. 14.—N. Y. Col. Docc., IV: 1186-87; and A Narrative of a New and Universal American Imposition, of Two Presbyterian Ministers, . . . By a Learner of Law, and Lover of Liberty. New York, reprinted by Hugh Gaine, 1755.

Cornbury based his prosecution of Makemie upon an alleged clause in his instructions, as follows: "You are not to permit any minister coming from England to preach in your government without a certificate from the Right Reverend the Bishop of London; nor any other minister coming from any other part or place, without first obtaining leave from you, our Governor." This clause was proved by Brodhead, in 1763, to have been a forgery.—Hist. Mag. (1880), II: 297-98.

In the trial of Francis Makemie, "religious toleration was vindicated and sustained, and arbitrary conduct and attempt at tyranny were rebuked and foiled."—Street, The Council of Revision, 39-41.

He was the organizer of the Presbyterian Church in America.—Eccles. Rec., III: 357-79. Regarding the growth of Presbyterianism in New York, see ibid., III: 1671-73. For a list of the Presby- terian churches and ministers in New York from 1707 to 1756, see Am. Quarterly Register, VIII: 321. See also March 12, 1746.

The common council orders that the mayor " Execute the General Relevations, and now ready to Mr. William Anderson late Treasurer of this City" (see Oct. 14, 1706) shall be called under the name of this Corporation." This is to be delivered to Anderson after he has handed to the present treasurer (see Sept. 29, 1706) "all such sum and sums of Money Books papers Acts writings Deeds Leases Evidences and all Other Matters and things whatsoever which are in his hands and possession belonging to this Corpora- tion," and they have been examined to see that there are no "Misdrafts or Omissions in the same."—M. C. C., II: 317. All the accounts were not settled until Jan. 15, 1715, at which time the treasurer was ordered to give Anderson the release.—Ibid., III: 85.

Thomas Bysley is restored to office as collector and receiver.-general.—Col. Coun. Min., 212. Feb. 6

A whale is killed in the Hudson River, and brought down to New York, "where she is exposed to view."—Boston News-Letter, March 3-10, 1707. De Voe, in The Market Book, 22, 110-13, dis- cusses the subject of whales having been seen and taken about the harbour of New York. See also Pls. 19 and 20, Vol. I.

John Lovell and others petition the government and council for a patent for the small island or great rock (Mill Rock), lying between Nassau and Manhattan Islands at Hell Gate. They recite the fact that John Marsh, the millwright, had formerly obtained the promise of such grant from the governor and council, had erected a mill there, and sold it to these petitioners. It is ordered that a warrant be issued to the attorney-general for preparing the grant.—Land Papers, IV: 108 (Albany).

The "Laws Orders and Ordinances" of the city, reassembled and simplified, with unnecessary omissions omitted (cf. M. C. C., II: 223 and 314), are ordained and established, and publicly read and published, to remain in force for three months from this date; and the common council orders that they be printed.—Ibid., III: 319.

Bradford did the printing, for the payment of which an order was issued on May 1 (p. v.).

Trinity vestry orders "That the Queens Garden granted to Apr. the Church be Includ'd with a good Fence."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

The common council orders that Broadway, from Trinity Church to the market-house be paved, before Aug. 1.—M. C. C., III: 321. This was in addition to the streets ordered, on June 12, 1705 (p. v.), to be paved.

The common council authorizes a payment of £2 to William Bradford, "for Printing the Laws of this City."—M. C. C., II: 320. This was the second printed issue of the city ordinances. For the first, see Jan. 15, 1610. The total issue consists of 18 pages, a copy of which is preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library; it is entitled Several Laws Orders & Ordinances Established by the Mayor, Recorder, Alder-men and Assistants of the City of New York Contain'd in Common Council, For the good Rule and Government of the Inhabitants of the said City. See also March 28, 1707.

The grand jurers report to the court of general sessions that "the highways and Bridges between Fresh water Near New York and Kingsbridge are in many places Very much broken defective and greatly out of Repair to the Common hurt and Nusance of all persons travelling to and from the said City." The alderman of the Out Ward is ordered to "Cause the places and bridges defective ... immediately to be sufficiently mended and repaired by the inhabitants of the said Ward."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 124.

The court of general sessions "think it of Absolute Necessity that A Bridewell be built and maintained within the City of New York for the better Suppressing of Vice and Maintenance of the poor; and Recommend the Commission of the same to the Common Council of the said City to make Application to the General Assembly of this Province to pass an Act for raising a fund for the building and Maintenance of the same."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 124. This appears to be the first suggestion of a bridewell. The common council was the first body to take any action official, but not until Nov. 21, 1765 (p.v.).

Her majesty's ship "Titton's Prize" sails out of Sandy Hook and has an encounter with a French privateer. After almost a week spent in repairing damages, she went to sea again on the 8th. An embargo was in force until her return.—Boston News-Letter, June 16-23, 1767. See also Col. Coun. Min., 213; and Chron., June 13, 1767.

13 Trinity vestry orders "That the Church Wardens visit the Men that were wounded on board her Matys Ship the Trytons Packet engaged with a French Privateer on this Coast & Supply them & Families with necessaries not exceeding Ten pounds."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

It is also ordered "That Capt Mathews hold & enjoy the Garden called the Queen's Garden, (Grantcd to the Church by his Excellency the Lord Vincent Cornbury,) for seven years, if he so live long. If the same be not demanded by the Church Wardens for the time being, to Erect a House thereon for the Incumbent of Trinity Church. Upon Condition the said Garden be Planted & Improvd with good choice Fruit Trees & be laid out in Walks according to the Approbation of the same, Wardens for the time being & leave the same Improvements & the fence in good repair, when surrendered, & also to Level & make even the passage Lane or way, that Leads from the broad way between the Church-Yard & said Garden to the North River by the Locus Trees, standing by the said River."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

16 The commissioners appointed by the act of June 19, 1765 (p.v.), to lay out highways on Manhattan Island, render their report, which, according to two verified transcripts in the records of the court of general sessions, is in the language printed below, the bracketed insertions being added to indicate the present author's interpretation of the landmarks mentioned, and also to show the textual variations in the two transcripts:

"Return of the Commissioners for Laying out the Highways in the City of New York

The paragraph beginning with the words "From the House at the End of New York Lane ..." was omitted from the original entry at pp. 129-30, and not until Nov. 1, 1726, was it supplied (pp. 470-71), at which time the following explanation was written into the record:

"The Surveyors of Highways in the year 1707 delivered into Court then held the sixth day of August 1707 A Return of their Survey of Highways in the City of New York which was Ordered to be Recorded in this Book of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the City & County of New York a Copy of which was delivered to the Clerk of this Court, and the Original Return of the said Survey being produced to this Court it appears a Paragraph was wanting in the said Copy Recorded which is in the Original Return now produced & which Paragraph is in italics. The word "in" being struck out.

It is therefore Ordered that the Clerk of this Court do Record the said Paragraph with the Other Return of the aforesaid Survey & that it be Deemed & Esteemed a part of the said Return. The entire report was entered in full, at this later date (pp. 472-73), to include the missing paragraph, and the paragraph was also entered in the margin of the page of the original entry.

The difference in the date of the document shown in the two transcripts is particularly noticeable. The text of both, as printed above, has been modified by the introduction here of which Survey, punctuation, and capital letters for geographical names and for the initial letters of sentences, in the belief that this slight editing will materially aid the interpretation of the document. No attempt has been made to locate the original report in the archives of the present court of general sessions, though it is quite likely that an examination of the earliest file-papers in storage would reveal it.

The commissioners' report was printed in the Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 568-69. This was apparently from the original text, as evidenced by the fact that Valentine supplied a word (and so erroneously) which he stated was "turn our main square," whereas this word is perfectly clear in the transcripts. See also Feb. 26, 1715.

The foregoing description of the highways includes, first, the
From this it seems safe to infer that the "Guard Room" of 1697-9 (ibid., I: 321, 351) was in the first city hall; also that the "watch house" of 1712 (ibid., III: 6) was not a separate building but another name for the room mentioned above in the new city hall on Wall St. It is referred to again in the same time as the "Guard Room."—ibid., III: 11. See also May 6, 1717.

The name Single or Cingle St., for Wall St., is still noted in Aug. public documents. Lidea Rose, widow, petitions for a patent for a lot "in the street formerly called Single street, now Wall street."—Land Papers, IV, 125 (sec. 198, 1663, New York). Likewise, in 1710 (March 21), Lancaster Symes sought a patent of confirmation for houses and ground "in the street formerly called Cingle street, now called the Wall street."—ibid., V: 62. The "Cingle" was mentioned as early as 1657.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 166. The name Wall St. appeared as early as Dec. 16, 1685.—See Beckwith's survey, Land Papers, II: 145 (Albany).

Capt. Sheldon, "who was sent in April last from New-England with a Flag of Truce to Canada," arrives from Albany with a French flag of truce and seven New England captives.—N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, Sept. 5, 1705; Cal. Coun. Min., 214. This was evidently an exchange of prisoners. The common council appoints a committee to direct the paving of "the street Commonly Called the broad way lying in the West Ward of this city."—M. C. C., II: 326. See June 12, 1705.

The house in question was "the Inhabitants Near the Wall Street Slip have liberty to fill up the same street, and make thereof as they shall think Convenient provided the Lessees of the Dock & Slips Consent to the same."—M. C. C., II: 326. On May 20, 1708, this regulation was continued by order of "this Court," in a petition opposing it being rejected.—ibid., II: 335. Lord Cornbury sais for Albany "to view the Frontiers; A N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, Sept. 5, 1707. He returned Oct. 14.—Cal. Coun. Min., 215.

"Ordered that Mr Wormstall and the persons Concern'd in the house where Mr Maclame lives in the Bridge Street in the South Ward of this City doe forthwith Effectually repair the Street and wharse belonging to the said house fronting to the Dock upon pain of being prosecuted for their Neglect or default."—M. C. C., II: 378-27. John Maclane, a tavern-keeper, had evidently removed into the East Ward by Sept. 29, 1709, when he was elected a constable of that ward.—M. C. C., II: 358. In 1714, he was elected a collector.—ibid., III: 69. His tavern, in 1729, was "on the Dock," and its sign was "the Blue Anchor."—See Oct. 16, 1719.

The governor in council appoints Capt. Ebenezer Wilcox (see Mar. 15, 1699, for his being chosen for the county council) a justice.—ibid., II: 329. Robert Lurting is redirected "treasurer and chamberlains" of the city.—ibid., II: 330. Wilcox was reappointed mayor in 1708, and in 1709.—ibid., II: 362, 384. For a sketch of his life, see Man. Coun. Coun., (1875), 409.

The common council orders that "the Church Wardens of this city put A Badge upon the Cloths of such poor as are Clothed by this City with this Mark NY in blew or Red Cloath."—M. C. C., III: 330. This mention of the churchwardens in connection with the care of the poor indicates a change in the city's administration of its charity work. See Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipalitiy, 188. For previous care of poor, see Oct. 19, 1685; Dec. 4, 1691; Oct. 20, 1705.

The common council orders that the city ferry between Nassau Island and this city, together with the new ferry-house, old house, barn, pen, etc., situated on Nassau Island, "be left to farm," on Oct. 10, for five years. Feb. 26, 1726, 1727.

The justices deliver to the assessors of the city two warrants "for Assessing the Other Monety" of the taxes to be raised in this city and county pursuant to two acts of the general assembly, one being for raising 35,000 towards fortifying the city, and the other for raising 25,000 to fortify the frontiers.—M. C. C., II: 334. See also Oct. 21, 1706.

The common council directs that a mayor's warrant be issued to the treasurer to pay "for fitting the Room in the City Hall for the Constables watch as Appears by his Accr."—M. C. C., II: 335.
New York, "Vicueller," at a rental of $380 per annum.—M. G. C., II: 335-37. On Nov. 21, he was given liberty "to land from and take on board the ferry boats all passengers att the most convenient place after Sunn Set."—Ibid., II: 338. Harding, who was a constable in 1702 (M. G. C., II: 281, 289), became sheriff in 1726 (ibid., 285), and as such, was frequently fined for his neglect of duty. He was also fined for using the ferry as a means of transportation. His actions were considered illegal, and he was fined several times for his behavior. The ferry-service was a monopoly controlled by the town and charged high fees, which the people of New York resented. The ferry was also used for criminal purposes and was a source of corruption. Because of the lawlessness and corruption, the ferry was eventually discontinued.

14 Ebenzer Wilson, who on Oct. 4 was appointed mayor, and Sheriff William Anderson (Col. Com. Min., 243), are sworn in.—M. G. C., II: 335. Regarding the form of oath taken by the mayor, see Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 355. According to custom (see Oct. 14, 1698), the common council pays the Rev. Mr. Vesey, rector of Trinity Church, $3 for "preaching a sermon to this Corporation, it being the Anniversary day" when, each year, the newly appointed and elected officials of the city are inducted into office.—M. G. C., II: 337.

18 The common council orders that "the Butchers Shop in the Broadway now in the Occupation of Jeremiah Callcutt" be demolished, and that he have liberty "to Call it the Materials thereof to his own use."—M. G. C., II: 338. This was the Broadway shambles or meat-market at Bowling Green, erected in 1684.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 942. For expansion of the ferry lease, ten years later, see Dec. 24, 1717; see also Man. Com. Coun. (1882), 543-45.

G. C., II: 338. Swift, who had come to New York at the time of Lord Cornbury's arrival, was voted a freeman June 27, 1702.—Ibid., II: 197. His tavern stood on Broadway in 1724, when Arent Schuyler bequeathed the house, then in the possession of Mr. Swift, to his two daughters.—Abstracts of Wills, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1894), III: 18. Pellestrau, in a footnote to the above, says the tavern stood at the present 109 Broadway.

The common council orders that the "little Bridge by the Dock" be repaired at an expense of not above $4.—M. G. C., II: 339.

Dec.
17 There are now above 800 Houses, the meanest worth 100 l. in this City, which for the Strength and Pleasance of its Situation, would ruin the town with fire, if any in the building of a Parish Church; but that is large and beautiful; and the Minister has 100 l. a year settled on him. The Council-House is a fair Edifice. James-Fort is a strong, regular Fortification, and commands the River. Besides this, it has a Wall to the Land, mounted with Ordnance, and seems to defy the Power of French or Indians. There is a Printing-Press in this Town... The City of New-York is thought to be the fairest City in the World, already stated, most of them very well built. The Great Church was built in the year 1695. Col. Fletcher being Governor by the charitable Contributions of himself, Col. Nicholson, Governor of Virginia, and other well-disposed Christians. This Church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. There are also a Dutch Church, French Church, and Lutheran Church; and a Free-school proc'd to be erected by the present Governor. The Minister of the English Church is the Reverend Mr. William Vesey.—Ibid., II: 119-20.

The Walls before-mentioned in the Description of this City were standing when 'twas called New-Amsterdam, but its chief Decoration now is Anne Fort, and two new Batteries, one on each side of the Narrows, to secure the Place by Sea. A will dated at New York in this year specified that the wife of the testator should be allowed to "take a new cubbard [see 1702] that is now amaking by Mr. Shavellick,"—Lockwood, Col. Fam. in Am. (1901), 104. An inventory refers to "an easy chair for the Chamber," 165, 166; an inventory of easy chairs after 1700, and, as they are inventoried much higher than the other chairs, we conclude that they were rather scarce, and belonged only to persons of means.—Ibid., 162-64.

A silver wine-taster and a silver mug, made by Bartholomew Schaats, which was advertised as a freeman of New York in this year, are described in Met. Museum of Art Cat. of Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1911), 47-58. Schaats died in 1758.—Ibid., 47.

The Pennsylvania Post is not yet come in, because the Bay is full of Ice, & in several places quite fast, none dare venture out.—From N. Y. lett. to Gen. Letters, Jan. 19-26, 17. A second ferry to Long Island is petitioned for by Cornelius Sebering (or Sebring). He asks Cornbury for a ferry to his farm on Nassau Island "directly over against the center of the City of New York." This, he believes, "can be of no hurt or dammage to the old ferry it being not so convenient for that ferry to send their boats to the South end and Center of the City where he proposes to send his. He desires "Letters Patentes" to establish the ferry which shall have its terminal on the old ferry and Red Hook, and its terminal on Manhattan Island, between Capt. Theobald's Slip and the great bridge. The petition is endorsed by 49 persons, who believe that the ferry will be of considerable advantage to the city and county of New York, if the prices for transportation are not excessive.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), III: 255-56. A copy of this petition being produced by the mayor in the common council on Feb. 2, it was ordered that the board petition the governor that the Sebring petition be rejected.—M. G. C., II: 341. A draft of such petition was submitted to and adopted by the board on Feb. 4, and the engrossed copy bears date of Feb. 5. This petition recites that the present landing-place on Nassau Island "hath been Commonly Esteemed and Reputed for seventy years past to Extend from A heap of Rock Stones Gathered together on A small wharf or Landing bridge Near the ferryhouse on the Said Island unto the West End of the Hill to the Westward of the same and that from high water to low water Mark." It refers to the expenses paid for erecting the "several Public Buildings for the service thereof," the services rendered by the ferry, the low ferry rates charged, etc.; and states that the profits arising out of the present ferry "have always been Appropriated by this Corporation for the Public Service of the Government of the said City and is the only Considerable Income left to Support the public Buildings Bridges Gaols Landing places fire and Candle for their watches the Saillars of their Officers Bellmen etc." The common council's petition explains to Cornbury that by granting Sebring's petition for a private grant, "it will be for the very subsistence of the Corporation, and a public benefit.—Ibid., II: 345-46. Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), III: 256-57.

The city was represented by attorney before the governor and 1708 council, and the Sebring petition was rejected.—M. C. C., III. 345.

Jan. 23 for a second ferry to Long Island, the common council took steps on March 5 (q. v.) to strengthen its own monopoly.—Fech. Mr. Couch delivered this day to 2 Col Wenham a List of Writings belonging to Trinity Church via 2 "A Patent for the Queenexs Farme & Garde 3 reports See what counsel general Rent Redhooke VII: a Lease of the Farme. 4 a Conveyance of the ground behind the Church from Mr De Riemer. 9 Lewis Morris, writing to the secretary of state, complains of Cornbury's mismanagement of the government, of his accepting bribes, etc. He compares his administration with that of Gesius Florus, governor of Judea (who was appointed by Nero, and finding the country in a tumult added fuel to the flame, whose ruling passion was avarice, and who practiced every species of iniquity to aggrandize himself). Morris adds, regarding Cornbury, "I must say something about perhaps no body will think worth their while to tell, and that is, his dressing publicly in woman's cloaths every day, and putting a stop to all publick business while he is pleasing himself wth: y peculiar but detestable magot."—N. T. Col. Dict., V: 33-38. See also, regarding the character of Lord Cornbury, Hist. Mag., Feb. 1688, 2d ser., 71; Man. Com. Coun. (1869), 763; Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 555; and N. J. Archives, 1st ser., IV: 24. "History has already exhibited Lord Cornbury as a mean liar, a vulgar profigate, a frivolous spendthrift, an impudent cheat, a fraudulent bankrupt, and the object of the greatest contempt."—Sunderland Brodhead in 1865, in an impeachment proving that Cornbury was also a forger.—Hist. Mag., VII: 331. See also Addenda, 1773.

Mar. 3 Cornelius Sebring's petition to the governor for a private grant of a second ferry to Long Island having been rejected through the plea of the corporation counsel (see Jan. 23), the common council immediately decides to petition the governor "for her Majesty's Grant of all the Vacant Land upon Nassau Island from High water to low water mark from the Wallabout to the Redhooke For a Further Conveynency for the ferry of this City with power to establish one or more ferries if there Shall be Occasion And a Confirmation of the same by Granting, of Rent and at Reasonable Rates etc." The common council further resolves to raise the sum of £500 to be used in procuring the grant. The reason for this petition was that there was need of increased accommodations so that transportation should not be carried by individuals and put the city in danger. —M. C. C., III: 346-47 On April 8, Cornbury granted this petition of the city for the enlargement of the bounds of the ferry, it being then ordered that a warrant be prepared for the attorney-general to draw a warrant "for all the Vacant and unappropriated Ground on Nassau Island from High water to Low water mark ['troming unto this City from the place Called the Wallabout unto the Red Hooke against Nutten Island for the better Improvement and accommodation of the Said ferry," etc.—Dec. Hist. N. T. (4to ed.), III: 238. The letters patent were issued by Lord Cornbury on April 19, 1708. The original document is preserved in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (in Book Labeled "New York 1700-1760"). The common council, at its first meeting (April 13) following the announcement, on April 8, of the governor's consent, resolved to raise £500 by mortgaging the ferry, to pay the counsel fees and other charges incident to procuring the grant.—M. C. C., III: 346, 47; Knowlton, Anne's Charter, was embodied, entire, in the Montgomerian Charter of 1711. See Jan. 15, 1703, and Feb. 11, 1711; also Hoffman, Treatise on the Estate and Rights of the Corporation, 273-82; and "Importance of the Long Island Ferry Question," in Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 357. A committee of the common council, appointed to inquire what repairs are needed at the ferry-house on Nassau Island, reports that the glass windows of the house, the barn, the well, the fence of the pen, the stairs going out of the house; the chimneys, and the plaster of the house, all want repairs, and these are ordered to be made. The lessee, James Harding, is permitted to spend £30 on repairing "the little old ferry house of this Corporation on N. The Island, which is Contiguous to the New ferry house," this amount to be deducted from his rent, etc.—C. I: 347.

The common council orders that lots in Dock St., sold by the city, be laid out.—M. C. C., III: 175.

The Earl of Sunderland (the principal secretary of state) 28 writes from Whitehall (London) to the lords of trade: "Her Majesty having been pleased to Appoint the Lord Lovelace [John, the 4th Lord Lovelace] Governor of New York and New Jersey, I desire you will prepare a Commission and Instructions for him as usual."—N. T. Col. Dict., V: 39. On April 22, an order in council approved the draft of a commission and required that it be prepared for the queen's signature.—Ibid., V: 40. On June 26, similar approval and order were given respecting instructions.—Ibid., V: 45, citing N. T. Council Minutes, IX: 304, where the instructions are recorded. Additional instructions were given on June 28 and July 20.—Ibid., V: 46, 54.

The common council grants permission to the inhabitants of Broadway to plant trees before their lots and houses.—M. C. C., III: 353.

The Cornbury or Queen Anne's Charter (relating to ferries) is granted by letters patent.—See March 5.

May 20 Former orders of ferry streets having been "much neglected" (see June 12, 1705), the common council passes another ordinance for the purpose. The streets are to be paved with "good and sufficient Pibble Stones suitable for paving."—M. C. C., II: 355-56. "Pibble Stones" was the old spelling (see Evelyn's Diary, April 31, 1643) for the modern pebble-stones, which are stones somewhat smaller than cobble-stones.—Cem. Dict. "All the Respective Citizens Inhabitants and freeholders of the said City of New York are hereby required to render an Entire Compliance."—M. C. C., II: 355-56.

The common council appoints a committee to "Ascertain how far it will be Convenient to fill up the Easternmost Corner of the Dock . . . for a more convenient landing place and that the Lesses of the Said Dock do forthwith proceed to fill up the Same Accordingly."—M. C. C., III: 354.

June 17 In a letter to the Bishop of London, the vestry of Trinity writes: "Since the granting of this patent [see Nov. 25, 1707] for the Farme and Garde we put the Garden into Fence, and built therein a stone wall which cost us upwards of fifty pounds and have let it for ten years, without any rent, on condition to improve the same with fruit trees and walks against such time we shall be able to build a dwelling house in the front thereof for our Minister."—Eccles. Recs., III: 1704.

A "Warrant of survey" is issued "to lay out for Abraham 21 Depeyer and others their several . . . lots of land on Queen Street, in the city of New York, ranging in the slip where the new market house is erected to the boundaries mentioned in the grants thereof."—From "Land Papers," IV: 123, in sec. of state's office (as listed in Cal. Land Papers, 85).

The queen's order in council confirms the act passed at New 26 York at the session of the legislature beginning March 2, 1699, "for Vacanting, breaking and annulling several Extravagant Grants of Land, made by Colonel Fletcher."—N. T. Col. Dict., V: 48; see further, May 16, 1699. For the arguments leading to this order, see ibid., V: 7-16, 21-26. On July 20, the queen directed Lovelace to regrant "to the late Patentees of such Resumed Grants, a suitable number of Acres, not exceeding two thousand to any one person," with certain reservations to the crown.—Ibid., V: 54-55. This latter instruction did not apply to the King's Farm, the King's Garden, the Swamp, and Fresh Water Pond, which, by the terms of the act, were the demesne of governors, and could be alienated only for a governor's term in office.—Ibid., V: 913, 915. G. C. III: 13.

Cornbury expresses the wish "that Packet Boats were Estab- 1 July 1704 lished'd to Some part of this Continent," to give more frequent communication with England. He has not heard from the board of trade or the secretary of state in fifteen months. There are "but two safe ways of sending into England, which are the Virginia Fleet and the Mast Fleet from New England." As there is no post from Virginia to New York, and it takes a letter sometimes six weeks or more to come that distance, the news of the expected sailing of a vessel from Virginia to England cannot reach New York in time to make that mail route to England always possible.

From Boston there is a Post by which we can hear once a week, at summer time, and once a fortnight, so that we have a great survey of the Mast Fleet." Another route in sending letters to England is by way of the West Indies, but this has proved uncertain. For "several of our Vessels have been taken Every Year during this War, besides that several of the Packet Boats from England to the West Indies have been lck-wards taken."—V. T. Col. Distr., V: 129.

In a trade report of this date to the lords of trade, Cornbury states that families do not settle in New York to engage in business, but go to Philadelphia instead, where no duties are paid. He recommends that the most effectual way to prevent the removal of "trading men" from New York "would be to bring all the Colonies and Plantations upon the Continent of America under the same Duties and Customs, for goods Imported & Exported."

The commodities produced in the province of New York and sent to England "are Peltry of all sorts, Pitch, Tar, Rosin and Traun Oil; and if due encouragement were given good quantities of hemp, flax, timber, Masts, and Yards might be sent." Commodities obtained from the West Indies and sent from New York to England are "Sugars, molasses, Logwood and other Dying woods, cochaneel, indigo, and Cocoa Nuts." To the West Indies are sent from New York "Flower, biscuit, beef, pork, bacon and trayn oil," etc.

The trade of this province "is much decayed . . . for in the year 1695" (see under March 24, 1694) it received "its most fatal blow" by the act of assembly permitting all persons in the country as well as the city to bolt four. Cornbury explains how this has affected trade in New York City, and recommends that either the queen reject the Bolting Act, or that New York City be allowed "to choose as many Representatives to serve in General Assembly as all the rest of the Province does." Thus the city may be able to repeal the Bolting Act.

There a second cause for the decay of trade of the province: The act of the legislature has expired which placed a duty upon imports, and it has not been renewed. Cornbury explains to the lords of trade the results of this lack of import duties. To supply the deficiency of an act of assembly he suggests that the queen "signify her pleasure, that an Order of the Governor in Council, shall be effectual in that Case, as it was in the time of Sr Edmond Andros."

To stop illicit trading, which is still prevalent between New England, Connecticut, and the east end of Long Island, Cornbury recommends that "a small sloop cruise in the Sound," or that "a port be built for the same purpose." He says that there is an uncertainty of finding a sloop fit for the service. "The number of Vessels belonging to this Port is much diminished of late years, I have been told that there has formerly belonged to this Port two and thirty top sail Vessels, besides Sloops; Now we can reckon above Eight and Twenty Top Sail Vessels & Sloops; The number has but increased since the beginning of the War, I cannot find above three hundred Seafaring men, of all sorts, belonging to this Port. All sorts of Vessels are built well in this place, but the Vessels most usually built here are Brigantines and Sloops, of both which sorts there are several built every year in this place, by Direction and for the use of the Merchants in Jamaica, Barbadoes and others of the Leeward Islands, besides those that are built for the use of the Merchants of this Place, which have been a pretty many of late, because our people have lost a great many Vessels this War, both going to and coming from the West Indies. And I doubt not there are above six Vessels belonging to the Place but were built here.

"The Manufactures settled in this Province are Linen and Woollen; they make very good Linen for common use, and I doubt not but in time they will improve that considerally; And for Woollen, I think they have got to a great perfection already; And I must be of opinion that that will be a very great prejudice to England in a few Years, and ought to be taken care of in time; They already make very good Serges, Linsey Woldyes, and in some places they begin to make coarse cloth, and without doubt in a short time they will so far improve the Trade and Industry of the Assistance of England to Cloth themselves."

See June 22, 1715.

Cornbury mentions a few other products of the province. Fish of all sorts, he says, "is so plenty in the Rivers, and in the Bay before this City, that our people will not take the pains to go to Sea." French privateers have recently captured ships on the coast, and Cornbury has sent the "Trionts Prize" to drive them off."—V. T. Col. Distr., V: 129.

It is decided to repair the Lutheran Church "before the winter," the cost to be paid out of rents of private houses belonging to the church. Under the same date a resolution is passed not to rebuild the church at the present, the times being too hard.—Records Lutheran Church.

Lord Lovelace goes next month to his government of New Aug. England, in the room of Lord Cornbury, recalled; and several Ger- man families, ruin’d by the French in the Palatinate, and come hither to England, are preparing to go with him, and settle there."—Diary of Narcissus Luttrell, in Hist. Mag., 2d ser., III: 207.

Caleb Heathcote writes to the lords of trade concerning American colonial manufactories: "They are already so far advanced on their manufactories that 1/2 of y° linen and woollen they use, is made amongst 'em; especially the courser sort, & if some speedy & effectual ways are not found to put a stop to it, they will carry it on a great deal further, & perhaps in time very much to the prejudice of our manufactories at home. I have been discourse with by some to assist them in setting up a manufactury of fine stuffs, but I have for the present put it by, & will for my own part never have to concern me in y° nature, but use all the little interest & skill I have to prevent it:"—V. T. Col. Distr., VI: 63. See June 2, 1715.

The books and papers of Mr. Bogardus, the late notary public, Sept. which have been stolen, "to the prejudice of many Persons in their Titles," are discovered in an old chest in a loft.—Assemb. Jour., I: 233, 245.

The popular objection to the "prerogative" system of expedi- ture, by which the British government for many years endeavoured to support itself, finds expression in a resolve of the assembly, "That the raising of any Moneys, for the Support of Government or other necessary Charges, by any Tax or Impost on Goods im- ported or exported, or any Clog or Hindrance on Traffick or Com- merce, is found by said Experience, to be the Expulsion of many, and the Impoverishing of the rest of the Planters, Freetholders, and Inhabitants of this Colony, of most pernicious Consequence, which if continued will unavoidably prove the Destruction of the Colony."—Assemb. Jour., I: 254. See also Spencer, Pliates of Regulatory Government (1705), 123.

William Bradford, the printer, petitions the governor and council for salary and moneys due him totalling £50:51, and covering a period from 1690 to 1700. He goes into the story of his being invited "to Remove out of another Province" (see March 21, 1693), encouraged by a regular salary here, and cites an order of the council of Jan. 6, 1703, to the effect that he shall "receive his Sallary quarterly as the rest of the Civil Officers of ye General Government." However, Collector Byerly "takes no notice of ye Merchants Orders Passed on ye 6th of May, 1703, for ye 4th Quarter, and Per his quarterly warrants in proportion to the rest of the Civil Officers." As a result, his family is now "near the brink of Ruin," and he seeks relief. He appends his account in detail, also a statement of the collector's payments to the "Civil Officers" during the last six quarters. On the 17th, Cornbury ordered the council to "inquire into the alligations;" report was rendered on the 17th, in which the petitioner's statements were confirmed and his account deemed correct, and the opinion expressed that "the said Mr. Byerly ought to give his Reasons to ye 3d Ex^d and Council" why he has not complied with their order. On the reverse of Bradford's petition appears the endorsement "Warr'd Issued."—Col. MSS., LII: 161, 164 (Albany).

"The Committee Appointed y° 20th of May last to Agree with A scavenger doe Report that they have Agreed with Jacob Counsele Cargan to be sealed to that they shall be in office for ye 1st year, 1709, "to Carry away the Soyle out of the broad Street from the Garden Street to the little bridge at the south End of the said broad street" for £12—M. C. C., III: 359.

The legislature passes "An Act for ye Encouragement of the Post Office within this Province." It states that the "General Post Office shall Remain, Contine and be in the Assistance of the City of New York." The details of its organisation and operation are described.—Col. Laws N. T., II: 612. 11 The following notice, published in Boston, explains the colonial postal methods at this time: "This is to give Notice, that whereas several persons do refuse to take up, receive and pay for their Letters that come and go by Post, the house has determined to the Reuters: That for the future all such Persons Letters shall be rejected, whether Foreign or Domestic, when tendered to be forwarded at every Post-Office; and for the better discovery of such; their Names, with the Places of their Abode shall be Inserted in the Publick News-Letter."

"This is also to give further Notice, That whereas several persons do write upon their Letters Post paid, and then throw their Letters into the several Post Offices without ever paying the Portage of the said Letters; that for the future no person whatever do write Post paid upon any Letter, till the Portage is first paid, and the person that pays the said Portage may see the Officer that Receives the Letter and the Money with Post paid on the said Letter; All Letters that have Post paid writ upon them, that come not thus regularly into any Post-Office are to be thrown out."—Adv. in Boston News-Letter, Oct., 4-11, 1708.

On June 6 and June 25, 1709, committees were ordered to meet at the "Coffee house;" but on Sept. 21, 1709, the place of meeting was designated "New Coffee house."—Jour. Leg. The subject of rebuilding the great bridge is introduced in the common council, which appoints a committee "to View the Great Bridge by the Custom house" and report what repairs and "Amendments" are needed there.—M. C. C., II: 372. On June 32, it was resolved, with the consent of Christopher Deane, the lessee of the bridge, "that the great Bridge by the Custom house be forthwith New built and Carried over the Dock to the wharf," and a committee was appointed to determine the best way to do this.—Ibid., II: 378. On Aug. 20, 1709, this committee reported a recommendation "to fill up between the old frame with good Stockades & Continue it direct over to the other wharf with the same with substantial plates and Cross pieces and to board it between the Stockades and Whitehall to prevent the Dirt getting through filling up a lay of Mudd between," and a committee was appointed to engage workmen and obtain materials for the work. It was also ordered "that under the little Bridge by the Dock be filled up and ye the Common Sewer be Continued under the same to the Entring of the Dock, and that the place where the Little Bridge now stands beCovered with boards after the Manner it now is A little higher than the Street and that the Aforesaid Committee imploy workmen to perform the same without let or hindrance," and "the making of the great Bridge near the Custom house," as required in the order of Aug. 20.—Ibid., II: 392. On Feb. 9, 1709, the committee resolved that they had agreed with Mr. Harris and Isaac Anderson to rebuild the great bridge for £500. Hall was to be paid on Feb. 15 and the balance on the completion of the bridge, which was "to be performed by the last day of July next."—Ibid., II: 395. Full payment was made on Sept. 12,
The common council "waited upon his Excellency my Lord Lovelace, and to become Member of this Corporation by Accepting of the Freedom thereof (which this Court presented to his Lordship the Seal being inclosed in a gold box) after which Mr. Recorder made a Handsom Speech to his Excellency Suitable to the Occasion Assuring him of the Loyalty and affection of this Corporation towards his Lordship Received with great Satisfaction."—M. C. C., II: 372.

Queen Anne writes to Lord Lovelace, and to the governor of New England, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Pennsylvania, directing an expedition against Canada for the security of British subjects to their possessions against incroachments from the French. Lord Lovelace is required to follow instructions given to Col. Samuel Vetch regarding the place of rendezvous (to be agreed upon by Lovelace, Vetch, and Nicholson), the levy of soldiers, and the time for action.—N. T. Col. Dext., V: 70-71. See also July 2, 1709. See A.

In a petition to the queen, Cornbury, writing in the third person, relates that "the Misrepresentations his Enemies have maliciously made of him have soe far obtained Credit with your Majesty as to Cause his Removal," etc.; that he "is now hindered by some of his Creditors here" from appearing before the queen, and asks that he "may be at liberty to return into great Britain where he is willing to be the answer for his administration here." From MS. in the Emmet Coll., item no. 10652. See also June 20.

Some of the inhabitants of the Dock Ward complain of the incroachment of Leonard Huygen de Kleyun upon "the Street fronting the River near Burgers path and building upon the said Street and wharfe in great prejudice." The council, which orders that the surveyors "do lay out all the Lots fronting to the East River from the Corner of Martin Clocks house at Burgers path to the Corner of Capt' Thoebalds house upon the wharfe at the Wall Street Slip upon A Straight line as near as possible that A Regular Order and uniformity may be Kept & Observed in the buildings of the said Street and that they suffer no further Incroachments to be made upon the Said Street. That the said Street be by them laid out thirty foot wide According to the Tenor of the respective Grants to front thereunto and that they Report to the Next Common Council what Incroachments and by whom are made upon the Said Street in Order that Care be taken to Remove the same as the Law directs."—M. C. C., II: 374. On April 1, 1709, the instructions to the surveyors were "to begin at the Westernmost end of the Said Street by Leonard Huygens foundation allowing the said Street or wharfe as it now is to be thirty foot wide and to run from thence upon A Straight line to Capt. Thoebalds Corner house aforesaid and all Persons Concern'd are to Regulate their buildings Accordingly as they Shall be directed by the Said Surveyors."—Ibid., II: 374-75.

Lovelace, in an address to the house, requires it "to provide for the security of the Fortifications of the Province." The barracks, he says, "are so small and so much out of repair," that he has been obliged "to billet the Recruits," that came over with him, "upon this City," although this has been a burden to the inhabitants.—Assem. Jour., II: 240.

The queen, "designing to fitt out an expedition for the reduction of Canada and Newfoundland according to some proposals made by Coll. Vetch, to whom Her Majesty has given instructions" (see March 1), has ordered Lord Sunderland to send to Lovelace Col. Vetch's instructions, and to avoid any delay "in case the ship which carries Col. Vetch" should not reach Lovelace soon enough or should miscarry. If Lovelace receives these instructions before the arrival of Col. Vetch, he is directed to "dispatch an express to the sev'l Governors of Penvalnya and Connecticut," to meet him with all expedition at New York to confer on the most proper and effectual methods of executing the instructions. Sunderland adds to the written instructions additional commands of the queen, outlining the plan of the expedition. Quebec is to be attacked by sea, and Montral by land.—N. T. Col. Dext., V: 72-73.

Vincent de la Montagne is ordered by the court of general sessions to allow his wife and children to live in the great room of his dwelling-house "at Sclavonia in the Bowry Division of the Out Ward," in order to prevent their becoming a charge to the parish.—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (M.S.), 160. It appears that "Ariantie Delamontagne the wife of Vincent Delamontagne late of the said City Breed MO was a Woman of publick Notorious and Adulterous fame and behavior."—Ibid., 193.

Gov. Lovelace dies. Thomas Cockrell, his secretary (N. T. Col. Dext., V: 90), notify Mr. Popple, the secretary of the board of trade (Ibid., IV: 566), by letter from New York dated July 2. He says that Lovelace "never had Council in his Government," and attributed this "wholly to the cold & sickness he caught aboard the Man of War upon the Coast." He added: "One Son dyed before him and the Young Lord a fortnight after."—Ibid., V: 80-81. Thomas Byerly, writing to the lords of trade on June 30, referred to "the great loss we have sustained by the death of my Lord Lovelace . . . He was a Gentleman of those Qualifications, Excell't temper, and goodness, that, had he lived longer with us, he wou'd have rev'd the Country from its former calamity."—Ibid., V: 80. For a summary of the Lovelace genealogy, see Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., III: 94-96.

Play acting and prize fighting" are forbidden by the governor's council.—Col. Coun. Min., 227. This was perhaps intended, in part, as a mark of respect to the late Lord Lovelace. We know that Gov. Robert Hunter wrote a play which probably was acted in New York (see Aug. 1, 1714), and that Lieut.-Gov. Nanfan, who administered the government, had, in a letter of July 16, 1699 to July 25, 1700, and from May 19, 1701 to May 3, 1702, gave a license to one Richard Hunter and his company of players.—Hist. Mag. (1686), IX: 118. Also see 1704.

The council orders that Col. Ingoldsby be informed of the death of Lord Lovelace's brother.—Col. Coun. Min., 216. Col. Evar Schuyler presides at the council meeting, and is required by the council to keep the keys of the garnison, until the stores are inventoried.—Ibid., 217.

The council directs that the body of Lord Lovelace be buried in New York. A warrant is issued to Lady Lovelace for her husband's salary. The New York regiment is placed under orders for the funeral, and is furnished with powder, etc.—Col. Coun. Min., 227. To prevent the news of the intended expedition to Canada reaching the enemy, the council orders that no vessels be cleared.—Col. Coun. Min., 227.

Lieut.-Gov. Richard Ingoldsby attends the council meeting, reads his commission, and is sworn in. Mr. Cockrell, Lovelace's secretary, is called upon to deliver the seals. Lady Lovelace is called upon for public papers.—Col. Coun. Min., 227. Concerning Lady Lovelace's encounter with Ingoldsby, see June 4. Ingoldsby had received his first appointment as lieutenant-governor on March 24, 1704 (q.v.), having been commander-in-chief as early as July 26, 1691 (q.v.), and was recommended to be paid as lieutenant-governor Nov. 8, 1694 (q.v.).

Lord Cornbury is called upon by the governor's council for public papers.—Col. Coun. Min., 227.

The council considers a letter from the queen to the late Lord Lovelace about the Canada expedition.—Col. Coun. Min., 227. A council order is issued to the mayor to prevent the exportation of provisions.—Col. Hist. Mss., Eng. 365.

The provincial legislature passes an "Act for Regulating and Establishing fees." The fees of all public officials from governor to notary publics are prescribed for all their official acts.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 638. In the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (in box lettered "New York, 1700-1760") is a M.S. list of fees paid in New York, dated Oct. 19, 1710. It includes governor's fees for great seal to patents; attorney for sessions of court; coroners' fees for confirmation, grant or charter; surveyor's fees for surveying, etc.; and secretary's fees for a confirmation of a patent for a house and lot formerly possessed, for a patent for new land, etc.

Col. Francis Nicholson and Col. Samuel Vetch issue a proclamation at New York, printed by Bradford (having been made public by order of Peter Schuyler, president of the council), assuring a supplying arms or their value in money to all such as shall volunteer for the expedition (against Canada).—From reproduction in the catalogue of Soutby, Wilkinson & Hodges, London, of July 1 and 1996, filed with broadside in N. Y. Pub. Library.

In accordance with the act of June 8 (q.v.), a series of indented bills, the first to be issued in this province, bears this date.

The common council, as a court, being informed "that Mr. John Vanhorne and Mr Evert Duyckinck of this City have lessened

A PROCLAMATION

WHEREAS it is of absolute Necessity for the Good and Prosperity of this Province, that our Provincials and all Persons be in Obedience to the Laws of God, and the will, wills, Laws of England, and all other acts, by a Religious and Venerable Government and Government, may attend, and the farming and trading of Anglican God according to our Due and Lawful Customs, and that we may by our Authority or the due Support of His Majesty's Government over us, who has generally prospered the Sacred Covenant to prevent Dangers, to Rectify us from the growing Power of Papery and Arbitrary Government, and has by the Prerogative of God procured the Injunction, and an Unanswerable Prize, and a great Example in obedience of Religion and Venerable Living. I have therefore thought fit, by and with the Advice of His Majesty's Council for the Province, and I do hereby strictly Prohibit all Inhabitants and Subjects within this Province from Drunkenness, Immorality, Drunkenness, Sabbath Breaking, and all sorts of Lascivious and Improper Behavious in Word or Action. And for the same and all other Publick and Civil Uses, I do by and with the Advice aforesaid, by the Act of God and Command of the Province, that they take care that all the Laws made and provided for the Suppression of Vice and Encouragement of Religion and Virtue, particularly the Observance of the Lords Day be duly put in Execution, in such a manner that their People.

The New York City militia troop is ordered to make the night rounds.—Col. Cornbury and the Nat’l Guard and the Militia,” by Chas. S. Clark, in Eco. Polt., Feb. 23, 1766.

The vestry of Trinity Church writes to “the Most Reverend Father in God Thomas Lord Arch Bishop of Canterbury:”

... It is but of late years our Church had its being & is yet but very tender, the greatest part of the Inhabitants of this Province of the Dutch & French reformed Religion or Dissenters & Quakers & but 3 Counts within the province, would receive a Church of England minister, to wit Queens County, West Chester & Richmond & of these Counties but the smallest number goe to the worship. With much ados, we have overcome the Depts we had contracated by the building of our Church & Strueple, w'h latter is designed for a Ring of Bells, the Walls are of a good thickness & foundation above 30 foot square, it is got so high as the ridge poll of the Church, but for want of money, we were forc’d to leave it there, & for the present have hung in it a Bell of 64d [?] weight, the free gift of his Lordship of London, the Bishop of Bristol in the year 1699 sent us over so many stones as did pave all the Isles of our Church. Col’r Fletcher, who was gov’r of this Province from 1692 to 1698 gave the first Life & being to it & was a large Benefactor out of his private Fortune. His Successor [Bellomont] in the Government (in a contrary endeavoured to ruin it, tho’ sometimes he came thither to receive the holy Sacrament, w[h] we hope God has forgiven him, the Viscount Cornwall next to him, during his govern[ant] has endeavoured not only to restore, but advance the Churches Interest, & made in this Grant w[h] by the Act[or] we have from his Successor the Lord Lovelace is shaken up & rendred disputable, until Her most Sacred Maty shall be graciously pleased to reestablish us therein. Col [Francis] Nicholson has likewise been a Benefactor to our Church of the first Rank. A thousand pound will be required to finish our Steeple [see April 29] w[h] are about 6000l & there is much more wanted, v'h a Dwelling house for our Minister & a Vestry Room with a Ring of Bells & a set of Organs, what we cannot effect our selves, we shall leave to God Almighty’s good Providence & must recommend the workes to our Posterity, the Situation of our Church is very pleasant between two Rivers or Eminent Ground. We have a large Burying place adjoining round it in good fence & adorn’d with rows of Lime Trees w[h] will make a pleasant shade, in a little time. ... We want also a couple of large Branches of Candickiesticks, to hang in the body of our Church; Communion Plate, Books and Vestments, which these last, we are credibly informed have been designed for us by the late King William, and since by her present Majesty, but by what ill fate or accident we know not, we are still without them.”—Trin. Min. (MS.), Eccl. Rec., III: 1768.

Nicholson and Vetch report from New York to the Lords of Trade, from England, on the success of their negotiations with the governments of the other British provinces concerning the expedition against Canada. Only the Jerseys and Pennsylvania demur, the assembly of the former being half composed of Quakers, and that of the latter almost entirely so.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 78.

Col. Vetch, the originator of the scheme for the reduction of Canada, writes to Secretary Boyle renewing a petition, previously made by him to the cabinet council, that, on the success of the expedition, he be made commander-in-chief of Canada “until the government should be regularly modelled.”—Id., V: 79.

See A. July 2

The justice of the claims of the Indians to the privilege of hunting on the lands of trade is stated, after the death of Lovelace (see May 6), “Col’r Igooldsby Our Lieut’ Gov’ succeeds in the Govern[ant] and is so influenced by My Lord Cornwall and his party, that whatever his Lord’s desires is put in Execution.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 80. See May 9.

Thomas Byerly, writing to the Lords of Trade, states that after the death of Lovelace (see May 6), “Col’r Igooldsby Our Lieut’ Gov’ succeeds in the Govern[ant] and is so influenced by My Lord Cornwall and his party, that whatever his Lord’s desires is put in Execution.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 80. See May 9.

Thomas Cockrell (secretary to Lovelace) writes to Mr. Popple (secretary of the Board of Trade) “We are more with Expectation of good Success from the Canada Expedition and shall raise in this Province 100,000 towards the charge of it. I can’t say that we match the Zeal and Spirit of the Men of New England, Rhode Island and Connecticut. But we have already sent away all our
The common council gives a permit to the inhabitants of the South and Dock Wards "to put A Covering or Roof over the little Bridge by the Dock" at their own expense.—M. G. C., II: 531.

The Earl of Sunderland (British secretary of state) informs the board of trade that the "appointed Col. Robert Hunter "to succeed the late Lord Lovelace in the Governments of New York and New Jersey." He directs them to prepare a commission and instructions accordingly.—N. T. Col. Docy., V: 91.

Col. Ingoldsby's commission as lieutenant-governor of New York is duly revoked.—N. T. Col. Docy., V: 91. This is done in accordance with a representation from the board of trade to the queen, that no record exists in the secretary of state's office in London to show whether the queen signed the revocation of 1706, and whether it was sent to Ingoldsby.—Ibid., V: 89.

The council considers matters relating to the French church at New Rochelle.—Cal. Coun. Min., 232. They were considered again on Nov. 4.—Ibid., 232.

A conference committee of the two houses of the legislature is appointed to meet at "y6 New Coffee house."—Jour. Leg. Coun., 288. On Oct. 10, and again on Nov. 12, meetings were held at "Braddock's," perhaps the same tavern.—Assembl. Jour., I: 260, 1709. On Nov. 4, a court of general quarter sessions was held at the request of "the Neighbourhood of the Bowery," that a road might be "settled from the Meadows upon the East River unto the Next publick way." They order that the new road "shall Come from the said Meadows by the path which now Comes from the street through the Land Commonly known by the Name of Leondert's Land from thence Running Westerly till you Come to the Southernmost Corner of the Land now in the Possession of Hendrick Brevoort and from thence along the south side of the said Brevoort's Fence thro' the Land of the widower Selyns till you Come to the Publick and Common highway near the house where Daniel Ellets doth now live."—Min. Gen. Statins of the Peace (MS.), 161-62. This road no longer exists. It is shown on the Ratter Plan (Pl. 41), and more plainly on Ratten Plan (Pl. 42, Vol. I). It extended from Leondert's Meadows westerly, a little northerly in a curve, and then south-westerly to the Bowery at Bowme (then called Bullock) St. Generally speaking, according to the modern map, it ran from the East River near the foot of Houston St. to the intersection of The Bowery and Broome St.

The council orders that iron and steel be sent to Albany for the Canada expedition.—Cal. Coun. Min., 231.

Aug. 1709

It was agreed in the last Common Council to view the Great Bridge 6:00: [see June 22] Report . . . wee have Viewed the great Bridge and do find that to fill up between the old frame with good Stockades & Continue it direct over to the other wharfe with the same with substantial plates and Cross pieces placed between the Sparre that will prevent the Dirt getting through filling up a lay of Mudd between which is humbly submitted . . . . A committee is appointed "to Agree with workmen and for Materials for the Speedy finishing of the Said Bridge."—M. G. C., II: 379. Another committee was appointed on Dec. 6 for "making and finishing the great Bridge near the Custom house . . . ."—Ibid., I: 392. See, further, Feb. 9, 1710.

It is also ordered on this day that "under the little Bridge by the Dock be filled up and yt the Common Sewer be Continued under the same to the Entining of the Dock, that the place where the little Bridge now Stands be Covered with boards wther the manner it now is A little higher then the Street and that the Aforesaid Committee Imply workmen to perform the same."—M. G. C., II: 379-80. See also Feb. 23, and Oct. 24 and diagram of the dock, Addenda, 1000.

An ordinance is passed by the common council "that the Posts that are now near the Streets of the Dock be hauled up and Removed by the Person Inhabiting the houses unto which they front."—M. G. C., II: 380-82. These were perhaps hitching-posts.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 535. Possibly they were so placed to prevent vehicular traffic in certain very narrow streets, or to support the fences that were stretched across the street on either side of churches to prevent traffic during services.

Sept.

The common council appoints a committee "to Agree with workmen for the Removing the Goal Purchasing Materials Reparing the City Hall and making Cupelo tite."—M. G. C., II: 351.

In order to carry out this work, a line of small houses was built on the north side of the street. Some of these remain today as the old City Hall Park.
John Cure is one of four bell-men appointed by the mayor, who receive £20 "to enable them to purchase fire and Candle." He later became a well-known tavern-keeper.—M. C. C., III. 190.

Nov. 22.

Col. Robert Quary, writing to the lords of trade, says: "I will not trouble your honors about the present unhappy circumstances of the Northern Province, occasioned by the disappointment of that noble design against Canada [see Oct. 21], since the Hooble Col. Nicholson has lately gone to London, who is a person the best able to settle all those affairs in a true light."—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 116.

Following certain advice given by Hunter on Nov. 30 and Dec. 1 to the lords of trade, regarding the sending of 3,500 Palatines to New York Province, and their employment in the production of naval stores, the board of trade now report to the queen on the plans proposed. These plans include the building of a general store-house at New York City, and the appointment of a store-keeper or commissionary there.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 112-14, 117-20. See April 13.

Col. Jamison presented to the Board [Trinity vestry] Mr. Lodge his bill for making two Sun Dialts on the Church, amounting to three pounds Seventeen Shillings 4½. It is ordered "that the Church Wardens pay Mr. Lodge three pounds for the two Sun Dialts."—Trin. Min. (M.S.). On Feb. 15, 1704, the vestry ordered the church-wardens to pay the remainder of the bill, "seventeen Shillings & 4½ by the Provost" for setting the Sun Dialts on the Church in a true position."—Ibid.

Ordered, that all Children under fifteen years of age bured [buri]ed in the Church or Steeple shall pay the one half of the fee allotted to a grown person."—Ibid.

The draft of instructions for Hunter [see Sept. 9, 1709] is submitted to the queen by the board of trade. The governor's council is to consist of Peter Schuyler, Samuel skafts, Robert Walters, Gerardus Beckman, Rip van Dam, Caleb Heathcote, Killian van Ransteler, Roger Mopperson, John Barbarte, Adolphus Phillips, Abraham de Peyster, and David Provoen.

Among the other noteworthy provisions is one requiring the governor to give directions to merchants, planters, and others, to be "very cautious in giving an Account by letters of the publick state and condition of our said Province," lest such letters fall into the hands of the French; and to "give directions to all Masters of Ships, or other persons to whom you may intrust your letters that they put such letters in a bag with a sufficient weight to sink the same immediately in case of imminent danger from the enemy.

The governor is not to accept any present from the assembly; his salary, however, is raised from £500 to £900 per annum. He is to send to the lords of trade a map of the province. He is to permit liberty of conscience to all persons except Papists. He is to submit a census of the inhabitants.

The Bishop of London has ecclesiastical jurisdiction in the province; and the governor is to notify him if any minister preaches without orders. No schoolmaster will be permitted to keep school in the province without a license from this bishop. A table of marriages, established by the canons of the Church of England, is to be hung up in every orthodox church and duly observed. Drunkennes, debauchery, swearing, and blasphemy are to be disreputaneous and punished; and no person is to be admitted "to publik trusts and employments whose ill Fame and Conversation may occasion scandal."

Merchant-ships are to fly "no other Jack" than "such as is worn by our ships of war, with the Distinction of a White Escutcheon in the middle thereof, and that the said mark of Distinction may extend itself one half of the depth of the Jack, and one third of the flag thereof." The instructions contain a sketch of this flag.

In cases of errors in the trial or hearing of law cases, appeals are allowed to the governor and his council, to be rendered into the Court. The sum appealed for exceeds £100 sterling. If the amount involved is over £500, either side may appeal from the governor's decision to the queen and her privy council. In additional instructions to Hunter, blank forms are prescribed to be used in keeping records of shipping at the port of New York.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 122-54.

The lords of trade, writing from Whitehall to Gov. Hunter, Dec.
9 refer to "the late Lord Cornbury now Earl of Clarendon."—N. Y.
25 Col. Dutu, V. 154. When he became governour of New York in 1793, he was Sir Edward Hyde (by courtesy called Lord Cornbury), a grandson of the first Earl of Clarendon, and nephew, by marriage, of James II. He became Earl of Clarendon on the death of his father. It is said that his elevation to the peerage secured his release from prison in New York, where his creditors had placed him.—Hart's Envoy of U. S. Hist. 4th "Cornbury," Mon. Com. Coun. (1864), 573; Ibid. (1896), 763; but see April 22, 1710; April 15, 1712.

From this year until 1720, the South Sea Company, of England, sought to fund a floating debt of £10,000,000, the stockholders to have a monopoly of the trade with Spanish South America. The "South Sea Bubble" collapsed on the refusal of Spain to enter into a commercial treaty with England, and thousands were ruined.

In the year 1710, five kings, or Sachems of the Iroquois went from hence to England, in order to Engage Queen Anne to make an alliance with them against the French. Their names, dress, reception at court, speeches to the Queen, opinion of England and of the European manners, and several other particulars about them are sufficiently known from other writings.—Kalm, Travels into N. A., (1770), 1, 268; see also Am. Hist. Rev., 1, 172.

The portraits of the four visiting Indians (one of the number conducted by Colonel Schuyler having died) were painted, by order of the queen, by a celebrated Dutch portrait-painter, John Verelst . . . who had resided many years in London. The works of art had created such a sensation at the capital and throughout the kingdom, that the artist found it necessary to guard against unlimited reproductions of his work . . . In the "Tatler" of November 14, 1710, there appeared an advertisement as follows: "This is to give notice that the most fashionable Bowls &c. by John Simons, in whole sheets, of the four Indian Kings, that are done from the original pictures drawn by John Verelst . . . are now to be delivered to subscribers and sold at the Rainbow and Dove in the Strand." But other hands could not be restrained from making copies of pictures that were so greatly in demand; some of the others, however, were recognized or authorized by the painter. It was the Simmons mezotint prints that were sent in such generous numbers to the 'plantations' in America. A set of proof impressions is in the possession of Mrs. John Carter-Brown, and the illustrations in the text are derived from these. Another set is included among the collection of the American Antiquarian Society. The originals of Verelst are still preserved in the British Museum."—Wilson, Mem. Hist. N.Y., II, 146 (footnote). There is also a set of these rare mezzotints in the N. Y. Pub. Library, showing the names of "J. Verelst Pinx," and "J. Simons fecit." They were "Printed for J. Bowles, &c. by the Black Horse at the Black Horse Inn," 1710.

Bradford printed, this year, the second revision of the laws of the province of New York, with the title: The Laws, Of Her Majesties Colony of New-York, As they were Enacted by the Governour, Council and General Assembly, for the time being, in divers Sessions, the first of which began April 9th, 1682, Amm. Dom. 1691. To which is Added, His Excellency's Speeches and Messages to the General Assembly, and a Journal of the Votes and Addresses of the House during the Administrations of the Rt. Honorable the Lord Cornbury, Lord Lovelace, and the honourable Coll. Richard Ingoldsby, Esq., Governors of said Colony, to the 12th of November, 1710. There is a copy of this edition in the N. Y. Pub. Library. The American Almanack for the year of Christian account 1711, published in New York in 1710, bore the joint imprint of William and Andrew Bradford. an interview with “The Five Indian Canons,” receives from Secretary St. John the queen’s instructions and commands relating to “the Expedition against her enemies in these parts.” These

See July 26, an act was passed for levying £10,000 to pay these forces, this city's apportionment being £2,030 (ibid., 1: 730) and an additional sum of £3,430 was to be raised in the city by another act, for the better reward of volunteer officers (ibid., 1: 731). See June 14.

The house resolves to petition the queen for relief from the barden colony that has been under by reason of the "present Undertaking to reduce Canada," setting forth "our own Wretchedness and Poverty, and the Inequality of the Proportions expected from us, in the Expeditions, compared with the neighbouring Colonies and Plantations."—*Assemb. Jour., I: 197.

The merchants of New York petition the governor and council to remove the embargo (see June 16) on the exportation of provisions.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 387. The embargo was nevertheless continued.—See Aug. 10.

It is ordered by the general assembly that "The Forces to go on the present Expedition, be allowed 12d. per Man every Day they stay in the City of New-York, in Lieu of their Provisions, not exceeding 4 Days, that come from the neighbouring Counties."

The legislature resolves that "The Commissioners for providing New York with the Expeditory forces, do defy the Charges of Building the Battoes [see June 27] for the Transportation of the Quota of Forces, raised in this Province for the Expedition, and that the Treasurer do furnish them with money to pay the same."—

On Aug. 2, the house resolved to limit this expenditure to £200.

The general assembly passes "An Act for the Security & defence of this Colony during the Expedition to Canada." Beacons are to be set up in Richmond and Kings Counties, near the Narrows, and at Rockaway.—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 741. A committee report, which on July 28 was approved by the governor and council, provided for the following plans: One or two vessels were to act as a coast patrol, and beacons were to be erected to give intelligence to New York of the approach of the enemy's ships, "and the posts which there ought to be a Great Gun ready loaded, and primed to be fired off at the time of firing each Beacon." The locations recommended for these were: "One at ye high Lands of Never Sink"s One other at ye Inside of Sandy hook that may be Scene from from some Emplacement on Long Island that may be Scene from the thence on Long Island; and "One other at ye Narrows on Long Island." At each beacon there was to be a constant watch kept by at least three men; and at the beacons on Long Island "must be Troopers with their horses ready Equipt to post Away to ye flerry the Minute the Beacon is Light to Give intelligence here." On sight of the lighted beacons, the militia were to appear at once "in their proper Arms at their Usual Readende." Also, messenger s were to be sent to the counties of Westchester and Orange, "for getting their men in Arms and SENDING them hither forthwith." —Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 318. See also June 14, 1711.

Gen. John Hill, on H. M. S. "Windsor," at the mouth of the St. Lawrence, wrote (on the 25th) to Gov. Hunter a "melancholy account of the disasters" that have happened to the fleet. As a result of gales and fogs on Aug. 22, eight transports and a ship laden with provisions were lost on the North Shore. The men-of-war had the 24th and 25th, and the work was carried on of "gathering from the Shore the Scattered remains of Almost Six and twenty Companies of Seamen, Kanes, Clays, and Windnese's Regiments which wee find are all periss to a very Small Number that we have Saved and are now Saving." The loss is estimated at nearly 1,000. The decision of Admiral Walker and the captains of the ships of war, on account of the ignorance of the pilots, is to return to Spanish River, since they can "procede no further on the Execution of her Majestys Comands at Quebeck." Gen. Hill therefore requests that Hunter: . . . with all imaginable haste[ Send an Express to Mr. Nicholson with the inclosed Letters for his acting or returning, with the forces under his Comand to N. The common council passes an ordinance for appointing a market-place in Broad St. It requires "that the North end of the Broad Street between the City Hall and the Line of the Old and New Street which goes from the Broadway to the Dutch Church" (Garden St.), be established as "A publick Market place of this City is as full and Ample Manner as other publick Market places in this City are or lawfully Ought to be." It is also ordered that 7 The Inhabitants in and about the broad street have Liberty to Erect and Build such Stalls and sheds, Such other Coverments, as they Shall receive from the Clerk of the Market."

—M. C. C., II: 446-47. See also De Voe, Market Book, 252-53.

12 Gov. Hunter, not having yet heard of the disaster to the fleet (see Aug. 22), wrote to Secretary St. John an account of the present state of the expedition, and the promising outlook, including a favourable report which he received on Sept. 1 from Admiral Walker. He says: "The Admiral" presses much the seeding before him more provisions, for fear of being obliged to winter there at the mouth of the St. Lawrence River. I have now in this port (New York) the Feversham [see June 14] with transport having on board a thousand and odd barrels of pork, and as much bread, flour, butter, pease rum and tobacco as they can carry; which are to sail for Quebec the first wind that offers." Hunter also reports upon the independent attitude of the provincial assemblies, and what, in his opinion, it portends. —N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 255-56. Regarding the fate of the "Feversham," see Nov. 12.

13 Abraham de Lucena, "Minister of the Jewish Nation Residing at the City of New York," petitions Gov. Hunter to be excused from "bearing any Office Civil or Military within this City," and also to be discharged for his services to the Indians, "just as his predecessors had been," by reason of their ministerial function." The petition was read in council on Sept. 18 and referred to a committee to examine and report. —Doc. Hist. N. Y., I: 265.

29 "Slop" is the nominated mayor. On Oct. 15 he was sworn in. —M. C. C., II: 459, 451. He continued in office for three years. —Ibid., III: 17, 48. For a brief sketch of his life, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 403; Ibid. (1864), 665.

The mayor informs the board "that MR Robert Loring the present Treasurer of this Corporation [see Sept. 29, 1706] is willing to resign that Office for the PAYMENT of Affairs Private and Public Leasure to execute the same." Samuel Bayard was appointed in his place. —M. C. C., II: 450. Bayard held the office until Sept. 29, 1718 (p. 29).

1 In a report of the "Genl[eral] State of ye Plant[e] Revenues," William Blathway, surveyor and auditor-general, says this of New York: "In the Province of New York by Act of Assembly passed in the year 1692 a Revenue was granted to the Crown for the Support of Government" to be raised by an Excise upon Liquors by "Rents & by an Imposition upon Goods & Merchandise Imported upon Furs exported & upon the Indian Trade for two years which Duties have been continued by divers and Subsequent Acts to ye 18th of May 1709 when the same expired; Since which time the said Duties have not been Provided for by the Civil Law nor for defraying the other Incident Charges of the Government. These Revenues before the expiration of the Acts of Assembly produced about £4,000 £ Annually." —Blathway's Jour. (MS.), Oct. 11, 1711.

3 Hunter was asked if the house was if it was his pleasure that the sentinels and guards at the several beacon be discharged, "the Reason of their being posted there, seeming to be ceased." He replied that "he was of the same Opinion." —Assemb. Jour., I: 299.

Hunter sent a message to the house that the "Magazine in Fort Anne, was defective, and the Powder therein damaged, directed "from several Duties and Taxes in Carne & for remediying the same." —Assemb. Jour., I: 300. William Bord, the store-keeper in the fort, in a memorial to the council on Feb. 15, 1710, had proposed that some means be taken for the better preservation of the powder, which he found very much damaged by dampness, the hoops of which having almost fallen off. —Cul. Mass., LIIL: 1548 (Albany).

16 The common council passes an ordinance providing that "the Country People who frequent the Market of this Corporation have Liberty to Expose their Meat to sale in the Publick Market by the Joyes or Otherwise as they shall be Convenient, first paying the fees of the Clerk of the Market for the same . . ." —M. C. C., III: 453.

The common council directs the treasurer to buy "A tin Box for Containing the Charter of this Corporation." —M. C. C., III: 453.

It is ordered that "Alderman Bayard as Treasurer of this City [see Sept. 29] do send to London for A Standard of Troy weights and scales and Measures for the use of this Corporation and that upon the Delivery thereof this Corporation will pay unto him one hundred and fifty two 2d. per annum." —M. C. C., III: 454. He was paid £207 for these on June 17, 1715. —M. C. C., III: 94.

Hunter writes to Lord Dartmouth: "On Tuesday last [Nov. 6] fishermen brought into this harbour the poor remains of Her Majesty's Ship Feversham's crew, which with the three transport ships loaded with provisions for the expedition [see July 11] was cast away upon Cape Breton the 17th of October in the night; all the officers except the Lieutenant & Master are perished & only forty eight, of one hundred & fifty seamen, saved."

Since the fatal miscarriage of the intended expedition our frontiers have been inaccessible. . . . It is proposed by the council and assembly to resew it. —N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 284-85.

The colony is too much involved in expense to offer any compensation to Henry Beys, missionary at Harlem, who has petitioned for support. —Assemb. Jour., I: 708-9. Beys was an Episcopalian, and served in the Harlem Reformed Dutch Church, (third site) at the present Third Ave. and 121st St. —Corwin, Manual of the Reformed Church, 1001; Landmark Map Ref. In this year, there was prepared a summary of the revenues of the province of New York, the conditions existing in the matter of collecting, etc.—See the original MS. (pp. 159, folio), in N. Y. Pub. Library.

The common council passes the following law, appointing a place for the more convenient hiring of slaves: "That all Negro and Indian slaves that are lent out to hire within this City do take up their Standing in Order to be hired at the Market house at the Wall Street Slip until such time as they are hired, whereby all Persons may know where to hire slaves as their Occasions Shall require and also Masters discover where their Slaves are so hired and all the Inhabitants of this City are to take Notice hereof Accordingly." —M. C. C., II: 458.

The "Western Post" from Boston, for Connecticut and New York, sets out once a fortnight during December, January, and February. —Boston News-Letter, Nov. 16, 1711. That this is a winter custom is shown by similar notices in Ibid., Dec. 1, 1711, and Nov. 30, 1713.

In February, Valentine Wightman, of Groote, came to New York to preach to a few Amusing Baptists. In 1714, Wightman appealed to Gov. Burnet for protection against the people while performing the rite of baptism at the water side, and such protection was given by the governor. The members increased so that a private house would not hold them; accordingly, a lot on Golden Hill was purchased and a church erected in 1728 (p. n.). It was still in existence in 1774, but "by mismanagement had become private property." —Benedict, Hist. of the Baptist Denomination, I: 357.

One of the last references to the "great Bridge" or "Custom House Bridge" is recorded in the M. C. C. (see earlier mention under April 13, 1700; June 22, and Aug. 20, 1709; Feb. 9, 1710; and later mentions under Mar. 3, and Oct. 14, 1713). Johannes Jansen is paid £12, "out of the Six hundred pound Tax," for the repairs of "the great and little Bridges in the Months of June July August and Sept?" last. —M. C. C., III: 3. The Burgis View of 1717—18 (Pl. 25, Vol. I) shows no trace of the old custom-house bridge.

The grand juries present to the consideration of the court of general sessions "the insufficiency of the Common Gaol & also the want of the Reparation of the Highways through the Island to Queenen Bridge." (Kingsbridge). —Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (M. S.), 208.

The merchants of New York complain to the queen that the English ships of war go from New York to the West Indies and return carrying cargoes of merchandise. This deprives the merchants and traders of carrying in their own vessels, and discourages ship-building. The ships of war should be used only as convoys and cruisers, they claim. On June 5, the lords of trade, by direction of the queen, ordered this practice stopped. —N. Y. Col. Docs., VI: 311-12.
Col. Morris writes to John Chamberlayne that the Chapel in the Fort, from Fletcher's time to that of Hunter, "was put to the several uses of Store house, Bear house, and work house;" but the Hunter letter was not yet sufficiently filled up [see April 27, 1711] and applied to the use it was built for, and the Soldiers who before were carried out of the Garrison [to Trinity Church], and during the service stood for the most part in the Steppee, where they could but imperfectly hear are now very well accommodated with Seats in the Chapell, where the Service is regularly performed, and there is yet room for persons to build Pews who have no Seats in the church of New York [Trinity], and who are inclined to build would the Governor admit them, which he has hitherto declined." He further states that the rector of Trinity Church, which Gass opposed, was omitted in the Chapell, claiming it gave evidence of a schism in the church.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VI: 318-44. Hunter's own account of his controversy with Mr. Vesey was told on Feb. 25, 1712, in a letter to the secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel.—Doc. Hist., New York, (40 ed.), III: 156. Hunter also wrote to the Bishop of London on March 1, 1713, that "The ancient Chapell in the Fort . . . for many years past a Bear Garden," he had "at a great expense put in repair so that it is now one of the most decent & most constantly frequented Houses of Prayer in all America."—N. Y. Col. Doc., VI: 315.

Another account of this scheme is written to the Bishop of London against the Rev. Mr. Vesey, about 1714, stating, among other things, that "After Coll. Fletcher had obtained of the Dutch to build themselves a Church in the town, he pulled down the old one in the Fort, and in its room built a chapell for the use of the Garrison and his own Officers. From that chapell after the Garrison moved out, remained at some time neglected, and at others converted into a store house for fire wood, till the arrival of his Excellence Brigadier Hunter, who soon repaired and beautified it, and caused divine service to be constantly performed in it by the Reverend Mr. Sharpe, Chaplain to the forces which gave great satisfaction to many of the Church of England, and especially such who wanted accommodation in Trinity Church, (where Pews are not to be purchased but at a very high rate), and were forced sometimes to absent themselves from divine service; which now they need not do, having now a place of worship to resort unto where all degrees are seated without price or reward."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 267. See also "Church in the Fort," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 934.

Mar. 7. Hunter reports that the steeple of Trinity Church is finished. —N. Y. Col. Doc., VI: 511. See June 16, 1711; June 11, 1712.

Hunter writes to the lords of admiralty, transmitting an address of the merchants of New York relative to building a gallery for the better defence of trade, together with some proposals of Col. Heathcote for providing naval stores.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 494.

In an address to Gov. Hunter, the grand jury says in part: "We are informed that the Digestion of the Negroes, which was taken up in the latter end of last year, and we are credibly informed you have given assurances not to molest or disturb the English Church in the Enjoyment of the Queens Farm, during all the time of your Administration, also the Same has been claimed as a perquisite by all preceding Governments."—Boston News-Letter, March 17-24, 1712.

An insurrection of negroes in the city occurs, and measures are taken to suppress it.—Cal. Coun. Min., 246. The following summary presents the principal events: "Some Cormermit Norse Negroes to the number of 25 or 30 and 2 or 3 Spanish Indians having conspired to murder all the Christians here, and by that means thinking to enter with the French upon the trade, about their bloody design in Execution," and having fired a house, murdered all who ran to it. An alarm was sounded and the slaves escaped into the woods, some being captured.—From N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, April 7-14, 1712.

The earliest official record of the details of this conspiracy is found in Hunter's report to the lords of trade, June 23, 1712. He refers to it as "a bloody conspiracy of some of the slaves of this place, to destroy as many of the Inhabitants as they could." Their reason was "to revenge themselves, for some hard usage ... from that fact, which is, Hunter concedes. His narrative continues that "they agreed to meet in the orchard of Mr. Crook the middle of the Town, some provided with fire arms, some with swords and others with knives and hatchets." This he said, "was the sixth day of April, the time of meeting was about twelve or one o'clock in the night." He stated that about 25 of them met; one set fire to an outhouse of his master, and when so alarmed brought the citizens toward it, the slaves shot and killed about nine to have had that design in execution." Since these had "first laid violent hands upon themselves," and the rest were brought to trial. Of these, 25 were condemned, and of this number 21 were executed, "one being a woman with child, her execution by that means suspended." Of those executed (see April 18), "some seemed at others forgiving" with the wheel, and one hung a live in chains in the town [see April 11 and April 15], so that there has been the most exemplary punishment inflicted that could be possibly thought of. This, he says, was only justified by an act of assembly. (Compare the "Act for the Security & defence of this Colony," in Col. Laws, N. Y., I: 744. The act for punishing slaves was not passed until Dec. 10, 1712.) Hunter then detailed the prosecution against particular negroes, for whom he had obtained stay of execution pending his appeal to the queen for a reprieve for them.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VI: 341-42. For the expense attending their execution, see Feb. 4, 1713.

Another account of this scheme is written to the Bishop of London about the same day (June 23, 1712) by Rev. John Sharpe, chaplain of the garrison, to the secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, in whose archives in Londono Sharpe's letter is still preserved. His statement supplies the following facts: "Some Negro Slaves here of ye tribe of the Islanders of the Island."—N. Y. Col. Doc., VI: 341-42. A clock about the going down of the Moon they Set fire to a house." The rest of the account agrees, except in minor details, with that of Hunter. Sharpe added that the occurrence made many persons oppose "Negroes being made Christians." He also stated that "Mr. Newe [see Aug. 29, 1704] durst hardly appear his School was blazoned as ye maine Occation of it, and a Petition had like to have been presented [against him] if ye Governors' had not Stood to his Cause." But, Sharpe stated, only two of the negroes were members of Newe's school, one of whom was executed while declaring his innocence, and who was afterwards generally pronounced innocent. Sharpe comments further upon the Christian, or unchristian, character of those executed.—From transcript of Sharpe's letter made by Rev. R. R. Hoes, U. S. N., in N. Y. Gen. & Biol. Record, Vol. V. (1869), 162-63. There was published in London, in 1750, An Account of the Endeavours used by the Sec. for the Prop. of the Gospel in Foreign parts, to instruct the Negro Slaves in New York, together with Two of Bp. Gibson's Letters on that Subject. The information given by Sharpe is contained in this document, and it is, in part, Office of Ministers, and we are credibly informed you have given assurances not to molest or disturb the English Church in the Enjoyment of the Queens Farm, during all the time of your Administration, also the Same has been claimed as a perquisite by all preceding Governments.—Boston News-Letter, March 17-24, 1712.

For a general account of the institution of slavery in New York, see Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 506-7. For the trial of the negroes involved, see Min. Gen. Sec. of the Peace, 1712-1714, (M.S.), 212-24, 228-46.

This is the first instance recorded of the court of general sessions holding a special session "for the tryal of Negro and Indian slaves." The occasion of this meeting was in April 1712. Three negro slaves, Clause, Robin, and Quaco, were found guilty of murdering Adrian Hoglandt, Robin's master, and were visited and with the wrath of the court. Clause was ordered to be "taken to the place of Execution and there to be broked upon A Wheel & so to Continue languishing until he be dead and his head and Quarters to be at the Queens Disposal." Robin was ordered to "be hung up in chains alive and to Continue without any sustinance until he be dead." Quaco's penalty was to "be burnt with fire until he be dead and Consumed."—Min. Gen. Sec. of the Peace, 1711-1712, (M.S.), 212-24, 228-46.

Brooke...wheel, and a third hung up alive." Nine were to be executed on the following day, April 15—ibid., April 14-21, 1712.

15 The young Lord Cornbury, who probably had been one of the "heads of households" of New York (see "M. C. G. III" 197), now, like his father (regarding whose departure, see July 31, 1710), came into unfavourable public notice. A letter of this date, written at Utrecht by G. St. John, brother of Lord Bolingbroke, makes this curious comment upon his career: "... My Lord Cornbury dines with Mr. Monck, and has not been seen since you left him. He has drunk ye most out of house and home, and he is retreated to a summer house upon a Bastion out of y° Wall of the town, but my L° has found him Lay'd Siege to his Cellar and drink him almost dry already."—From the following in a contemporary note of Mr. Locke at The Royal Son Galleries, New York, Jan. 29-30, 1712. Edward Hyde (styled Viscount Cornbury), here referred to, was the only surviving sea and heir apparent of the third Earl of Clarendon (the former governor of New York). On his mother's death (see Aug. 11, 1706), he became Lord Clifton of Leighton Bromswold. He died of a fever "got by a surfeit of drinking," at the age of 21, and was buried in Westminster Abbey Feb. 20, 1713. In his will he styled himself "Lord Viscount Cornbury and Baron Clifton."—

16 A penalty is imposed on "Tom, the Negro man slave of Nicholas Rosevelt." Found guilty of the murder of Adrian Beeckman, and "having Nothing to Say for himself why Judgment of death should not pass upon him," Tom is "burned with a slow fire that he may Continue in Torment for Eight or ten Years, and the said and consist in the body and Consumed to Ashes."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), Apr. 15, 1712. The usual penalty, of course, was to be "hang'd by the Neck till they are dead."

21 By this time, 19 negroes have received sentence, and most of them have already been executed.—N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, April 21-28, 1712. See April 7.

7 Hunter, in a message to the assembly, says: "The Late Hellish Attempt of ye° Slaves is sufficient to Convoy you of the necessity of putting that Sort of men under better Regulation by Some good Law for that purpose, and to take away the Root of that Evil to Encourage the Importation of White Servants."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 333. See April 7.

14 Hunter states in a message to the assembly: "If Speedy care be not taken to Repair the Magazines that great quantity of powder of Several thousands of pounds value must Inevitably be spoilt... I hope you'!l take into ye° Consideration that matter with the Repair of the fort wall which is in a bad condition by the Report of M° Ebbets whom I appointed to Survey it Latey."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 333. A committee is appointed to investigate.—Assembly Jour., I: 311. On May 17, "Mayor Provost, report to the House and Mr. L. & L. and the Magazines, and presented to the House, an Estimate of the Mason and Carpenter's Work, about the old and new Magazines within her Majesty's Fort Anne," amounting to £315, and "the Charge of removing the Powder, Cowper and Stowage, £140.—Ibid., I: 310.

19 Henry Swift, a tavern-keeper (see Nov. 21, 1707), presents a petition, setting forth "That he prepared a Dinner for the late Lord Lovelace, on his Arrival," amounting to £627/6d., and "that he had also a Warrant," for £614, "for boarding of French Prisoners from Canada." He prays that "a Method may be taken, for paying the said Sum." It is ordered that the petition lie "on the Table."—Assembly Jour., I: 310.

13 The clergy of the province of the Church of England, in an address to Gov. Hunter (Mr. Vesey not signing), express thanks for his offers to concur with them in promoting the interests of the church, and for what he has already done. Special reference is made "household" at the encouragement he has given "to the labours of the Society's Catechist, the pious Mr. Elias Neas, and still continues, notwithstanding of the attempts made against him [see April 7, 1712] upon accounts of the late bloody designs of the Negroes."—

27 The government called in the assembly for employing an agent to represent this province in Great Britain.—Assembly Jour., I: 315. It was not passed, however, until July 21, 1715 (p. v.)

27 William Huddleston petitions the assembly for the introduction of a bill setting a yearly income on him "for teaching the Children of the poor Inhabitants of the English, Dutch and French in the City of New-York."—Assembly Jour., I: 313. Such a bill was introduced, and reached its second reading (ibid., I: 316); but no such step appears in the Col. Laws N. Y.

The provision for the "compensation of inhabitants and slaves in the city of New York," bearing this date.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 407.

6 John van der Heul and John Rosevelt, having " Erected in the City of New York a Mill for Grinding Flax seed and making Linet-seed oyle," are given the monopoly of this business in the province for the next ten years by act of the general assembly.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 758. The manufacture of linseed oil was introduced in the province as early as Oct. 17, 1694, when an act was passed to enable the Lansen to set up a mill to make it.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 339; Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 63.

A similar monopoly was given to John Parmenter on June 26, 1712, for the making of "Lamb black" for the next five years (ibid., I: 755), and on Dec. 23, 1712, the time was extended for five years more (ibid., I: 931). On July 24, 1744, Parmenter's widow was given the sole right for a period of ten years.—Ibid., II: 242.

David Jamison is recorded as the recorder of the city in place of May Bickley; his commission was entered in the Minutes on June 13.—

M. C. G., III: 8-9.

11 The Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to agree with any person or persons that will undertake the Raising the Ball and Spindle upon the Steeple of Trinity Church."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See March 1.

12 The city having brought an action against the lessees of the dock for breach of contract, a committee of the common council reports continuance for settlement. These include the provision that the lessees shall "sufficiently Repair the Breaches of the Wharfs made in the late Storm with Stockadoes Cover the same first with Stone then with Mudd or sand and bind the same with Wall Plates."—M. C. G., III: 4, 9. In this a measure shows the construction of the early wharves, which, when extended and filled in, built up the city's water front at its southern end.

23 Hunter reports to the lords of trade that he has had difficulty in taking the census (see June 5), "the people being deter'd by a simple superstition and observation, that the sickness follow'd upon the last numbering of the people." The population of New York City and County is found to be 3,460, an increase of 1,194 since 1703.—N. Y. Col. Acts, V: 339.

He also states: "As to births and burials [there] has never been any Register kept that I can hear of neither is there any possibility of doing it until such time as the Counties are subdivided into Parishes, great numbers remaining unchristned for want of Minis-eters."—Ibid., V: 340. The lords of trade replied on April 23, 1715, by asking "what provision can be made at New York for the support and maintenance of such ministers there."—Ibid., V: 360.

Hunter's report also contains the observation that the forts and barracks in need of the view; the garrison at "one half of the Governours House, ready to fall down," and ten flags are needed for the forts, of which there are five.—Ibid., V: 340.

In a petition to Gov. Hunter for a license to teach school, July 6, Allane Jarratt (Allan Gerard) says that he has had "an experience and practice of the Art of Navigation and other parts of the Mathemats for the space of fourteen Years after an early education in the most useful parts thereof... and being sensible how much the youth brought up in this City are at a loss in going to sea without a sufficient Instruction in writing and Arithmetic and in the Art of Navigation and other useful parts of the Mathemats that might be abundantly serviceable to them in the discharge of their duties at sea... Your Petitioner Humly begs ye° Excellency's Licence."—Col. MSS., LVII: 190 (Albany). Although this name does not appear in the list of schoolmasters teaching in this city between 1695 and the Revolutionary War, as published in Valentine's Hist. of the City of N. Y., 398, Gerard had a notable record as a surveyor (see Col. Coun. Min., 269, 270), and, in 1719, was made surveyor-general.—Ibid., 275.

Charles le Rouge, American silversmith, worked in New York from this date until 1745. He was long the official silversmith of the city. The records show that, from 1720 to 1743, he alone was entrusted the making of the various gold and silver boxes, which, engraved with the arms of the city, included the city seal and accompanied the freedom of the city granted for noteworthy service or to highly honored visitors. For reproduction of such a box, see Pl. 33, Vol. IV. In 1735 (July 8, q.v.), le Rouge also engraved the seal of the mayorality of New York City. For further information concerning him, see *Met. Gov. Hunter, having called a meeting of the clergy of the province, asks that he may be advised regarding necessary measures for promoting the interests of "the Church in gen[2] in these parts." In an address to him (the date of which is not recorded, but evidently about Feb. 27 or 28, or March 1), they stated that the "establishment of the Church here by Act of Assembly" was "so precedent," that it was thought necessary "not only for the peace, but for the good of the State, to address, respectively, in ibid., III: 159 and 160, are obviously erroneous, as both documents were referred to in Hunter's letter of March 1.

M. G. C., III: 30.

Agreed to an order of the common council on Feb. 18, an ordinance is passed to "prohibit Negro and Indian slaves above the Age of fourteen years from going in the Streets of this City after Night without A Lanthorn and A Lighted Candle therein." The Law applies to streets south of the "Fresh water," and to those parts of the city "within the Stockadeos or Fortifications." The penalty for violation of the law is arrest and confinement in the "Common Goal" until the master, mistress, or owner shall pay eight shillings "to the person or persons who Apprehended and Convicted" the slave; and every such slave before release is to be "whipped at the publick whipping post forty lashes save one if desired by the Master or Owner."—M. G. C., III: 39-41.

IV: 51-52, 86-87. This was, in effect, forbidding the negroes "to go to Mr. Neau's school" [see Aug. 4, 1704], for none of them could get Lanthorns or come to him before Sunset." Mr. Neau departed, and his work was continued under the patronage of Trinity Church. The teachers in Trinity's school were Wetmore and Colgan, successively.—From An Account of the Endeavours used by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, to instruct the Negroes Slaves in New York (London, 1770), cited under April 7, 1712. Regarding Mr. Neau's school, see March 1712.

John Sharpe, "Chaplain to her Majesties Forts and Forces in the Province of New York in America" (who has been here 12 years), on the eve of his departure for England, draws up a paper, in which he portrays the needs of the province in matters of education, and the means which will contribute "to the glory of God and the good of his Infant Church in these parts." He says: "I am resolved . . . when I arrive in England to promote the Utmost of my power these three things.

1. A Publick School
2. A Publick Library
3. A Catechising Chapell.

"There is hardly any thing which is more wanted in this Country than learning there being no place I know of in America where it is either less encouraged or regarded.

The City is so conveniently Situated for Trade and the Genius of the people so inclined to merchandise, that they generally seek no other Education for their children than writing and Arithmetick. So that letters must be in a manner forced upon them not only without their seeking, but against their consent . . . It is usual at this time to send Children from Albany and Esopus 100 & 150 miles distant to New York to be taught English and it would no doubt increase the number of such if they could at the same time have the opportunity of learning Latin &c., and a Regular or Acaledemical formation of their principles and manners. This would reconcile them early to the National Church and we might hope that in the rising Generation there would be Unity, Understanding and brotherly Love.

To this end, he states, four things would very much contribute: a proper person to teach; a convenient house for a school; a well chosen library; and a set of rules and orders. His proposed establishment is completely described under these four heads. After describing the type of man required for a teacher, he considers the place thus:

"The second thing is the place than which none is more fit than the City of New York. All will acknowledge this who have not particular views or by ends to serve. The air is serene and healthful, the country round is well setled, and it is greater plenty of all things necessary for life and better convenience of boarding than in any other place on the Continent, besides a collateral advantage of learning both Dutch & French which are very useful accomplishments to scholars, as well as to travellers on the Continent.

"It is possible also to learn Hebrew here as well as in Europe, there being a Synagogue of Jews, and many ingenious men of that nation from Poland, Hungary, Germany, &c.

There are several fit places to build on about this city, as a vacant space between the English Church and the Stadt house, another in the stockadeos of the fort, a vacant Lott belonging to the Queen at the Fort gate all within the walls, also a large common without the walls, having the advantage of a higher situation and the vineyard belonging to my Lord Limerick to be sold on easy terms.

1. The house I would have of a convenient bigness to contain at least 150 with a wall round it to prevent gazing from doors and windows and so situated as not to be lyable to the noise of the Streets to draw off their attention.

2. One side of the area may be a lodging for the master, i.e. an upper and lower room with a small kitchen.

3. On the other side a lower room of the same dimensions kept furnished as a lodging room for the Clergy who when they come out of the town, the key remaining in the hands of the master will be capable of being the parochial library itself.

4. The room over this having a stair on the outside may be proper for the publick library. This library, he states, "may be the same with the publick or provincial Library heretofore mentioned."

After presenting his proposed "rules and orders for the better Government of this school and forming the minds and manners of the youth," he considers the library thus:

"Another thing which is much wanted here is a publick Library, which would very much advance both learning and piety. Such there are at Charles Town in Carolina, Annapolys in Mary Land, at Philadelphia and Boston. Some books have been formerly sent to New York but as parochial they remain in the hands of the Incumbent." He describes the regulations of his proposed library. Among these are the following provisions:

"This Library I would have to be publick and provincial and to be open every day in the week at convenient hours.

"That any person borrowing a book shall be obliged to deposit a certain sum of money which shall exceed the value of it and in case the book is not restored at the limited time, this money to be forfeited to buy another.

"I will reserve in this Library also a copy of all such Rarities as the Country produces, or are brought hither from other places to be communicated to the Ingenious in Europe. There may be also a small garden of rare and exotic plants to send yearly some to the curious in England and have others in exchange.

Following his analysis of the operation of the library, he states:

"For a foundation or beginning of this Library I have long since resolved to give all my own books, which I now have or may have at the time of my decease or leaving of that country, which shall be put up in it how soon it is fitted to receive them, and appropriated by a deed of gift under my hand to the Trustees for the Library, carrying on the title page or cover such inscription, badge, or impression as the Trustees shall appoint, reserving to my self during life or stay in the country free access to the Library and leave to borrow of such as I want to my own house, under the same restrictions and limitations as others are or may be by subsequent rules or orders. . . . A Catalogue of my books is at the End.

"To these a considerable addition may be made by buying in the best books found in the Library of the Reverend Mr. Lydus deceased, Mr. Selyns, the Rd. Mr. Beys. There is a small collection of Physick and Surgery in the hands of the Heirs of Dr. Gaudencaeus deceased, and many volumes by donations, legacies &c., when there is a place to put them in, and a beginning once made. An Act of Assembly can be also easily obtained to secure them as shall be thought proper."

The Rev. Mr. Sharpe's observations concerning the third feature of his scheme—the catechising chapel—begin thus: "It is about ten years since the Venerable Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, out of their tender concern for the souls of the Indians and negro's who are Slaves at New York appointed M. Elias Neau [see Aug. 4, 1704] to instruct them in the knowledge of Jesus Christ and Salvation through him.

"Mr. Neau . . . is certainly the best qualified for it of any [that] could be found upon these accounts." His qualifications to have charge of the proposed chapel are considered at length; also the difficulties in the way of accomplishing this design. The chief of these impediments are the unwillingness of the masters to have their slaves made Christians; the inconvenience of the time allowed to attend classes; the smallness of the meeting-place; and the want of zeal in many of the slaves "which proceeds from the slender regard had to them." The meeting-place "is inconvenient, tho' the best that can be got." It "is the upper floor of Mr. Neau's own house—which tho as large as most in the city is not capacious enuff for such a number as often does come nor for the sixth part of the Negro and Indian Slaves in Town besides children and apprentices both English, Dutch and French who constantly attend and receive instruction thereon."

In closing, Mr. Sharpe says: "I will give for myself with a cheerful heart to carry on the building of the Kathedale Chappel for Negroes and Indians, the sume of fifty pounds." There is added:

"A Catalogue of Books belonging to John Sharpe intended to be given as a foundation of a Publick Library at New York. It consists of 112 items, mostly religious.—From N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1880), 341-64, citing the original MS. (No. 841) in the Lambeth Palace Library, London.

The remarkable history of the collection of books left by Rev. Dr. Sharpe to New York is told by Keep, in Hist. of the N. Y. Society Library, 43-64. The collection survives, almost intact, in the archives of that society.

May the report to the lords of trade that the assembly has affirmed that the governor's council has no right "to meddle in money bills," but that the assembly may raise money by ways and means of its own, exclusive of the council. They have placed the public monies "in the hands of a Treasurer of their own," who is to dispose of it only by their direction. They have suspended the receiver-general who was, constituted by "Royal Letters Patents." Hunter has dissolved the assembly for their disrespectful behaviour. There is no hope, however, in a new election; as "they have first the name of slavery upon the supporting the Government in the manner her Majesty has been pleased to direct," and that ofbury on their own razed resolutions and practices."—N. Y. Cal. Docs., V: 356.

Gov. George Clinton, writing March 19, 1759, to the Duke of Bedford, stated: "that the first encroachments on the Royal prerogative, begun under Mr. Hunter's administration, that the Assembly have advantage of the necessities the Administration was then under (by the war with France and an expedition then set on foot in America against Canada) to claim a right of appointing their own Treasurer, and refused to support the Government unless this was yielded [sic] to them. Mr. Hunter struggled under these difficulties for four years from 1760 to 1764 without any support, in hopes that the Ministry would think it incumbent on them effectually to support Him Majesty's authority and prerogative in his Colonies, but after all was not only forced to yield [sic] to this demand, but likewise to consent to a large emission of paper money, which remains without being sunk to this day."—N. Y. Cal. Doc., VII: 551. Lewis Morris, writing to the lords of trade in 1759, stated that a similar "dangerous attack upon the prerogative of the Crown" was attempted in Gov. Montgomery's time.—Ibid., VI: 767. See also To All whom These Presents May Concern (printed by Bradford, N. Y., 1713), an anonymous pamphlet, relating to the objection of the inhabitants to being taxed for the support of the English government, and asking the colonists to show more respect for the mother country. It threatens punishment if the revenue is not granted.

The following is the city's first pauper list, as given in the Mayoral Minutes under this day two years ago.

"Daniel Batts Catherine Reade
Effie a blind woman Anne Shuttleworth
Sarah an old Maid Mrs. Hope
Mrs. Cooley a soldier's wife Mrs. Taylor
Cornellus Van Vlerden Mrs. Carlise
Mary Cooley Margaret Key
Elizabeth Dragoon Mary Brown
Effie Bluet a blind woman Philip Battin & Pasco Battin
(two fatherless & motherless children)."—M. C. M., March 24, 1755.

On March 20, 1716, the church-wardens were ordered to "Strike Mary Brown out of the list of the poor of this city She being a lewd woman as the Court is informed."—Ibid., March 20, 1716.

"Greenwich" is for the first time noted by name in the city records. "To Mr. House of Government in the Bowery district of the Out Ward" is required by the common council to remove a fence which he has erected "upon the Land of this Corporation from High water to low water Marke whereby the Cattle of several of the Neighborhood Cannot pass to their Respective Pastures."—Ibid., July 27, 1715.

The grand jurors recommended to the court of general sessions "the Inspecting of Weights and Measures [see May 1, 1714] and to Prevent Forestallers of the Market k&c that the Streets be kept Clean & that the Laws ag the Breach of the Sabbath be put in Execution all which this Court Resolve to see Executed with all Expedition." The highways "between this City & Kingsbridge" are reported again in "Great want of Repair" (Feb. 12, 1713), as well as "the Queens Bridge."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 260.

Anthony Ham is appointed dock-master and ordered to "Cok- lect & Receive all the Revenue of the Docks and Slips and Account for this Corporation for the sume as often as it shall be thereunto Required."—M. C. C., III: 35. See July 27, 1728. This represents a change in policy on the part of the common council; previously the position of dock-master was "farmed" or auctioned off to the highest bidder for a term of years, the successful bidder being required to "Keep the Said Schoole in good and Sufficient repair." Dock-masters, however, without exception, failed to keep their agreement. The dock was found to be either " foul," or "much out of repair," or else the keeper was lax in his quarterly payments to the city. Hence the change in policy, above mentioned, was inaugurated. Anthony Ham's salary was £50 per year.

Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to secure the Steeple, &c. for building, & take care for Sound Board." June 29, the committee reported they could not perform the order, owing to want of money. It was recommended "that the Church wardens take up one hundred pounds upon Interest for Carrying on Said work."—Trin. Min. (MS.) See Jan. 21, 1714.

Trinity vestry orders "that the Church Wardens let the Queens farme and Queens gardem Severally to the highest bidder for three years & that good Security be given by the buyer, of the approba- tion of the Church wardens to pay the rent quarterly, and to leave the fences of both in good repair."—Trin. Gov. Hunter, in a message to the legislature, says: "You are a new Assembly, and so are not accountable for the wrong steps in the former or concerned in y further vindication of them, so what I am about to say may not be otherways construed as than a caution to you, that you walk not in their ways, so displeasing to her Majesty & so Justly resented by her. You are called together in order to settle a revenue for the support of her Majestyes Governm not to settle yd Governm for that is already done by the only authority upon Earth, that has a right to do it."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 154.

It is ordered by the assembly "that Mr. Bayard do search in the Secretary's Office for Proclamations, Commissions and other public Papers, that relate to the first Settlement, or settling of this Colony, and make report of the same."—Jour., I: 339-40. June 29, it was ordered, "that the Secretary do lay before this House, To-morrow Morning, the Books of Record wherein is contained King Charles's Grant to the Duke of York, the Duke's Commission to General Nicoll, The Treaty and Articles of Surrender, The Duke's Commission to Sir Edmund Andros, and Sir Edmund Andros's Proclamation."—Ibid., I: 340. See also the later order of May 26, 1715.

David Lyell, the sealer of the province, whose duty is "to mark and seal all Weights and Measures in this Colony," states in a petition to the assembly that there has been "great Complaints of the Measures or Standards,

The provincial legislature passes "An Act to Impower Frederick Phillipes, a Minor, to Remove Kings-Bridge [erected in 1663, p.4] to a more commodious Place, and for Confirming the Toll thereof." The will of the late Frederick Phillipes, under which the then owner of the manor has title, was dated Oct. 26, 1700. The act further states that "by means of Springs-Tides, not only 1714 Causer leading through a Meadow from Manhattans, or York- Island, to the Bridge erected in pursuance of the said Grant, but likewise the Bridge itself is often difficult and unfit for Travellers to pass." The act therefore enables Phillipes, the younger, "to 1713 Erect and Build another good and sufficient Draw-Bridge between July the Neck, or Island of Papparinnemo, and York or Manhattoans- 1 Island, at such place or Places to the Westward of the present Bridge, as shall be thought proper and convenient, and to join and affix the same to or in any Land on York- Island, and to dig away or level any Part or Parts thereof, both to secure the Bridge, and to make the Path or entry thereof commodious and convenient for Travellers. And when another Bridge shall be built (which is to be the Names of Kings- Bridge) it shall and may be Lawful for him and them to pull down the Bridge heretofore Built." A table of the toll rates, mentioned in the manor grant, "shall be hung or fixed up in the Ferry or Toll-house." On account of depreciation in specie, the payment was cut back, and it was determined in Troy weight, and are to be paid "in good Mexico or Seville Plate." That is, according to the schedule given in the act, payment of tolls is to be made in a certain number of grains according to the person or thing passing over the bridge. Thus, the toll for every man and horse passing in the daytime is 15 grains; for each head of near cattle, 13 grains; for each score of hogs, calves, or sheep, two pennyweight and a half; for every boat, vessel, or canoe that shall pass the bridge and cause it to be drawn up, 1 pennyweight and 21 grains; and so forth. Free passage over the bridge, as the manor grant provided, is given to the British sovereign, and to any forces and war vessels, and to all who are on board them. Overn. Jan. 5, 1693. Jan. 2, 1759. Land Papers (1864), 106, citing "Land Papers" (in office of sec. of state), V: 167.

18 That the postal system between the northern colonies (see April 4, 1692) was in successful operation at this period, and sufficient to convey official correspondence, appears from a letter of this date in which Hunter informs the lords of trade that "the post from New England has brought me her Majesty's Letters."—N. Y. Col. Doc., V: 367.

20 "One Berry a Taylor and one James Kelly who lately came from Boston and Rhode-Island, are in Goal for Counterfeiting" paper money, a "Felony without benefit of Clergy."—N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, July 20–27, 1715. Both men were tried, guilty found, and sentenced to death.—Ibid., Sept. 7–14, 1715. On Sept. 15, Col. Stephen Thomas wrote from New York to John Winthrop at New London concerning these men, one of them "a German Grauer who is thought will have the Government's pardon.—"From a letter in the Winthrop Papers, in Mass. Hist. Society. Both men were pardoned by the governor, however, at the intercession of "most of the Gentlemen" of the city, who addressed him "with Prayers and Tears" for the lives of the two men, and accordingly a Statute was passed thereon, and the Said Rector and Inhabitants have not hitherto had any other proceedings against them."—Trin. Min. (MS.), under date of April 25, 1715. See also Dec. 5, 1712.

Aug. 18, 1714. "Her Majesty's Royal Proclamation of Peace between Great Britain and France [see March 31/April 11], was Published here with all imaginable Circumstances of Joy, for Men and Militia were under Arms, the Cannon were fired, and at Night a noble Bonfire and Illuminations and a Ball at the Fort, where his Excellency made a very fine Entertainment."—Boston News-Letter, Aug. 31, 1715; Cal. Com. Min., 252. The bonfire was made "on the Green before the Fort," and was at the city's expense, having been ordered the day before by the common council, with 23 gallons of wine for the occasion. The cost to the city was £4.45.—M. C. G., III: 44.

The petition of collagen Abraham De Peyster and Mr. Samuel Barnard, is read in the common council setting forth that part of the city hall stands on their land, and a committee, including the recorder, is appointed "to make diligent search and Enquiry how the City Hall Came to be built upon the said Ground."—M. C. G., III: 42. The complainants brought an action of ejectment against the city on Oct. 29.—Ibid., III: 46. For full account of the title to this land, see description of Pt. 24, I: 238: see also July 18, 1718.

The governor's council orders that a proclamation be issued for a day of thanksgiving.—Cal. Com. Min., 253. This was on account of Gt. Britain's peace with France.—See Aug. 18, 1713. The original MS. order in the State Library, Albany, shows that the celebration is to be observed "this day month" throughout the province.

The petition of Abraham De Lanoy is read in the common council, "praying Liberty to build an Overn under Ground in the Street fronting to his house in Queen Street near Burgars Path he undertaking that the same Shall not be prejudicial to the Street or the Neighbourhood and that he will keep the same Street in good order." The permit is granted, the petitioners to pay "A Nine penny loaf of bread on the first day of May yearly for the use of the poor."—M. C. G., III: 46–47.

The common council orders that the pound be removed "from John Brevart's at the Bowery to the top of the Hill near fresh water called the Dodson's Farm, Isaac dei Riemers, formerly mayor, is made pound-keeper.—M. C. G., III: 47.

A hundred soldiers, to recruit the four companies here, arrive from London.—N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, Oct. 26, 1713.

The provincial legislature passes "An Act for Mending and 25 keeping in Repair the Post-Road from New-York to Kings- Bridge." It states that the highways and post-roads through "Manhattan's Island, from New York to Kingsbridge, " are become very Ruinous, and almost impassable, very dangerous to all Persons that pass those Ways, occasioned chiefly by reason of divers Disputes happening and arising among the Inhabitants." The inhabitants are to do the work and bear the expense in their respective wards, except in the Out Ward. There, the inhabitants of the Bowery Division shall keep the highway in repair from Fresh Water to the Saw-Kill; but, from the Saw-Kill (including the Saw-Kill bridge) to the limits of the Harlem Patent, it shall be mended by the inhabitants of the several wards within the city; and from the Limits of Harlem Patent, to the Cause-way of Kings-Bridge, the highway is to be mended by the inhabitants of the Harlem Division. The said post-road and highway "shall be laid out the breadth of Four Rod, and cleared the breadth of Two Rod."—Ibid., Oct. 17, 1714.

The lessee of the ferry is required, at the city's expense, to "load the Bridge at the ferry with five scow load of Stones in Order to secure the same from the Ice."—M. C. G., III: 50.

The common council Minutes record for the first time the appointment of a "publick Whippier." Richard Cooper, "for his Encouragement for the due Execution of that Office," is to be allowed an annual salary of £5.—M. C. G., III: 49. Cooper held the office for five years, as the warrants issued periodically for his salary show.—Ibid., III: 46–187, passim. For two years thereafter no incumbents of the office appears. On Nov. 16, 1720, "The Council doe deliberate, and resolve that an Advertisement thereof be published,"—Ibid., III: 245. Early this morning (Shrove Tuesday), it is discovered that

Trinity Church has been broken into, through the north window of the steeple and the window of the vestry-room, surplises cut and torn, prayer-books and psalm-books strewn about the yard, and the sacred vestments scattered. Addresses to the governor's council from the English, Dutch, and French ministers and congregations urge investigation and punishment. Such investigation produced testimony showing that the rector of Trinity, the Rev.

William Vesey, had been ridiculed and even threatened. In the address of the rector and vestry to the council, on Feb. 16, they stated that, "notwithstanding his Excellencies Proclamation against Immorality & Profaneness [and] the great diligence of the Magis-tacy of this City in their several Stations, there are some Busey mockers & scoffers of Religion, who Ridicule both sacred things

& Orders of God; Moreover Lament the Violating of the Ministers of Christ, & Exposing them & their Holy Function to Reproach &

Contempt; And it is with ye greatest Concern that we find these

Vices so Flagrant That ye Innocent & unblameable Life & Conversation of our Reverend Rector for many Years among us, have not been able to Protect him from ye false Calumnies and Barbarous Reproaches & Threatenings of such Irreligious & wicked Persons, which we humbly conceive hinders the Word of God, & naturally tends to Infidelity & Atheism." They offered a reward of £50 for the conviction of the offender. On the council's recommendation,

Hunter instigated a proclamation on March 9, offering a reward of £55 to any one, not guilty, who discovered the offender, and £55 with indemnity and pardon to any guilty person who would reveal his accomplices.—Doc. Hist. N. T., (40 ed.), III: 269-77. The offender was not discovered, and no one was punished for this impassive act. It is worthy of note, however, that the governor's own proclamation contained reflections against Rev. Mr. Vesey (Ibid., III: 276-77); and, in a satirical play, which Hunter wrote, and published on Aug. 1, 1714 (q. v.), he freely lampooned him.

For other information regarding Hunter's quarrels with the rector of Trinity, see Doc. Hist. N. T., III: 264-68.

It is ordered that Thomas Buyerly report to the assembly the amounts received from duties paid. King George, brought under his Majesty's Beam, in the Weigh-House in New-York, during the time he has been receiver-general.—Jour., I, 364.

The reign of George I begins, on the death of Queen Anne. An act of Parliament to continue the legislative troops in America and in New-York, was approved on Aug. 9, 1714.—Cobbett's Parliamentary Hist. of Eng., VII; 1369. See Oct. 4 and 11.

The first play published in English America comes from the pen of Gov. Robert Hunter of New York. It is entitled: Androcles A Biographical [sic] Force In Three Acts, Via. The Senate, The Consistory and The Apothecary. By Governor Hunter. Printed at Monopoli since 1 August, 1714. For description and history of the book see Bibliography. It lampoons some of the most conspicuous personages in the city at this time, particularly Rev. William Vesey, rector of Trinity Church. The play was probably written for and acted by the governor's official household and immediate friends. In the only copy of the book known to be extant (in the library of Henry E. Huntington, Esq.) the names of the inhabitants of New York, thus parodied, have been written by a contemporaneous hand (probably by the author himself) opposite the printed names of the "Dramatiss Personae." Thus, "Androcles," for "Vesey." "Keeper" (of the Great Seal)?—CoP. Hunter; "Deputy"—G. Clarke; "Speaker"—Nichols; "Aesop"—Jamison; "Doodlejack"—Lake; "Tom of Bedlam"—Assembly; "Babillard"—Bayard; "Multibrugh"—Mulford; "Cobus"—Cortland; "Solemnize"—Justice "Morgan; "Fitzler"—Vesey, etc. Manuscript additions and alterations, in the same hand, include the change of the word "Monopoli," on the title-page, to "Moropoli." In explanation of this, a former owner of the volume has written the comment at the beginning of the book: "Whoever made the correction meant, I suppose, to imply that it was printed at [word illegible]—Foot's town."

"Hunter was not only a soldier and a courtier, but a scholar and wit as well. His literary attainments had won him the friendship of Addison, Steele, Swift, and other wits and litterateurs of his day. He was a good Latin and French scholar, and wrote both languages fluently; most of his letters while in New-York, and some of his drafts of council minutes, now among the State papers at Albany, having been written in French."—Charles Burr Todd, in Wilton's Mem. Hist. N. T., II, 122.

The vacant ground on the west side of the custom-house bridge is leveled. A committee of the common council is appointed to meet the mayor "at the fighting Cocks to settle the Affairs of the Dock."—M. C. C., III, 66. The Fighting Cocks was a tavern at the present 28 Water St., near the Coffee House. It was destroyed in the great fire of 1776.—See Sept. 21, 1775; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III, 978. The house was owned by Philip van Cortlandt. See Aug. 1, 1746. Cf. Bayles, Old Towns of N.'s, 123.

Gov. Hunter, returning from Albany, informs the council of the death of Queen Anne (see Aug. 1, 1714) and the accession of George, Duke of Brunswick. The council orders that King George be proclaimed "in the most solemn manner" on the following Mon- day, Oct. 11 (n. c.)—Col. Coun. Min., 356. Hunter had learned of the accession of George I from private, not official, sources.—See N. Y. Col. Docs., 380—81, where the date of the celebration is erroneously given as Oct. 18.

The government having notified the corporation of the death of Queen Anne, and the previous instructions in the pope's missal, on Oct. 11, that Prince George is King, the common council, in order to "demonstrate their Great Joy for so great a blessing as that of a Protestant successor to the Crown of Great Britain &c; in the Most Illustrious house of Hanover," orders that on that even-

18 The province owes Hunter, "of arrear of tallow and money laid out for the publick," more than £5,000. Debts of all sorts, some to large amounts, are charged against the revenue and cannot be paid, because Hunter is repeatedly appealed to the lords of trade for relief.—N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 455. On this day, Louis XIV ascends the throne, succeeding Louis St. 1 XIII as king of France.

8 Doctor John Livingston is killed in a duel at New York by Thomas Dongan, nephew of Gov. Dongan. On Sept. 10, Dongan was "Tried for that Fact in our Supreme Court, and found Guilty of Manslaughter."—N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, Sept. 12-19, 1715.

Mary Harris (wife or widow of Richard Harris—see Dec. 22, 1704), now described as "Late Mary Baker Widdow of Roger Baker late of the City of New York Inholder," by an indenture made on this date, to her son-in-law George Cooke, relinquishes, for a certain consideration yearly, her third interest in a "large brick Dwelling house and Lott of Land . . . in Smiths [William] Street within the City of New York in the East Ward . . . and now in the possession of the said George Cooke." This house had been bequeathed by Roger Baker to his wife, son and daughter, by will dated Sept. 18, 1702, "soon after the making of which" Baker died.—Liker Deeds, XXVIII: 198-202 (New York). In a mortgage given by Cooke on this property on July 16, 1716, he described the house as on east side of Smith St. bounded south by the ground of Lawrence Thomas, east by ground of Johannes Vanburgh, west by Smith St., and on the north by persons unknown.—ibid., XXVIII: 241-45. On July 18, 1716, Mary Harris sold her interest outright for $150 to Cooke, and relinquished the yearly rent.—ibid., XXVIII: 274. We have no other record of George Cooke's occupancy of the old King's Head Tavern.

Oct. An order is issued by the governor's council, on the memorial of Charles le Roux, to pay him for engraving bills of credit.—Col. Coun. Min., 260. Warrant for payment was issued March 1, 1716.—ibid., 262.

25 The time between this date, when Adolphus Phillips of New York and Thomas Dongan of London, a kinsman, are given power of attorney to sell "the large Messuage Tenement or dwelling house known by the Name of Whitehall with the Ware house Bakehouse or Bolting house and the Ground or Yard thereto belonging" (Liker Deeds, XXVIII: 11, 195-97), and the date when the Burgis View (PL 25, Vol. I) was drawn (probably in 1717-8), this famous "Great House" of Gov. Stuyvesant and Gov. Dongan (see Nov. 12, 1677; March 11, 1686; April 22, 1677) was destroyed by fire. In the Burgis View only the walls remain, and, in the Key beneath, the building is described as "The Ruines of White Hall." See reference to "Whitehall" (with no mention of ruins) under date of Feb. 23, 1716; see also Oct. 29, 1709. The building stood at what is now the north-west corner of Whitehall and State Sts.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 922. In 1917, when the building at No. 1 Whitehall St. was torn down an office building which now (1922) occupies the site, the author picked up an oystershell five inches long on the railed sand beach then still clearly visible in front of the old house, at a depth of six feet below the present street. He also found heavy old adzed timbers extending out under the street, on the beach level, from a point near the corner of Whitehall St.

Nov. 12 Hunter writes, among other things: "The trade of this Province has consisted chiefly of provisions; but it has considerably decreased since the late Peace. To prevent "the total decay of this, and all other branches of the revenue of the province," he proposes to go on with the production of naval stores (masts, yards, tar, etc.).

He sends "a list of the number of ships, Vessells & mariners belonging to this Province, almost all of them having been built here.

He confirms an earlier estimate of the proportion of homespun used in New York (see Aug. 3, 1708), so far as it applies to "the planters and poorer sort of country people," stating that the computation "is rather less than more, but the several sorts are coarser than what is wrought from England." The act adds that he has never known homespun to be sold in the shops, and that the "People of this Town and Albany, which make a great part of the Province wear no clothing of their own manufacture." There is "no currency but of silver and bills of credit, the smallest of which is of two shillings." He proposes the coining of copper farthings for native copper, for which purpose he asks the grant of a patent.—12 N. Y. Col. Doc., VI: 460-62. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 444.

The vestry of Trinity Church passes a resolution regarding the king's command that the increase in the Rev. Mr. Vesey's salary shall be paid by the justices of the peace and vestrymen of the city. —From the original minutes, in metal file labelled "Filed Papers, 1700-1705," city clerk's records.

An explanatory note, supplied by the late E. T. Corwin, and citing various authorities, states that the Rev. Mr. Vesey was in England from June, 1714 to Nov., 1715, for the purpose of securing some relief from the opposition to the Episcopal in New York which grew out of "its pretended legal establishment." Although the church charter asserts, "about a dozen times, that the Church of England was established by law," the Ministry Act of 1693 (q. v.), "did not establish the Church of England." Moreover, "the Legislative Assembly in 1695 positively declared—that the Vestrymen and Church Wardens had power to call a dissenting Protestant minister, and that he is to be paid and maintained as the law directs." Gov. Fletcher, however, asserted that the law meant what the Assembly itself declared it did not mean. "When Vesey went to England, the city vestry, which was elected by the people at large, "took advantage of their legal position, and refused to pay the funds to the church as they were never intended specifically for them; but had only been collected and paid before because of official pressure. The claim had always been considered a perversion, as it really was."

Eccles. Reg., III: 2053, citing Heathcote's letter of Feb. 25, 1716 to the Lord Bishop of Bristol in ibid., III: 2105. While in England, Vesey was made a "Commissioner" of the Bishop of London; and obtained a letter from the king to Gov. Hunter, directing Hunter to secure the back payments of Mr. Vesey's salary. This was accordingly done.—ibid. See, further, ibid., III: 2107-8; VII: 375, footnote; Berrian, Hist. Sketch of Trim. Church, 32-33, Appendix E.

Thomas Kearney is made a defendant in a suit in the mayor's court brought by Mears, Dugdale and Searle, four merchants. The plaintiffs alleged they had been brought "into great Dis-credit" because, out of 100 barrells of flour which Kearney delivered to them as "good and Merchantable," and which they sold at Bridgetown, Barbados, as such, 57 were found to be "bad and mixt flour." Kearney had to pay £6216s in damages and costs.—M. C. M., Dec. 19, 1715. For legislative action concerning the sale of flour, see Oct. 24, 1709.

The governor, council, mayor, and city corporation, as well as the ministers and principal men of the city, sign an "Association" to uphold King George's title to the throne against the Pretender.—From N. Y. letter in Boston News-Letter, Dec. 26-Jan. 2, 1716. The occasion of this was the attempt of the "Pepish Pretender," son of James II, with the assistance of adherents, to wrest the throne from King James II, and to return to the Pastoral. This "Association," recorded in the Minutes of the Common Council of the next day, reads: "His most Sacred Majesty King George our Sole And undoubted Rightful and Lawfull Sovereign, having from the throne Informed his High Court of Parliament that he had full Assurance that the late Rebellious Tumults in Great Britain were only the Prelude to the Intended Invasion of his Dominions by a Popish Pretender to his Crown and his Associates. We Who have hereto Subscribed our Names, in Duty to God and our King and due Respect to our Holy Religion our Country And Purity do solemnly Declare and promise that we will to the utmost of our Power support the Pretender and his Majesties Rightfull & Lawfull Title to the Sovereignty of Great Britain And all other the Dominions and Territories thereto Belonging against the Said Pretender and all other Pretenders whatsoever their Associations and Abettors, And we do further in the most Solemn manner promise and engage to one another that we will cheerfully and Readily joyn together when thereto Re- quir'd by Lawfull Authority at such place within this Province & in such manner as Shall be by the Said Authority Appointed to Oppose and Suppress all such Efforts as Shall be made by the secret or open Act or coyness of the Pretender, their Adherents to the Disturbance of his Majesties Government and the Peace and Tranquility of his Subjects. In Testimony of the Sincerity of our hearts we have hereto Affixed our hands."—M. C. M., III: 107.

From the period of 1716-8 dates the well-known Burgis View of New York from Brooklyn Heights, reproduced and described in V. C. Smith, The South-East side of New York, June 25, 1715. This is the most important, as well as the finest view of the city, and shews in detail every building along the East River front as far north as the present Catherine Street, as well as many of the buildings and other landmarks back from the river. The drawing was probably made about June 25, 1717 (n.), as it shows the long bridge at the foot of Broad St., which, on that day, was ordered to be constructed.

About this time, John Horn built a house upon the tract which he had acquired "in conjunction with his brother-in-law Cornelius Weber, the latter's sister Rachel having married the former three years previously. The house, which became the starting point of the Bloomingdale Road [see Nov. 25, 1751] was located between 22d and 23d Streets, in the present centre of Fifth Avenue, on the exact spot where the 'Isle of Safety' has been placed, and immediately west of the Flatiron Building. It became later the residence of Christopher Milbank, a merchant in the Swamp, who had married Margaret Horn in 1688 and removed to this dwelling in 1720 from Vanderwater Street. Fifth Avenue was ordered opened in 1837. In 1839... the homestead was removed to the north west corner of the avenue and street where the Fifth Avenue Hotel stands."—Mott, The New York of Yesterday (1908), 6, Man. Coun. Can. (1865), 853. See Fifth Avenue Hotel in Landmark Map Ref. Key III, 978.

Feb. 7. "At a General quarter sessions of the peace," held on the "first Tuesday of Hecby 1715" (1716), the "hired house" of "Nicholas Eyers brewer a baptist teacher," which is "situated in the broad street of this City between the house of John Michel Eyers and Mt John Spratt," is "registered for an abaptist meeting house within this City."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 290. This was the beginning of the Baptist, or Abaptist, Congregation in New York, with their own meeting-house.—Ibid., III: 291. As early as 1672, however, there were Quakers or more abaptists in this city:—Eccles. Rec., I: 300, 318, 709. See also 1712, Jan. 19, 1727; and 1728. The year 1716 has been determined by the entry in the Min. of the Gen. Quarter Sessions Court (1694-1731), 317.

25 Trinity vestry orders that a lease of "the Churches Garden" be granted "to Mr. M. Bickley (or to such person in trust for him as he shall appoint)," for the term of three years, at 20 shillings a year.—Trin. Min. (MS.).

A committee of the common council, which has waited upon Stephen de Lanecy to thank him for presenting £50 (his salary as assemblyman) to the city, being advised by him that the money may be well expended for a public clock, the common council directs the committee to order a clock made, with four dial-plates.—M. G. C., III: 108. On April 26, the committee reported that Joseph Phillips, a clockmaker, would make a "good substantial Town Clock," and would accept the whole money. The clock stands, 7 feet 3 inches in diameter, and with two dial-plates of red cedar painted and gilt, each six feet square; that he would provide workmen and material for the clock and pendulum, place it in the city hall within six months, for £50 on the completion of the work; and would keep it in good order for 20 shillings per annum, after the first year for which he would make no charge. It is ordered that the committee "agree with him Accordingly."—Ibid., III: 114-15. On May 23, part payment of £30 was made to Phillips by the treasurer, on the mayor's warrant, "out of the Money given by Mt Delancy to this Corporation" (ibid., III: 117), and final payment on March 20, 1717 (n.).

A committee of the common council is appointed to employ workmen "to Levell the Ground Between the Great Bridge And Whitehall," and also to repair the wharf "by the Markett house at the south end of the Broad Street."—M. G. C., III: 109.

Mar. 9. The common council gives a dinner to the governor at the house of John Parmenty. This tavern was then the favorite resort for corporation gatherings (see May 28, 1715). Expenses amounting to £235;15s;11d were paid for entertainment there Nov. 20 and 25 last, and on March 9.—M. G. C., III: 94, 111, 113-14, 119-20, 128. After June 18, 1717 (n.), as it shows the length of bridge at the front of the militia in the province is 5,060.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), I: 469.

20 The city expends £131:15s;6d for a model of an engine, to be obtained from Holland, for cleaning the dock.—From original MS.
smooth, then they can make use of wheel-carriages. There are but two coaches belonging to this province, because of the badness of the roads, though there are many rich people. There are three churches, the English, the French, and the Dutch Church; the latter for the Assembly to sit in, which is not very fine, and where they judge all matters. The town is compact, the houses for the most part built after the Dutch manner, with the gable-ends towards the street; the streets are of a good breadth; the town is built close upon the river, and there is a fine quay that reigns all round the town, built with stone and piles of wood outside. There are small docks for cleaning and building small ships. At high-water, the vessels come up to the quay to lade and unlade. In winter the river's frozen, sometimes all over, and such abundance of ice comes down, that it often cuts the cables of ships, but cannot hurt those near the quay. The town is built on ground that gradually rises from the water, so it is amphitheatral like. The French have all the privileges that can be, and are the most in number here, they are of the Council and of the Parliament, and are in all other employments. The chief produce of this province is beef, flour, pork, butter, and cheese, which they send to the West Indies, and sometimes to Lisbon. They drive a great trade with the Northern Indians for skins and furs. There is plenty of all sorts of fish, oysters, and water fowl. The climate is very cold in winter, a great deal of snow and frost for four months, and very hot in the latter part of summer.

Oct. 11 At ten, I went to the Coffee-house, and walked upon the Exchange [see Burgis View, Pl. 25, Vol. I], which is a small place that is planked, and hath pillars of wood all round, which support the roof and leave it open on all sides. I dined with Mr. Andrew Freene, Nov. 4th Sunday—At ten I went to Mr. Freene, and with him to church. . . . which is after Calvin's way. The church is very large and beautiful, and within it there was a very great congregation, . . . From "Journal of John Fontaine," in Memoirs of a Huguenot Family, translated by Ann Maury (1855).

20 Catharine Staats writes to Obadiah in Holland, "against a place formerly Called the Great Bridge and next Adjoining unto the Custom House," with all its appurtenances "now late in the Tenure or Occupation of One Johannes Dehonour" and now in the "Tenure or Occupation of the said Obadiah Hunt."—Liber Deeds, XXXVIII: 370-75. This was a tavern, and stood at the present 33-35 Pearl St., occupying the site of the old Heemans warehouse, for a history of which see Castello Plan, II: 266.

21 According to an affidavit of this date, the Bowery Lane was at this period used for horse-racing. It is the affidavit of William Beeckman to the case of Anthony Byrants to乔治 Elsworth, heard in the mayor's court, and begins: "William Beeckman mariner of full age Deposteth & saith that about five weeks ago on a Saturday he was at a horserace in the bowery lane where Mr Byrants horse run agst the horse of Mr Johnston [Mayor Johnston! and that Mr Beeckman saw the horse of Mr Johnston to be about six horse lengths behind him . . . From the original MS. in box labelled "New-York, 1700-1706," in archives of N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Dec. 7 A triple alliance is formed by England, France, and Holland, to check the ambition of Spain.—Particulars were published in the Boston News-Letter, July 29–Aug. 5, 1717.

At about this time, the whale fishery began in New England. Auction sales of books began in Boston in this year with the sale of the library of the Rev. Ehrenz Pomeroy.

20 Feb. 20 The Resolutions for leave to remove a decayed block-house from his premises near the east gate of the city.—Cal. Hist. MSS, Eng. 433. It seems clear that this was the Fly blockhouse, which stood at the foot of Wall St.; the Miller Plan (Pl. 25-a) shows this blockhouse at the location mentioned. A year later, Jan. 28, 1718, the Boston town council reported the location of John F. for a grant of water lots, near "the Block house in the East River between Mr Beeckman and Mr Sacketts."—M. C. C., III: 165. Curiously enough, no Beeckman has been found of record as receiving a water grant south of Beeckman's Slip (Fulton St.). Between Fulton St. and Peck's Slip, a Grand Petition of John F. for a grant of land under water, as recorded in Liber City Grants, B. 70: 83; as did also William Beeckman, recorded in ibid., B. 491, and C. 181; and likewise Benjamin Peck, recorded in ibid., B. 515. Between Peck Slip and James Slip, Richard Sackett received such a grant, recorded in ibid., B. 1.

20 Notwithstanding these records, the Fly blockhouse is evidently here referred to.

Mar. 20 Mar. clockmaker, on his completion of the public clock which he has "fixed in the City Hall of this City for the use of this Corporation," the gift of Stephen de Lancey (see Feb. 23, 1716).—M. C. C., III: 158. See also Journal of the City Chamberlain, II: 102, 117. Appropriations for the afterwards mentioned public clock are in 1718. Mention of the clock does not appear in the city records after June 29, 1714.—M. C. C., IV: 211.

27 In a petition by the common council to the assembly, to have the dock cleaned and the course of the common sewer altered, it is stated that it is desired also that the wharf enclosing the dock be repaired, "that the Dock may be capable to shelter Vessels from Danger of the Ice, who are obliged in the Winter to be carried to Kipp's Bay and Turtle Bay."—Assemb. Jour., I: 391. See May 14.

A Memorial of Robert Jenney, master of the grammar school, is referred by the council to the house, with the recommendation that "a sufficient Fund may be raised, for building a School-House and Dwelling House for the Master, and to allow him a Salary of Seventy Pounds per Annum, for teaching 35 Boys."—Assemb. Jour., I: 395.

May 14 Agreeable to the resolution of the common council of March 20 (M. C. C., III: 173), the provincial legislature passes an act to enable the city to raise £500 "for Altering the Course of the Common Sewer at the end of the Broad-Street, and for Cleansing and Scouring the Dock of this City." The act recites the fact that "Violent suddain Rains and the great confluence of water from several Streets at the northern part of this Street, in the Broad-street, and from thence unto the Dock, brings such Large Quantities of Dirt, Sand, Rubbish, Ouse and Mudd, which Settes and Lodges itself in the Basin of the said Dock," that there is an unsupportable expense for "Cleansing and Scouring of the Same." The plan now is to prevent this by "Extending or Altering the Course and passage of the said Common Sewer, to Convey the Same Clear of the said Dock into the East River."—Cal. Laws N. Y., I: 907. For the action of the city on this law, see June 18, 1717.

The common council permits Gideon Kerstine, a rope-maker, to Exercise his Trade in the Street Called Fairstreet [Fulton St.], lying between Spring Garden and the house and ground of Mr. Cire and Running away Easterly he taking Care that no persons horses carts &c be Obstructed in passing and Repassing the said Street &c.—M. C. C., III: 141. Spring Garden stood between Ann and Fulton Sts. on the east side of Broadway (see Landmark Map Rev. Col. London, 1761). The said Circle was proprietor of a tavern on Sullivan St.—See Oct. 14, 1713.

The king's birthday is celebrated: "the Gartison jiic and all the Militia of this City were under Arms, the Artillery of the Fort, and from all the Shipping in the Harbour were fired, and at Night there was a fine Fire before the House of Majestie's Health, the Prince, Royal Family, Prince Frederick, and a great many other Loyal Healths were toasted; after which his Excellency Brigadier Hunter our Governour had a Ball, at Fort George where he made a very Noble Entertainment for the Ladies and Gentlemen there; all the City was finely Illuminated, and the Night Ended with all the Demonstrations of Joy Imaginable."—N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, June 3-10, 1717. The date of his event is erroneously given in the description of the Burgis View (Pl. 25-b), I: 241, as June 10.

Gov. Hunter sets out for Albany, "to Renew the Covenant Chain with the Six Nations of Indians, &c."—N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, June 5-10, 1717. Just before leaving, a part of the crew, which had been impressed into the pirate's service, rebelled without success, "five or six being dangerously wounded, and his thought dyed within a few Days of their Wounds."—Ibid., June 10, 1717. The capture of the ship was reported by vessel plundered by this pirate ship, but it was stated "none dyed of their wounds" in the scuffle at Sandy Hook.—Ibid, June 17-24, 1717.

For the account of the king's birthday referred to in description of the Burgis View, I: 241, see May 18.
The following New York advertisement is published in Boston:

June 1664-1763

"This is to give Notice to all Persons that have Occasion for a Bell or Bells in Churches or Meeting-houses, that in New-York they may be supplied with New Bells, or if they have an Old Bell broke they may have the same Cast at a reasonable Price. The Bells are good for Twelve Months, that if it Crack or Break it shall be new Cast for nothing: And all new Bells shall be made of better Mettal than any that comes out of Europe for Churches or Meeting-houses. All Persons that have Occasion may apply themselves to Joseph Phillips of Southack Street, who is already agreed with some Persons, and is ready to do the same with any that are disposed."—Boston News-Letter, June 10-17,1717.

18 The common council passes a resolution "that the Common sewer at the End of the Broad Street be Carried through the Dock to the Outside thereof so that it may Empty it self into the River. That the Overseers Appointed for Making the said Common sewer, Cleaning the Dock and Repairing the Wharfs &c do with all Convenient Expedition purchase Materials, Imply Workmen and Labours for the Making of the said Common sewer Repairing of the Wharfs and Cleaning of the Dock, and that they Cause A Good and substantial Bridge to be made and Erected Over the said Common sewer from the Market house fronting the Dock to the Dock's Mouth and that they from time to time Consult and Advise with proper Artificers and Workmen for the better Effecting their Purpose and that there shall be an Entrance into the Dock on each side of the Common sewer."—M. C. C., III: 143. This action is in conformity with the act of the general assembly (May 14, 1717), authorizing the city to raise £500 by levying upon the real and personal property of all the freeholders and inhabitants, for which purpose, a resolution of the common council was passed on June 5, 1717.—Ibid., III: 144-45. Payments aggregating £500 were made Sept. 30, 1717, for work and materials.—Ibid., III: 149. The auditing committee, for examining the accounts of the treasurer of this fund, made its final report Jan. 3, 1719.—Ibid., III: 190-92.

"There is now Published, and to be Sold at Mrs Jeanne Ferry, Bookseller's Shop in King Street near the Boston Bridge, Capt. Cypram Soutthack's large and Correct Chart or Map of all the Sea Coast in the English America, on the Continent, viz. from Newfoundland, to Cape Florida, the like never yet Extant, of great Use to all, but especially Marines."—Boston News-Letter, June 17-24, 1717. This map is not listed in the catalogues of the British Museum, the Library of Congress, or the N. Y. Public Library. Later (c. 1715), William Herbert of London published a Southack map of the sea-coast from New York to the "I. Capt Briton," which contains accounts of two explorations made by Southack along the coast of America, one in 1689, and another in 1717.

24 Winson, Mem. Hist. of Boston, II: 112. The results of the explorations made in 1717 were probably used by Southack in a later and probably more detailed chart on which he was working in 1718 (see May 26, 1718).

"Upon application made to this Court [general session[s]] by Mr Patrick Macknight and Mr Gilbert Livingston it is Ordered that the house Situate in the East Ward of this City Commonly Called & known by the Name of Venosos's house be & is hereby Recorded a Publick Meeting house for the Congregation of Dissenting Protestants Called Presbyterian for the Publick Worship of Almighty God."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (M.S.), 334. A different meeting-place was recorded on May 3, 1721 (q.v.). A plot of the east part of this house was purchased in 1728 by Daniel Venosos, who lived on the waterfront between Old Slip and Wall St. in 1694.—M. C. C., I: 363-64. In 1717, he resided at the present No. 144 Pearl St., 83 ft. south of the corner of Wall St.—See recitals in Libert Deed, XXV: 366; also ibid., XXVI: 52, 74(New York)

17 John Farrierty's tavern continued to be the favourite resort of the city magnates is shown by a common council order for him to pay him £54 for "diverse Expenses at his house by this Corporation on several public days Ending the first day of August last."—M. C. C., III: 146. See also March 9 and June 21, 1716; and Oct. 20, 1717.

Governer Belcher writes to Col. Spotsword of Virginia, by advice of the council, declining to attend the meeting of governors at Philadelphia proposed by Spotsword.—Cal. Coun. Min., 265.

26 James Dixon is appointed by royal order and is sworn in as collector and receiver-general of the revenues and collector of customs, in place of Thomas Byerley, removed.—Cal. Coun. Min., 265. See Nov. 30, 1717.

Elizabeth Jourdain petitions the general assembly, which is considering from day to day a project of her husband for the purpose, that her accounts may be settled as "amongst the publick Debts of the Government." One of these is "for lodging Soldiers, and entertaining the Gentlemen of her Majesty's Council at her House, on the Affair of the Expedition against Canada" (the date of which, whether now buildling or stopped, is not given) — Assem. Jour., I: 402. The law, passed Dec. 23 (q.v.), to pay the debts of the province, does not provide for this payment.

Elizabeth Jourdain, the tavern-keeper, first appeared in the city records when she received letters of administration, April 13, 1701, on the death of her husband, a seaman on the Ship "Dolphin," which died at sea.—Abstracts of Wills, I: 368, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1892). On Sept, 16, 1706, she sued one Charles Wolly in the mayor's court for £512:19 in payment for rum and sugar supplied to him as a shipwreck.

On Oct. 28, 1727, she applied to the assembly to be relieved from the penalties of four recognizances, entered into by her for payment of the excise, alleging her "extreme Poverty." The petition was denied, and the commissioners were reprimanded for failure to collect the excise.—Assem. Jour., I: 565-66. Her tavern was still in existence on March 31, 1716 (q.v.), but its location is not now known.

The common council orders that the representatives of the city and county in the assembly "use their utmost endeavours to procure the passing of a Bill in the Said Assembly for Regulating the Ferry between the City of New York and the Island Nassau.—M. C. C., III: 150. It seems surprising that the assembly should be requested to pass such a bill when the ferry privilege rested solely with the corporation. Perhaps it was desired that anyone who infringed on the privilege should realize that he was violating provincial, as well as municipal, authority.—See Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. at an 18th Century, 434. Such a bill was passed on Nov. 2 (q.v.); and the ferry was offered for lease accordingly, on terms prescribed by the common council on Dec. 24, 1717 (q.v.).

Gov. Spotsword of Virginia and Gov. Keith of Pennsylvania, accompanied by several gentlemen, arrive in New York. The garrison and militia, under arms, having formed as a guard on both sides of the street, "from their Landing to the Fort."—His Excellency the Governor & most of the Gentlemen of the Town received them on their Landing at the Water-side and conducted them to the Fort.—From N. Y. Letter in Boston News-Letter, Oct. 7-14, 1717.

Henry Wildman, coroner of the city, memorializes the assembly for "Satisfaction, for making nine Inquisitions on the Bodies of Persons murdered, in the horrid Conspiracy and Insurreetion of the Negroes in 1712."—See April 7, 1712.—Assem. Jour., I: 403.

The common council is of the opinion "that there is an Absolute Necessity of A Convenient Magazine or powder house within this City," and it is ordered that "Advertisements be put up and proposals to build it."—M. C. C., III: 152. Nothing further on the subject appears of record until June 1, 1714 (q.v.).

Since the time of the Dongan Charter (see April 27, 1686), the whole subject of ferries was controlled by the common council, including the adjuration of ferriage (cf. Rec. N. Am., V: 83-84). The Harlem ferry had been so controlled since 1666 (q.v.). The legislature passes "An Act for Regulating the Ferry between the City of New York and the Island Nassau," which establishes a certain "Catalogue" of ferry rates. This has become necessary because the ferry-man has made himself "sole Judge" of 1717 the proper charges for carrying goods not listed in the official list of charges established by the common council (see Feb. 2, 1699), and has exacted "Extraordinary Prices." Penalties are prescribed for charging more than the law allows. The rates designated in this act are principally reckoned in multiples of a grain's weight of plate; thus, every person transported one way across East River is required to pay $14 grains' weight of plate, and double that sum after sunset (unless the ferry-man neglects or refuses to transport the person gratis, or for a horse, for "Grain Weight of Plate" is exacted; and other amounts for a calf, a hog, a sheep or lamb, a barrel of rum or sugar or molasses, a dead horse, an empty barrel, an ich board, a wagon, etc., in numerous variety. For every 100 eggs, four eggs are taken for carriage.

The act also provides that the ferry-man shall "be Obliged to Come and go with the Ferry-Boats, and from such places in the City of New York, between the Great Dock and Beeckman's Slaughter-house, and by such Tours as are appointed and prescribed in him the former Regulations, for Encouraging the Markets of the said City (Wind and weather permitting)." New York City's monopoly is reasserted, it being permitted by this act to "Establish and keep one or more ferries between New York and the Island Nassau." The ferry-man "Established in the City of New York" shall receive into his ferry-boats on Nassau Island (when there) "all sorts of Goods and Passengers (horses and cattle only excepted)" for a horse, for "Grain Weight of Plate" is exacted; and other amounts for a calf, a hog, a sheep or lamb, a barrel of rum or sugar or molasses, a dead horse, an empty barrel, an ich board, a wagon, etc., in numerous variety. For every 100 eggs, four eggs are taken for carriage.

The act further provides that: "Whereas the place which has been for many Years last Part Assigned and Made Use of for the Secretaries Office of this Colony, In Which the Publick Records Original Wills, and other papers and Writing of Great Concern and Consequence both to his Majesty and his Subjects of this Colony, is So Small and otherwise So Inconvenient, that his Excellency the Governor has been pleased to Appropriate the Building over the Fort Cate for that Service, Where in the Records and other papers Mentioned with be better Preserved, and the Office more Conveniently kept." George Clarke, the secretary of the province, is to be paid in bills of credit and is to apply them for materials and labour in fitting up the building. Cf. description of Burgis View, 1: 244.

The bills are to be printed by Bradford. He is to be paid for this service in such bills, and also for "Cutting & Engraving the Stamp." (see June 12, 1691).--N. T. Col. Laws, 1: 958-91.

The common council conceives the idea of leasing the Long Island ferry in two parts and conditions are drawn up accordingly. The ferry-man on one side, for bringing Several Boat Loads of Timber for Carriages, and Several Boat Loads of Sods, and for ferrying horses from Amboy to New York; to John Crook (to discharge his account of $1241.14.4), for work done at the fort from 1701 to 1704; to Jacobus Bayard ($269), for "Several Casks of Beer deliver'd by his father . . . for the Dec. use of his Majesties Garrison at New York, by Order of Jacob Leisler, Esq."

To Anthony Lipsenard ($5), for "fishing three Sloop Load of Stockades for his Majesties flote at New York," to Justice Bosch ($451.15), for "hire of his Sloop, which assisted the unloading of Capt. Jones's Ship, which was taken in the Colony Service," in 1705, "in an Expedition a't some French Privateers then beating that Coast;" to Robert Thomas, for discharging a warrant, drawn by Cournoy, May 8, 1704 (for $79), payable to Elizabeth Stokys, "for nursing Sick Soldiers;" to Richard Chapman ($665), for carpenter's work done in the fort; to Jonathan Whitehead, "for Victualing the Soldiers that March'd from the East End of Long Island, to go to Albany and Coll. Dongans Expedition" in 1688; to Johannes Jane, Isaac Driemer, and Gerrit Viele, for bringing 2,200 pounds of powder from Philadelphia to the fort in the time of "the late happy Revolution" (the Leisler rebellion); to Johannes Johnse, "for his Expences in Proclaiming King William & Queen Mary of Blessed Memory;" to Samuel Provost (for the account of Capt. Partridge), "for his Majesties George his Picture;" to repay Gov. Hunter, 2,255 ounces, 7 pennyweight of plate, for his extraordinary disbursements; to repay various members of the council for their services and expenses; to the corporation of the city of New York, 300 ounces of plate, for the Repair of the Watch; to John Hartman ($464), for carpenter's work in the fort from 1704 to 1706.

Certain soldiers and officers (their widows or children) are to be paid for services in the fort under Leisler in 1689-90, among whom is Hartman Weselle, who was surgeon of the fort. Certain English officers, "tents taken here at the interest and expense of this Colony," are to be paid a total of 600 ounces of plate. The owners of the frigate "Hooon," which was taken from them by Gov. Slaughter for the use of the government, are to be compensated for the loss of their shares. Certain persons are to be paid for carrying Saltpetre, Sand, Sods, etc., for his Majesties flott at New York in 1703-5. Other persons are to be paid for "munday Arms left in his Maties flott at New York, And taken from Some of the Inhabitants of this City, and Carried to the said flott," in 1691, "for the Service of their Maties King William & Queen Mary, of Glorious Memory." Still other inhabitants are to be reimbursed for provisions, ammunition, and other war materials, delivered for the use of the fort in 1689-90, and for services performed at that time during "the late happy Revolution." Among these, Abraham Governor is to be paid $500 for his services as clerk in the fort, and $6608 for the services of his predecessor, Jacob Millburn, deceased, as a commissioner for the expedition against Canada, and as a major of the forces, in those years. The owners of the 19 negro slaves executed for the conspiracy of 1712 are to be paid "the Satisfaction Intended" by the "Act for preventing the Conspiracy of Slaves." The treasurer is to pay to James Dixon, the collector and receiver general of credit plate, with or for his Majesties flott at New York, to be applied "for the Repairing his Majesties Custom house in the City of New York."
Other £22,607, see public and XXVIII: of New or given Ferry March 25, 1718, and quarterly payments of rent. The lessees were required to give bond and to impose no other rates than those established by act of assembly (Col. Laws N. Y., II: 925–7.—M. C. G., III: 157–62.

As was recorded on Jan. 15, 1718, a former ferry-man, James Harding, having offered the mayor £55 per annum "for that part of ye ferry houses and Apparances Established on Nassau Island," and £85 per annum "for that part of the Said Ferry to be Established on New York Side," with suitable security, no one offering to pay more, and Gov. Hunter having written a letter expressing preference for Harding, the common council leased these two parts to him.—Ibid., III: 165.

William Sharpes was paid on April 16, 1718, for having advertisements printed, and for drawing and engraving the leases for the ferry; and, at the same time, Mrs. Catherine Post was paid £3539, for the expenses incurred "at her house," when the leases were signed (evidently for use of her rooms, and probably for refreshments).—Ibid., III: 170.

For a representation of the ferry on Long Island at this period, see the Burgis View, Pl. 25, Vol. I; and, for its early history, see description, I: 245. The ferry to Brooklyn from Burge's Path, also established under this ordinance, became known as Old Slip Ferry.—Ibid., III: 945.

An ordinance is passed by the common council for preserving the bridge and common sewer in the dock (see May 20, 1702 and March 26, 1759). John Nicols, Patrick Macknight, Gilbert Livingston, and Thomas Smith,—for £50.—Liber Dredgs, XXVIII: 475–75. A copy of a partition and deed map, between De Peyster and Bayard, for land near Wall and Nassau Sts., dated Jan. 5, 1718, is filed in the borough of topography, department of public works, Manhattan, as map No. 101. On July 1, 1729, Smith and Livingston made a new deed of the same plot to the Rev. James Anderson and three other trustees. It has been stated by some historians that the property was sold to the Presbyterian Church by Gabriel Thompson, but Thompson, while he may have been a lessee of the property, did not own it.—Ibid. see also Proceed., N. Y., (MS.). Title to this land was examined by the common council nearly 100 years later. See Nov. 14, 1808. Here the First Presbyterian Church was erected in 1719.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 951. See April 16, and July 18. For the first recorded meeting-place of Presbyterians in New York, see Aug. 7, 1717.

Catharine Post, the innkeeper, is allowed £6 by the assembly
"for the use of her house for the sitting of Committees."—Assem.
1720. Jour. I. 449. It was a regular custom, apparently, even at times when repairs were not in progress at the city hall, for committees to meet at some tavern, and this one became a favourite at this time. On Nov. 24, 1722, the city paid Catharine Post £3,167 12s. for expenses of her examination, forBot a Riant," and for the meeting of an assembly committee "About passing A Law for the Ferry."—M. C. The general assembly passes "An Act to Enable Garret Van Horne and Cornelius Van Horne Son of Said Garret Van Horne to Sell and Dispose of a Certain House and Ground . . . . This act recites that the Van Hornes have been appointed agents, by children of the late Gabriel Thomson, innkeeper, to sell Thomson's real estate to pay his debts. The property referred to is described as "froston Southerly, to Wall Street, Easterly to Thien Horns Street, Westerly to Land belonging to Mr. Samuel Bayard and Northerly to Land Belonging to Col. Abraham De Peyster."—Col. Laws N. Y. II. 15. See Oct. 13, 1701.

The legislature passes "An Act to Lay a Duty of Two pounds on every hundred pounds Value Prime Cost of all European Goods Imported into this Colony."—Col. Laws N. Y. III. 33. Writing to the lords of trade on Nov. 26, Burnet said: "The Duty their laid of 2 per cent on European goods was the main support of Government for 18 years which appears by the following Acts which are not to be found in the New Book of New York Laws because they are now expunged but will be found in Rolls lying in the Office." Here he refers to the law, first passed in 1691 (see ibid., I. 248), "for establishing a Revenue for the defraying the public charges of the Province where this duty of 2 Per Cent on all merchandise imported (except Rum & wines before taxed in the same Act) is laid for two years." This law was continued by acts of 1662, 1663, 1699, 1702; it expired in 1799. Burnet adds: "I know of no reason why this Act has not been continued since that my Lord Clarendon [Cornbury] made so ill a use of the publick money by misapplying it & squandering it away that the Assembly would not replace this Act. I do not believe a Governor & Council would indeed would not give any Revenue for four years after Brigadier Hunter arrived & then but a scanty one. Whereas now his prudent and just administration has brought the Assembly which he left into a better temper, and they are come into this to support the Government in all its parts for five years to come and because this law relates to the trade of great Britain it has a clause in it declaring its no force till confirmed by His Majesty, so that I hope no objection will lie against it, being an easy trifling duty on the importer and of the greatest Service to the Province."—N. Y. Col. Decs., V. 85. The act was repealed by the king on April 30, 1744.—Col. Laws N. Y. II. 524.

By an act of the legislature, all persons are forbidden to sell to a French subject the following articles, designated as Indian goods: "any of the Cloaths knowne by the Name of Stroud waters, Duf- fales or Trucking Cloth, Indian blankets, Indian Coates, half-tiches, Gunnes Kettles, Shoksins, Shirts, Flots Steddles, all blades, Swords, pistols, Powder, Lead or any other Goods . . . knowne by the Name of Indian Goods." Such a provision was necessary because the Canadian French, by means of goods purchased from this province and then sold to the Indians, have almost "wholly En- gross'd" the Indian trade, and have likewise largely "withdrawn the Affections of the five Nations of Indians from the Inhabitants of this Province and rendred them Wavering in their faith and Allegiance to his Majesty."—Col. Laws N. Y. II. 8-9.

Gov. Burnet asks the lords of trade to dismiss Peter Schuyler, president of the council, and Adolphus Phillips, another councilman, who advised Schuyler in making grants of land with the great scal affixed, contrary to the king's instructions. He recommends that Cadwallader Colden and James Alexander be appointed in their places.—N. Y. Col. Decs., V. 575-77. This is approved.—Ibid., V. 647. See March 9, 1721.

A new act is passed "for Settling the Militia of this Province and the making of it useful for the Security and Defence thereof and for Repealing all former Acts Relating to the same." For the last Militia Act, see Nov. 27, 1702. The same provisions, which were in the old law are found in this, better defined by paraphrasing. There are fuller provisions for recovering and disposing of fines and forfeitures imposed for infractions of the military regulations. Where the offender has no goods, punishment by imprisonment is imposed. When a "Commission Officer" is legally superseded, he shall not thereafter be obliged to do duty as a private soldier, "unless he be Cashiered by order of a Court Marshal for Cowardice or some other Notorious Offence." To be thus free he is required to serve in commission for at least 15 years.—Col. Laws N. Y., II: 84-92. Burnet explained, in a letter to the lords of trade, Oct. 16, that this act was "only intended and other acts among the Towns of the Town of New York who used to be the most remiss of the whole Province and now by encreasing the fine for non appearance at the Masters have immediately upon this Act appeared in Arms near double the number as formerly."—A. A lottery case demands the attention of the mayor's court. John Jourdain sought to dispose of certain merchandise "by way of subscription," selling tickets to subscribers at six shillings each and advertising the same in the Evening Post and other newspapers for eight shillings to fifteen pounds. Frederick Williams and John Blake both brought suit; the latter charged that he bought three tickets, drew a £6 prize, but received only a periwigg worth five shillings. Williams said he took out 24 tickets and won seven prizes, one of £14 and six of eight shillings each, and received goods worth only £6. The defence offered was that Jourdain was "within the age of one and twenty." The court awarded equitable damages to both subscribers.—M. C. M. (MS.), Aug. 8 and 15, 1721; Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 21. See July 27.

felling on the Lord's Day, the 14th of January last, the River being very high—see Jan. 8, 1722. The death was most unexpectedly upon the Ice, and the Ice withdrawing from both sides, they could not get to either shore, and had not the People been extraordinarily diligent with their Boats to save them, many or most of them, must of necessity have been lost, and perished one is said to be from this day, and another who were on board the boat when they sustained, we know not yet. However it may be a fair warning to them and all others so prophanely to abuse the Lord's Day, in turning it into a Day of Sport and Diversion as these did."—Boston News-Letter, Feb. 5—12, 1722.

"It is excessive cold, and the River full of Ice from the Narrows to New-York. Yesterday a great many People went upon the Ice from New-York to the Ferry on Long Island."—From New York news in Ar. Merc. (of Wall Street), 1722. Nicholas Eyres, a brewer and Baptist teacher (see Sept. 29, 1721), petitions Gov. Burnet for a permit "to Execute the ministerial function of a minister within this City to a Baptist congregation," and he asks the protection of the king's "gracious indulgence extended towards the protestants dissenting from the established church," etc. His petition shows that his hired house was registered as an Anabaptist meeting-house on the first Tuesday in February, 1715 (i. e., 1716—see Feb. 7, 1716); that he hired a house of Rip van Dam on Jan. 1, 1720 (i. e., 1721) to be a public meeting-house of the Baptists, and that he was their preacher. The permit was granted on Jan. 23, 1722.—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (4th ed.), III: 290—91.

Mayor Walter informs the common council that on Jan. 8 a petition was presented to Gov. Burnet and council by "Garrett Vanhorne, Thomas Clarke, John Read, Thomas Bayoux, Henry Cuyler, Rip Van Dam Just and Stephen Richardson," in behalf of themselves and others, "praying his Majesty's Letters Patts for all the Land that may be Gained out of the East River from the Corner of Mt Rip Van Dam house at the lower End of Maiden lane to the Corner of Thomas Clarke and Extends to the Salt River two hundred foot from Liberty to Market Stairs &c: And to Receive the Profits and Wharfage thereof." This petition, the mayor says, was referred to a committee of the council by the governor's order. The common council considers "the great prejudice the Granting thereof may be to the Publick in General and this Corporation in particular," and they order that a petition to the governor be prepared asking for a grant "of all the Land that may be Gained out of the River, Round this Island Manhattan."—M. C. G., III: 271—72.

On Feb. 2, 1722, the mayor informed the common council that he had ordered the following grants of land in opposition to the proposed patent, and that the governor had read it in council and referred to a committee to consider and report upon it first recites the grant to the city, by the Dongan Charter of 1686, of "the whole island Mannahattans and all the Ground round the Same to low water mark;" that this ground, so far as built upon, has been "So Order'd & Disposed of that the Inhabitants frozing to high water had the Offer of the Ground before them to low water Mark upon easy and Moderate terms to the great Advancement of their Interest;" that some of these grantees "have taken Confirmations from the Crown" for their grants; that others, "particularly those between Berg Hill and Slip and Captain Theohalds, finding the Streets reserved by the Corporation towards the Wharf to be too Narrow for Common & publick use and for the passing and repassing of Carts and Carriages," obtained a grant for extending their wharves 25 feet and 150 feet farther into the East River, with the privilege of erecting cranes and charging crangae and wharfage; and that now the grantees of the best parts of the city, "between the Corner of the Slip by the End of Wall Street and the Slip at the End of Maiden Lane," are making petition for the privilege of "taking in and filling up of two hundred foot Out of the East river before their wharves & promising to make a Wharf of forty foot broad before that ground for a Street. Providing they may have a grant of the free Simple thereof and to build and Erect theoreon Cranes & Other Conveniences for loading & unloading of goods & Merchandizes Provided they be thereby Entitled to receive a Dockage and Wharfage." The petition expresses alarm at this last proposed development, alleging that, if granted, it would set up a right independent of the city, which has by charter "the whole and sole power of regulating and laying out of Streets alley's lanes Wharfs and Docks" that it would "Monopologie to a few the whole Conveniency of loading and unloading," and the rest of the merchants and inhabitants of the city would depend upon the caprice of those who now seek the exclusive grant; that the water front would lack uniformity, and the grantees would claim a privilege of being exempted from the city's jurisdiction and, as "Menchefs of this kind are much hidden," they will make remonstrances afterwarde of the petition, if the petition of the proposed grant be rejected. The common council appoints a committee to confer with the committee of the governor's council, in opposition to the

Y. now lying under water from the present wharves or low-water mark between the corner of the slip at 82 East River near Clark's corner and the S.E. most corner of the lot of Rip Van Dam, Jr., which joins to the slip that leads from Maiden Lane," which is more particularly described in the patent, — there being 16 feet along the wharves reserved for a common highway or street (with 29 feet additional, making 45 feet), to be called Burnet Street. — From Book of Patents, IX: 13, in secret of state's office. See also Cal. 7 Payment of £156 is made for 18 leather chairs for the common council room. — M. C. C., III: 273. See also April 6, 1711; Dec. 22, 1722. Fragmentary records of this kind taken together might enable us to-day to picture fairly accurately the interior of the city's old common council chamber in the city hall on Wall St. Complete and detailed description of the room in the present city hall about 100 years later, and at the present time. Towards Queen St., the grant is only 53 feet wide, although the grantee agrees to make and keep a public slip 24 feet wide, and to build a wharf on the west side of the slip facing the river of 30 feet width. The latter was the modern Water Street. The slip was at the river where subsequently Fair (Fulton) Street was cut through. It is well shown on Pl. 27, Vol. I. The slip was partly filled in 1722 (M. C. C., VII: 341–43, 353), and subsequently was entirely filled and paved. It was part of the modern Fulton Street. Beeckman petitioned for the part west of 153 East 17th (p. v); the slip was not built until now (III: 988 being in error). — May

The Rev. William Vesey, writing to Mr. Humphreys, secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, in behalf of the vestry of Trinity Church, asks that, on account of the death of Elias Nau, "the late Catechist of this City" (see Aug. 4, 1704), the society appoint a "presbytery of the Church of England to officiate in his stead," and give him directions to assist "our Minister" (Mr. Vesey himself), "who, in his declining age, is not so able as formerly to perform all the duties of his calling, which daily increase on his hands." (Mr. Vesey continued rector 24 years longer, until his death in 1746.) His stated reasons for this request are: "We have lately been obliged, by voluntary subscriptions, to enlarge our Church, but the subscriptions being insufficient, we have been under the necessity of taking up money at Interest to complete the same, which, by a subsequent law, cost more than £1200, and have no prospect of being discharged of the debts thereby contracted in some years; and, therefore are not in a condition of allowing a complete maintenance to an Assistant, tho' one is absolutely necessary." He also states that there is a "vast increase of children, and Indians, and Negro servants, who cannot, without such assistance, be so well instructed in the principles of Christianity."—Berrian, Trin. Church (1847), 38.

A committee appointed by the common council to lay out the Long Island ferry, on Jan. 10, 1723, and to meet for the purpose at the house of Obadiah Hunt.—M. C. C., III: 397. See also Jan. 14, 1729.

On Feb. 18, 1744, the broadcloth was paid for at 20 shillings per yard.—Ibid., III: 338. See Jan. 22.

The population of New York City (and County) is 7,428; of the province, 40,564.—Doc. Hist. N. T., (40 ed.), I: 471. It appears by the Chalmers MSS., relating to the city (in N. Y. Pub. Library), that the population of the city this year was 7,428, and that of the whole province, the original record being in the public record office, London. For the names of the principal inhabitants, in this year, see N. Y. Genal. and Brig. Rec., XLIX: 369 (Oct, 1918).

About this time, Anthony Rogers erected his handsome residence on the west half of the Kalkboock, the 40-acre tract of land originally granted in 1646 by Gov. Kieft to Jan Damen. The site of the house was at the present 232-236 Church St. "He surrounded his habitation with elegant shrubbery in the geometrical style of rural gardening of those days. Long walls bordered with box-wood, and shaded with holly, as well as box, were carried on in various directions in the parterre, fronting the house. The favorite orchard extended along the southerly side of the mansion, while the pasture lands and cultivated fields extended toward the north."—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 923; Man. Com. Coun. The Long Island ferry is again leased in two parts (see Dec. 24, 1717) "by publick Otrytry," James Harding, who had secured both leases five years earlier, receives now the Manhattan privilege only, the ferry on the Brooklyn side being awarded to John Deane.—M. Failing to lease it on that day, a committee was appointed to do so.—Ibid., III: 319. On May 15, 1724, suit was begun by the city against Winslow for breach of his covenants.—Ibid., III: 343. Winslow, having been imprisoned for the debt, was released on June 19, 1724, on giving bond to pay his arrears of rent in one year, and the costs of the prosecution immediately.—Ibid., III: 345. This house, with its gardens, was subsequently conducted as a pleasure resort, under the name of "Ranelagh" or the "Rangegh Gardene." See June 5, 1765.

It is ordered that "all the inhabitants & Freeholders of the West side of the Broadway" be given notice of the petition, that they may show cause, if they so desire. On May 13, 1723, the resolution should not be granted.—M. C. C., III: 310-11. On June 22, the time for filing protests was extended by the city to Sept. 1.—Ibid., III: 319. See also March 29, 1701.

The event which this commemorated was the gratefulness of the city to Capt. Solgard, who pursued and engaged two pirate sloops commanded by a notorious pirate, one of whose sloops he captured (see July 29). Twenty-six of the pirates so taken had been lately executed in Rhode Island.— M. C. C., III: 321-22. The presentation of the freedom was made on Aug. 18th, 1725. Ibid. 324-14. Benjamin Franklin, a boy of 17, arrives by sloop from Boston, on his first visit to New York. As stated in his autobiography, addressed to his son in 1771, he was "without the least recommendation to, or knowledge of, any person in the place, and with very little money." He offered his services to "old Mr. William Bradford," who, however, could not give him professional employ. V: 17-24, 25.

"My son at Philadelphia has lately lost his principal hand, Aquila Rose, by death; if you go thither, I believe he may employ you." When Franklin arrived at Andrew Bradford's shop in Philadelphia, he found the father, William Bradford, there before him. Andrew Bradford referred Franklin to another printer, Keimer, who engaged him. There is a School for news in New-York," by John W. Francis, in Mem. Com. Coun. (1850), 417. See also Apr. 21, 1724.

A payment of £1233:11:3 is made by the common council to Cornelius de Peyster, the city treasurer, to reimburse him for money advanced for repairing the great dock, which was damaged by the storm of July 20.—M. C. C., III: 350. A year later, £11616 was paid to him on the same account.—Ibid., III: 358. The rebuilding of the dock was completed before July 14, 1724.—Ibid., III: 349.

The total number of white persons is 5886, of whom 1460 are men, 1726 women, and 2700 children. The total number of "Negros and other Slaves" is 1362, of whom 408 are men, 476 women, and 478 children. The total number of inhabitants of the province is 40646.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V: 701. Burnet sends the report to Lord Carteret on Dec. 16, and explains that the census has been prepared by the sheriffs of the several counties, according to the returns made by them by the constables of the several townships, near this province."—N. The will of John Haberdinck (Harpenden), dated April 23, 1723, is proved. He bequeathed to the Dutch Church his interest in the "Shoemakers' Field," which he describes as "on the north east side of Maiden Lane or Path, which leads into a certain street called Queen street, which said tract containeth by estimation about 16 acres, and by Agreement of all the proprietors some years past was surveyed and laid out into 164 lots, with convenient streets and lanes, as may appear by a certain instrument and chart, bearing date September 14, 1699." The said John Haberdinck's share being 35 lots." He stipulated that the income from this property was to be used only to pay the salaries and maintenance of the minister or ministers of the church. From Abstracts of Wills, II: 283 in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1895). At first it would hardly pay one minister; by 1861, it paid the salaries of four and left a surplus of $7000 a year.—Bartels, Rec. Rec., 332-335. For Shoemakers' Field, see Pl. 24, Vol. I; also Landmark Map. Ref. Key, III: 947.

The Committee Appointed to carry on the Enlargement of the Church having laid before this Board several drafts or plans for Erecting and Ordering the Situation of the pews to be Erected in the South and East Half of the Said Church, the fault of these of drafts or plans it is [illegible].—Trin. Min. (MS.).

An estimate is made by Daniel Ebbets, mason, and John Bell, carpenter, of the expense of the repairs needed in the chapel, the old house, and the officers' and soldiers' barracks in the fort.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 435. See further, May 15.

A committee is appointed in the common council "to cause the Land belonging to this Corporation lying on the West Side of the White House near the Great Dock to be Surveyed and laid out in Convenient Lots in Order to Erect Buildings thereon; and the same may be Lett to flame on A Ground Rent for such Term of Years as Shall be Agreed on by this Court."—M. C. C., III: 341. On May 13, the committee reported they had "Caused A Draft to be made of ten Lots, of the Part thereon Next the Street fronting the Custom House;" and it was ordered that "the said Ten Lots of Land be Lett to farm by Publick [sic] to the Highest bidder," on Tuesday, June 16, "at the House of Mr. Obadiah Hunt [the tavern-keeper] Next to the Custom House," at an annual ground-rent for 41 years, and that the proposed sale be advertised.—Ibid., III: 343. On June 15, the day before the proposed sale, certain residents of the South Ward entered a petition with Gov. Burnet against leasing part of this ground. They were Jacob Leisler, Stephen Richards, Obad. Hunt, Benj. Wyncoop, Robt. Cookes, Thos. Roberts, Paul Richards, and Isaac de Peyster, who, being inhabitants of that part of the South Ward "near the southeast bastion of the fort," which fronts the place where the dock and one of the market houses were formerly situate, opposed "leasing the ground on which the latter stood."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 455. This petition, "praying A Stop be put to the Letting to flame the ten Lots of Land on the West House," was also presented to the common council with an order from the governor (probably directing them to consider it). That body approved an answer that had been prepared and ordered that it be engrossed for presentation to the governor.—M. C. C., III: 345. 346-47. This answer, entered in the Minutes on July 14, stated that the apparent reason for the petition of the residents of the South Ward lay in the fears which they expressed "Concerning the south East Bastion of his Majesties Fort being rendered Useless," the loss of the outlook they now enjoy there, and their interest "in that Ground where the Old Market House is. Once Stood and that Space where the Old Dock is filled up." These fears were answered by the common council in the statement that they did not foresee that any buildings which might hereafter be Erected thereon would have Obstructed the Guns or weakened that Bastion, which Ranges over those Lots because Buildings upon Leases are seldom of such or Costly Structure but that they may be Soon removed upon any great Emergency." The common council therefore sought to correct the oversight of not asking leave of the governor to erect buildings here, before advertising the lots for rent and, while maintaining their right to the soil in this locality, they now asked the governor's permission "to dispose of these Lots of Ground, as they may think fit," and they would bring them to the governor's mind, perhaps, as the governor might think convenient. The answer also called the governor's attention to the fact that the houses of some of the petitioners in this locality had been "design'd for Generations yet to Come;" and that the petitioners had personal reasons for desiring no change in their surrounding house.—Mr. Halsey, for example, who had recently made a garden "behind the Ruins of Whitehall."—Ibid., III: 348-50. This answer was presented to the governor on July 14.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 456. See Aug. 24, 1724. For the location of Whitehall and the other sites and buildings here referred to, see Landmark Map. Ref. Key, III: 952.

The end of April, Benjamin Franklin leaves Philadelphia by boat on a visit to Boston, and, returning, stops at New York (presumably early in May). In his autobiography (written in 1771) he states: "The then governor of New York, Burnet (son of Bishop Burnet), hearing from the captain that a young man, one of the passenger books, desired to see Mr. Halsey, was put on my guard not to see him. I waited upon him accordingly... The gov't. treated me with great civility, showed me his library, which was a very large one, and we had a good deal of conversation about books and authors. This was the second governor who had done me the honor to take notice of me. Mr. Halsey was on June 17th on his way to the vana..."—Works of Ben. Franklin (ed. by Bigelow), II: 71-74. See Oct., 1723.

The justices of the peace order that certain counterfeit bills of May various denominations, "produced to the court" by the mayor and others, be "burnt to ashes" in open court. This method was the usual way of disposing of such counterfeit money.—Min. Gen. Quarter Sessions of the Peace (1694-1731), 417, 413, 448, 453.

A Francis—Trm. recorded purchasing within south Lace York Apparel by MT 514.

Gov. Burnet, in a speech to the assembly, informs them of "the ruinous Condition of the Buildings of this Fort, (which is the only Strength of this Town and Harbour)," and advises making "an immediate and sufficient Provision to repair it."—*Assembly, Jour., 1: 500. One estimate of the repairs needed was made on March 23 (n. s.), another was reported to the assembly on May 19, amounting to £1,427,739 (ibid., 1: 501); and, again, on May 20, another estimate was ordered made by the committee with a different number of pamphlets and massons (ibid., 1: 502), and, on June 3, they reported an estimate of £343,755—*ibid., 1: 502. On June 4, the house resolved that a sum not exceeding £3,000 be granted to his Majesty, for repairing the ruinous Buildings of the fort. —*Ibid., 1: 502.

An act of the legislature embodying this was passed July 24 (n. s.). June 25 Burrow in the king's name, and signed by the provincial secretary, is entered in full in the Minutes. It is dated June 22, 1724.—*M. C., III: 326.

July 2 An old chest, still belonging (in 1702) to the Dutch Church, is believed to have been in use as early as 1724. The following action, recorded in the Minutes of the consistory July 2, 1724, probably refers to this very chest: "All Church papers which shall be deemed of importance shall be put in a roll in order and be placed in the Church Chest at the house of Do. Du Bois, the key of which shall remain with his agent, and to whom he shall give out his key, but by direction of the Consistory. And in the Chest there shall be a book, in which whoever takes anything out of the Chest shall record the fact. Likewise, when anything is deposited, that also shall be noted therein."—*Eccles. Rec., III: 2221. The "chest in which money was kept is referred to, in 1665, in Rec. N. Am., V: 253.

23 The common council passes a "Law Appointing Proper Places for Unloading of Hay." It provides that "no Hay be unloaded within this City but at Hudsons River near the house of Thomas Eld and to the Northward thereof, and at Berksman Slip at the Lower End of Queen Street and to the Eastward thereof and that no Carman within this City do presume to load any Hay into his Cart or Ride the same from any Other Place within this City on the South side of the Freshwater under the Penalty of three Shillings for each Offence."—*M. C., III: 552.

A new Militia Act presents again the provisions of the old laws (see May 6, 1691; Nov. 27, 1702; July 27, 1721), but better assembled, and revised by the introduction of several new features. Every three months, or oftener as occasion requires, "Each Regiment and Company of horse and unregimented Companies of the Several Counties are required to be mustered and exercised. Each soldier "belonging to the horse" is to appear provided with "a Good Servicable horse not Less than fourteen hands high Covered with a Good Saddle, Hostlers, housing Brestplate and Cropper a Case of good Pistells a Good Pouch, Light Musquet, Twelve Pounds or Silver Lance a Black Bag or Ribbon for the hair or peruke a Scarlett Coat Trimmed with Silver a pair of Large boots with Suitable Spurs and a Careline well fixed with a Good belt and buckled later militia acts read "bucket"]. Provided that so much hereof as relates to the Apprentice may be paid to the City and County of New York only." As before, each troop shall number ten men, "fit for the horse Service and of ability to Equip themselves for the horse service." The foot soldier is to be provided, as before, with "a Good well fixed Musquet or flieze a Good Sword belt and Cartridge box Six Cartridges of powder and Six Serviceable bullets." His uniform is not prescribed in this act. It being the experience of the colonels and other officers of both foot and horse in New York City "that the Severall Corporalls and Serjeants of said Regiment and Troop, who are often Considerable Tradesmen doe Lose much time and are too Long taken from their Shops or other Necessary care by Levying the fines and forfeitures by this Act Imposed," it is now enacted "that there shall be one Martiall in the City and County of New York appointed by warrant from the Commander in Chief or Captain General . . . who shall have full power to make such levies. He shall retain one-third of each "Distress" as his fee, not exceeding to shilling or two/shilling.

The provincial legislature passes an act to raise $6,650 by taxation, and to issue bills of credit to that value, to be expended for various purposes. One of these is to pay for the repair of the buildings in the fort, which, the act states, are "very much out of Repair and will Some of them fall down and become ruin if not timely prevented."—*Col. Laws N. T., III: 172-174. See, further, Sept. 17, 1725.

CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664-1703

1724. James Alexander (see Aug. 28, 1735) is paid £640 for Dec. “flower'd Damask, Shalloom Skane Silk Gold Lace and ferretting 8 by him sold & delivered for the use of this Corporation.”—M. C. C., III. 561.

1725. A book was printed in New York this year, in Low Dutch, bearing the joint imprint of William Bradford and J. Peter Zenger.
—See Evans’ Am. Bibliography, I: 3359; and Rutherford, John Peter Zenger His Press, His Trial, and a bibliography of Zenger in New York (1911). A copy of this scarce Bordertown press publication was sold with the De Puy library at Anderson’s, Jan. 31, 1920. The title reads: Klage Van Enige Leeden der Nederduytse Hervormde Kerh, Woonende op Raratsen, &c., in de Provincie van New-Jersey, in Noord-America, Onder de Koon van Groote-Brittanie. Over het Gedrag, Achter en Elders, van Dn. Thedorus Jacobus Fril-inghuiusen, Met syn Kerken-Raaden. Ten Antwoord Op hwee Han-dregrande Daag-Brieven, &c. The Rev. Theodorus Freelinghuyzen, pastor of the Dutch church at Raritan, N. J., was accused by some of his congregation of preaching Labadist doctrines or advocating principles akin to those of the early Quakers, resulting in four being excommunicated by their pastor. They published the Klage as their defense. Rev. Bernardus Freeman wrote from New York to the classis of Amsterdam, April 27, 1725, defending Freelinghuyzen, and sending a copy of this “Complaint-Book.”—See Ecles. Rec., III: 2187, 2444, 2539, 3217, 3520, 3534, 3535, etc. The controversy continued many years.

Jan. Felons and others who are prisoners in the “Common Gaol” having “several times lately Attempted to break the said Gaol and to make their Escape” two more “Watchmen or Bellmen” are added to the four already appointed. All the “Watch & Bellmen” of the city are required “to keep their Watch at the City Hall . . . and be diligent . . . that None of the Prisoners do break Gaol or make any Attempts thereto.”—M. C. C., III: 362-63. See Sept. 11. No other jail, outside of the fort and the city hall, had yet been built. See Oct. 16, 1690.

Apr. The council directs Mr. Wileman, formerly deputy secretary, to search for missing acts of assembly. He wrote on May 13, that he was unable to find them.—Col. Coun. Min., 298.

May A small-pox patient is landed from a ship from Madeira, and the council orders an investigation, and adopts quarantine measures.—Col. Coun. Min., 305-9. See also cases of June 16 and 21. —Ibid., 309.

Sept. The revenue of the city “being already Exhausted in Repairing 11 the . . . Prisons, the City Hall the Wharfs and Other Publick Structures,” the common council decides to petition the assembly for leave to bring in a bill to “Raise Money to Repair the said Prison, the City Hall and to make Necessary &c. . . . to keep the same in sufficient Repair and Annually to defray their Publick and Necessary Charge.”—M. C. C., III: 369. See Oct. 24, 1744. Such petition, adopted by the common council on Sept. 14, was based upon the difficulties which the high sheriffs experienced on account of “the Weakness and Insufficiency of the Common Gaol in this City,” and the consequent necessity of putting prisoners of all kinds (debtors, criminals, diseased, and both male and female) in the same apartment (or “bol”)—Ibid., III: 370-71. This petition being presented to the house on Sept. 16, leave was given to the city to bring in a bill “to enable the Corporation to raise a Sum sufficient for the building of a new Gaol, or enlarging the Old one,” and also to enable them to raise “such annual Sums, as may defray the extraordinary Charges of this City and County, as is usual in all other Parts of this Province.”—Assem. Jour., I: 517.

The common council deemed it “impracticable to Repair the Present Prison, &c. before next Spring,” and to make Necessary and to keep the same in sufficient Repair and Annually to defray their Publick and Necessary Charge.” They therefore resolved, on Sept. 23, “that A New Prison & Common Gaol be built within this City on some Convenient Piece of Land belonging to this Corporation;” that £600 will be sufficient “to build and Complete it,” and that a bill will be drawn up to this sum, stating that the money to be raised to defray the extraordinary charges of the city do not exceed £600. —M. C. C., III: 372. The bill with these provisions was introduced in the house on Oct. 6; but, after consideration in and out of committee, it does not appear to have been reported after Oct. 29.—Assem. Jour., I: 524, 526, 527. See, however, Oct. 9, 1727.

Governing in deference to the common council, they say that the province they have already made for “renewing the Decayed Buildings of the Fort” has been “frugally and Effectually Improved.” He urges them to pass a resolution to provide “what is still wanting to complete it.”—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 519. See Sept. 29. 15
1725. Gov. Burnet nominates Johannes Jansen to be mayor for the ensuing year.—M. C. C., III: 374. Jansen was installed on Oct. 20, 1725, and served one year. For a brief sketch of his life, see Am. Coun. Coun. (1832) 472.

It is reported from the “Committee of the whole House” that the managers of the repairs on the decayed buildings in the fort should be required to give an account of their expenses for this object and state what sum is needed to “complete the Buildings which are already brought to this Stage.” A resolution to this effect was passed accordingly.—Assem. Jour., I: 521. See Sept. 15. On Oct. 1, Alderman Kip, one of the managers, reported that out of £10,000 received from the treasurer, there still remained in his hands £9,183:14s. and Cornelius G. van Horne, another member, reported that, out of the £2,000 which he received, there remained £7,121:2s. —Ibid., I: 521-22. On Oct. 15, Capt. Van Horne reported the following estimate of expense to complete the buildings:

“For Masons Work and Materials (excepting the Marble and Tiles for the Hearths) £9,142:10
For Carpenter’s and Joiners Work, Materials and Liqueur 300:00
For painting the same, 120:00
Sum Total £9,514:40

—Ibid., I: 534. Mr. Le Huy, agent for the province at the court of Great Britain, writes from London to Gov. Burnet, informing him “of an Address presented to the King by the Government of Boston, to desire that New-York be required to send a Quota of Men and Money to their Assistance, in their War with the Eastern Indians.” This letter was submitted to the assembly of New York Province on April 6, 1726.—Assem. Jour., 531.

The governor, on Nov. 4, desired that the repairs on the fort (see Sept. 29) be completed without delay; but “the House being informed, that if (besides the Rooms already finished in the new Buildings) the Sashes are hung, and the two Rooms are finished, which are now almost completed, his Excellency is very indifferent whether any more Rooms are finished out of Hand; it is the Opinion of this House, that the Remaider ought to be deferred until next Spring, especially since the Days are now so short that the Workmen can do but little Work in them.” They resolve that, at their session next, they will make a suitable Sum for complicating and finishing the new buildings in his Majesty’s Fort George.”—Assem. Jour., I: 539. See April 6, and June 17, 1726.

“The House taking into Consideration, the Convenience and Accommodation which the Members of this House have every Session, as well in the Meeting of Committees, as otherwise, at the House of the Widow Post’s, and that the Trouble and Expence which is occasioned to her upon these Occasions, far exceeds her Gains,” she is exempted from paying the excise until Nov. 1 next.—Assem. Jour., I: 530. See Oct. 28, 1719. The same resolution was passed on, Oct. 9, 1725. 1726.

There remain in the keeping of Cornelius van Hornes, "one of the late Managers to buy Materials and employ Workmen for the Repairs of the Buildings in his Majesty's Fort George," 805 pounds of nails. He is permitted to buy these at the current rate of Sevenpence Half-penny a Pound. Also, "a pretty large Quantity of Boards are left," and the common council arranges for the sale of these.—Assemb. Jour., II: 543. See Sept. 29, 1725.

Trinity vestry writes to the secretary of the "Venerable Society" (for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts) explaining the need of a "Catechist" in New York: "... We humbly pray that he may be One in Orders and directed to Assist in our Church... Besides this will be an Act of Charity to us who are deeply Involved in debt enlarging our Church and at present having but small hopes of discharging it are unable of our Selves to raise a sufficient maintenance for one to assist our Rector in his declining age [The Rev. William Veseys continued his ministrations just 20 years longer] and to preach 20 times a year..."—Trin. Min. (M.S.).

The "Great Consistory" of the Dutch Church resolves: "That the ground of Mr. [David] Jameson should be purchased, for the purpose of erecting thereon a second Church edifice" for their congregation. The great consistory having retired, the consistory appoints a committee to buy the land, and "pay for it out of the Deaconess' Treasury." It was immediately bought for £755, payable in three years.—Eccles. Rec., IV: 2358. This was the site on the east side of Nassau Street, between Cedar and Liberty Sts. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 915.

It is ordered by the common council that "A Convenient Lodging House with a Chimney be made in the East End of the City Hall above Stairs Contiguous to the Great Goal for the use of the Gaoler to lodge in for the better and more safe Keeping of such Prisoners as are or may be committed to the said Gaol or Prison."—M. C. C., III: 391. See Sept. 11, 1725.

The wording of the oath administered to a Freeman, although established in 1649, was not uniformly used in the common council meetings until this date, when it appears as follows:—

"The Oath of a Freeman of the City of New York "Ye shall Swear that Ye shall be good and true to our sovereign Lord King George and to the Heirs of our said sovereign Lord the King, Govenor and Obledient shall ye be to the Mayor and Minis- ters of this City. After making this oath, the oaths previously recorded, a change in it is as regards apprentices was or- dered, Oct. 30, 1721.—M. C. C., III: 455. In the oath as approved Nov. 19, 1731, the apprentice clause was omitted.—Ibid., IV: 121.

"This was the map entitled "A Map of the Country of The Five Nations . . .", which first appeared in 1724 (p.v.).—See description of A. Pl. 2-b, III: 362. The book was the result of a dispute between the government of New York and some merchants, and is mentioned in 1755. It was the first general history of the Iroquois, and the first historical work printed in New York.—Church Catalogue, No. 905; Sabine, IV: 222, item No. 1270.

Not more than four copies of this original edition are now known in the United States. It was reprinted at London, with large additions (5vo), in 1747 and 1750, and in 2 vols. (12mo.) in 1755.

"Dr. Colden, of Scotch descent, came to America in 1710, and settled in Pennsylvania, where he practiced medicine. In 1718 he was induced by Governor Hunter, of New York, to remove to that colony, where he was appointed Surveyor General, and soon after Master in Chancery. Four years after he was raised by the crown to the important place of a Member of the Legislative Council; and a large grant of land was made to him. In 1746 he was made Lieutenant-Governor of New York. He is said to have been the best informed man in the colony. From Bellin's American Catalogue of the Library of James Carter Brown, Providence, R. I., 1870, 109, it is called the earliest biography of Colden, written by John Gilmary Shea in his introduction to the reprint of Colden's History, pub'd by T. H. Morrell, N. Y., in 1866.

The Great Consistory of the Dutch Church resolves: (9) that the new church building "shall be begun out of the money in the Deacons' chest," to which shall be added £3,200 if a sum can be obtained; (12) that it "shall be a four-sided oblong;" (15) that "it shall be built on the ground bought for it, to the north of the French Church" (which was on the north side of Pine Street, east of Nassau square; (16) it shall be 100 ft. long and 75 ft. broad, inside measure (but see May 31); (17) that the "Great Consistory" will leave the direction of the undertaking to the "Ruiling Consistory," and "that the earliest progress be made with the building of this New Church." —Essex Rec., IV: 2378, citing "Liber B. 65." The "Ruiling Consistory" appointed John van der Heul director of the building operations; Tennis Tiebout master-carpenter; and Cornelius Turk master-mason.—Ibid., 2375-79.

On April 13, it is agreed that Tiebout and Turk were to "receive daily as wages, for their care and pains and direction of those who are under them, 20 shillings daily, and 50 shillings on Sunday."—Ibid., IV: 2379.

The grand jury having brought in a presentment of "the Incommodiousness and Insufficiency of the Goales of the City and County of New York;" the supreme court orders that the mayor and aldermen have a sufficient number of men employed to guard "the Prisons in this City," to prevent escape, etc.—Ibid., IV: 2379.

The common council gave suitable orders to the watch and bullmen, and appointed a committee to look after repairs to the gaols to be done under the direction of the high sheriff. They also resolved to petition the next assembly for leave to bring in a bill "for making and Erecting sufficient & Commodious Common Goals for the Said City and County." They directed the mayor or recorder to inform the chief-justice and attorney-general that they had then taken "all the Effectual Measures in their power" to repair and guard the gaols; that they intended to petition the assembly; and that they desired no prosecution to be brought against "the Corporation of the Justices of the Peace of the City & County," that "Humly Considering" that they had no authority, by any law then in force, "to Levy Money upon the subject for the Making or Repairing of Goals." To defend themselves, in case prosecution were commenced against them, they engaged the recorder (Francis Harison), and Joseph Murray and John Chambers, attornies-at-law to the city (1728), each of whom was paid £5 as a retainer fee.—M. C. C., III: 402-7, 411, 412. See also the order of April 25, for making a prison out of "the west End of the City Hall Over the Common Council Chamber &c."—Ibid., III: 410. no action resulted. A similar application to the assembly, July 22, 1730, mentions "Gaols" (M. G. C., IV: 18), and a committee was named Aug. 24, 1731 (p. 490), to "Cause a Strong Gaol to be made

30 At a meeting of the Lutheran Church officers, to consider the proposed new building (see July 3, 1708), Hans Rome and Mr.
Tibout are appointed carpenters (the latter serving alone later), and Cornelius Turk and Abraham Aalsteen, masons. The plan is May to be made by Mr. Chevalier. The ground measures four rods square. The building is to be 46 ft. long, 32 ft. broad, 22 ft. high the nave (all inside measurements). There are to be ordered in England 200 lbs. of nails, a chest of double glass, and a good church door-lock, etc. Mr. Van Boskerk is to superintend the steeple. Wood from the Kinderhook saw-mill is to be delivered, consisting of 24 boards of 14 in. fir wood for the pulpit. Mortar is to come from Lansing (?). The flat measures shall be the same as the old church, but that so a gallery can be built in, and a steeple built on, the new church. The cost is to be £600.
A collection taken up yielded £165:153 for this purpose (of which solved that the old church be broken down as soon as possible.

be possible to make the same the outside measures. "1. This was unani-

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

It was said to be still standing in 1805.—Dowson, Earliest Churches in N. Y. (1865), 509. See also Geo. Burnet, his History of N. Y., 275, 276, and March 14, 1760, Second Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 436.

Mayor Loring was reimbursed, in 1734, for the expense of "Carting of Timber out of the Parade before the Fort in the year 1728."—M. G. IV, 248.

Harmanus Rutgers comes into possession of his farm "near the Ferry Water Hills on the East side of the Bowery Lane in the outward," which he acquires from the heirs of Hendrick Cornelisen van Shaick. This is part of the original grant to Cornelis Jacoben Stille on March 18, 1647 (q. v.). There was an old farm-house, as well as barns and out-buildings, on this land at the time of the con- version.—Liber Deed Book, 1, 172. (New Am. "Rutgers"). The house is shown, north of the Jews burying-ground, on the map of 1735 (Pl. 50, Vol. I). The new Rutgers mansion was begun in 1754 (q. v.) on ground bounded by the present Rutgers Pl., Clinton, Cherry, and Jefferson Sts.

Many people cross on the ice from New York to Long Island.—Am. Merc. (Philadelphia), Feb. 6, 1728. See also Jan. 6, 1720.

Trinity vestry orders "that the Church wardens do let out that part of the Churches farme opposite to Spring Garden [see Nov. 1, 1721] from the South Bounds thereof which is not Comprehended in Mr. later Hargraves lease for any number of years not exceeding three ..."—Trin. Min. (N.Y.).

Trinity vestry appoints a "committee to lay out the invocation ground behind the Church yard into Soe many Lots as they shall think most beneficial for the Churches Interest and that when it shall be Soe laid out into Lots that they Lease the Lots out for at least Number of Years not exceeding forty under full Yearly ground rents Covenants and Restrictions as they shall think most proper ..."—Ibid.

The ferry to Long Island is leased to Theophilus Elsworth for five years at a rent of $339 per year.—M. G. III, 459-51. After ten years' experience leasing the ferry in two parts, an experience attended with much friction between the ferry-men and, indeed, with litigation (see Jan. 10, 1725), the common council reverts to its former policy of one lease and one ferry-man. For "Entertaining of this Corporation at his House on the delivery of Possession of the Ferry," Elsworth was subsequently reimbursed by the board.—Ibid., III: 460.

Cotton Mather dies in Boston.—Winstor, op. cit., 129.

The common council appoints a committee, who, with the city surveyor, are "to lay out and survey on the West side of Island-bergh [see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 966] two Acres of Land for A Brick Kiln &c," which are to be leased to Wessell van Norden at 20 shillings a year.—M. G. III, 434.

The consistory of the Dutch Church resolves "That the movable sashes [of the new church] shall be made with iron frames, and a broad groove, that will close well; and the panes shall be five times broad and seven times long; and that the heads of both shall be shaped; and a window in the inner ceiling shall be hipped, as well the East and West [sides]; that on the West side shall be two open windows at the end; that on the South and North sides shall be as many as can be: that on the East side, on either side of the pulpif shall be two loose sashes in each window."—Essex Rec., IV: 2496. On April 18, it was resolved "That the glass windows above the South door, shall begin four feet above the door, be three panes wide, and run up two and twenty feet by . . . [sic] and above shall be another glass . . . of six feet long, then, in the high place above, a round glass in the middle."—Ibid., cit., "Eiber B. 7."

The new governor, John Montgomerie, arrives "with his Majesty's Letters Patents."—Assembl. Jour. I: 573; N. Y. Col. Docs, V: 855. He lands "near Whitehall . . . about one A Clock afternoon." Soon after, he "Published his Commission in Council and took to the Oaths, then swore the Council," and then "Published his Commission at the City Hall the Corporation waiting on his Excellency and the Garrison Militia Horse and foot being under Arms and making A Double Guard from the landing to the Fort and from the Fort to the City Hall."—M. G. III, 456-57. The seals were delivered to Gov. Montgomerie by the retiring governor, Burnet, and a council order was issued for a proclamation to be published continuing officers in their places.—Cal. Conv. Min., 506.

The common council orders, prepares, and delivers an address to Gov. Montgomerie expressing their felicitations on his safe arrival, their fealty, and their submission to his patronage and pro-

amount needed to complete the barracks ought to be taken from Nov. 29. the £200 which the colony has annually appropriated for the repair 7

24. of the houses. — Jour., I: 573. The barracks had not been fully repaired, and an act was passed to raise the sum required for that purpose. — See under Aug. 25. and Sept. 20, 1728.

25. Rip van Dorn and others petition for six years further time for completing their wharves on the East River.—Col. Land Papers, 186-87. See Jan. 22, 1722.

28. The assembly resolves "That the erecting or exercising in this Colony a Court of Equity or Chancery, (however it may be termed) without Consent in General Assembly, is unwarantable, and con- trary to the fundamental and express stipulation of the compact between the Subjects, and of pernicious Consequence to their Liberties and Properties."—Assemb. Jour., I: 571.

29. A new ferry act is passed by the general assembly moderating the ferry rates established ten years before, and making them pay- able in English currency.—Cf. Nov. 2, 1717. For transporting any person one way across the East River, to or from Nassau island, the rate prescribed is "Ten Grams of Silver Pillar or Mexico Plate or two Pennys in Bills of Credit made Current in this Colony," and double that after sunset (unless the ferry-man neglects or refuses to transport the person so late). Any "Portable thing which A Man or Boy Carry under his Arms or A Woman under her Armes or in her Apron" shall be included in their "Ferriage." For a horse the ferriage is "one Shilling in like Money" a calf, "four pence in like Money," etc., a large variety of articles being specifically catalogued,—a pipe of wine, a bushel of salt, a faskin of soap, etc.,—the list of which is to be pasted on a board by the ferry-man and hung up in "the Porch of the Ferry-houses, or at the most Publick place there."—Col. Laws N. Y., III: 407-10. The next and final colonial revision of the Ferry Act was on Oct. 14, 1724 (q. v.).

Dec. 5. "To Morrow Morning [Dec. 5] the Eastern and Western Posts set out to perform their Stages once a Fortnight during the three Winter Months."—N. Y. Gov., Nov. 27-Dec. 4, 1727. See also Dec. 2, 1728.

David Wallace and David Willson, having been convicted of "a Cheat, in passing some Bills, which were made Counterfeit Bills of Credit of the Province of New-Jersey," are now "brought to the Bar," and given an unusual sentence. On Dec. 12, they are to be "placed in a Cart, so as to be publicly seen, with Halter about their Necks, and Carted thro' the most Publick Streets in this City; and then be brought to the publick Whipping-Post," where Wallace is to receive 19 stripes and Willson 28. The sheriff is then to deliver them "at the Ferry-house in Kings County." They are to be "set on the Pillory" at Flatbush late in January and again receive 39 and 28 stripes respectively. A similar punishment is to be inflicted at Jamaica in Queens County, in February, and then in Westchester County, in March, after which they are to be delivered to the high sheriff of New York at Kingsbridge. They are then to remain on their knees six and three months respectively.—N. Y. Gov., Dec. 4-11, 1727.

Gov. Burnet having presented an organ to the Dutch Reformed Church, and it having been placed in position "in our old church" (in Garden Street), the ministers, elders, and deacons appoint Hendrick Michael Kock (or Cook) organist. Among the terms of the appointment is the provision that he shall teach John Peter Zenger, "the present organ-blower" and future printer, to play the organ. The sum of £100 a year is to be paid to Kock for playing, and £4 to Zenger for blowing, the organ.—Essex Rec., IV: 2397-99.

The common council resolves to farm the ferry for five years, from March 25, 1728, and appoints a committee to meet for the purpose on Jan. 18, 1728, at the house of Obadiah Hunt "near the Custom House" (Pearl St., between Whitehall and Hanover Sq.).—M. C. C., III: 428. The expenses of the committee, on this occasion were £45. On that same day, the common council allowed Hunt £2144 for expenses of other committee meetings at his house.—Ibid., III: 427.

About the year 1728, a Baptist congregation, organized in 1724, erected its own house of worship, on "Golden Hill" not far from the later Baptist Church on Gold Street.—Greeneleaf, Hist. of Churches in City of N. Y. (1868), 224, 226. About 1728, the building was sold as private property and the congregation disbanded. The church was described as being about 20 feet square, with twelve-foot posts, and a pyramidal roof running up to a sharp point.

8. The court of general sessions having proposed to the grand jury, etc., to join with them in an address "to his Excellency to Great Britain, to secure his safety and to this his Governor."—N. T. Ga., May 9, 1728. They say that, "Upon these occasions, it has been usual for those who had the Honour to Address their Government, to join their Prayer for the Preservation of their Rights, Liberties and Properties, with their solemn Assurances of Endeavouring to deserve great a Blessing;" but add: "your Excellency has anticipated even our Wishes, and by your publick Declarations of your Noble and most Generous Intentions towards this Province, left us nothing to Petition for, except it be, That your Excellency will believe, that you have filled our Hearts with Esteem and Gratitude . . ." They close by asserting their loyalty to the king and crown of Great Britain. Montgomerie acknowledges this with thanks, promising to support them in their "Rights and Liberties, and holding that, as magistrates down and the Clerk to himself "in putting the Laws in Execution for his Majesty's Service, and the good of the People of this City and County.,"—Ibid., 1734.

6. Until this time, there has been spent in building the new Lutheran church (see May 22, 1728), £99:7:4. —Lutheran Church records (MS.).

20. Montgomerie recommends to the lords of trade that James de Lancy be made a member of the council.—N. T., Col. Docs., V: 856-57.

June 1. There has recently arrived from New York, from Dublin, a shipload of men and women "Servants." Many of the men are Trades-men, as Blacksmiths, Carpenters, Weavers, Tailors, Cord-Weavers, and other Trades. They remain on the vessel, "lying over against Mr. Read's Wharf," and are to be "disposed of by John & Joseph Read, on reasonable Terms."—N. T. Ga., June 11, 1729.

The tavern on the north-west corner of Wall and Water Sts., later famous as the Merchants Coffee House, an institution which helped to mould the future commercial character of Wall St., was, at this period, and probably earlier, in possession of John Dunk, whose name is given by John & Joseph Read, on reasonable Terms. —N. T. Ga., June 1, 1729.

July 15, 1728. In an account of a fire which occurred there on Jan. 18, 1728 (q.v.), the tavern was described as the "Corner-House by the Meal-Market." The building was offered for sale in July, 1726. and a year later, on Jan. 15, 1728, the advertisement stating that it had been a "well frequented Tavern for several Years," was published. —T. Ga., July 22, 1728.

Daniel Bloom purchased the house in June, 1735 (Bayes, Old Taverns of N. T., 125), and changed its name to the "Merchants Coffee House."—N. T. Post.

Bay, Jan. 16, 1742. After the death of Bloom, the tavern was kept by Capt. James Ackland, and later by Luke Roome, who sold it to Charles Arding in 1758.—Bayes, op. cit., 159, 154. In 1771, when Arding offered the house for sale, it was in the possession of Mrs. Mary Ferrars, a widow.—N. T. Merc., June 10, 1771. By April 27, 1775 (q.v.), Mrs. Ferrars was making the house a lodging house, and the old building and "open'd the spacious elegant new Coffee-House on the opposite corner." After Mrs. Ferrars' departure, the old coffee-house was evidently given up as a tavern; for, under date of April 26, 1775, we find an advertisement of hats manufactured by Newcomb & Peace, who "reside at the Old Coffee-House, facing the new built one."—N. T. Merc., Apr. 26, 1775. It was a "brick house in 1790, when the building was offered for sale: "That corner house which makes the corner of Wall and Water Street, with the adjoining tenement, to Water Street, commonly called the old Coffee House, occupied at present by Mr. Casick, the Hatter."—Daily Adv., Feb. 5, 1790. On Jan. 31, 1792, the Tontine Association, which had already purchased adjoining property, bought the old coffee-house of Mr. Charles Arding and Abigail, his wife, for £15,766, and later added to their holdings by the purchase of the estate of Mordecai Gomez.—Stone, Hist. of N. T. City, 318-90. The old buildings were at once torn down and the Tontine Coffee House was erected on this site. See April 14, 1792.

A number of indented Irish servants arrive on the ship "George," commanded by John Anthony Adamson. Persons desiring to purchase the "times" of these servants (a term of service to help their passage-money) are directed to see Capt. John Dunks, at the Sign of the Jamaica-Pilot upon the Dock. —N. T. Ga., June 24-July 1, 1728. For other instances of this character, see Nov. 14, 1726; April 23, 1739; June 9, 1745; Aug. 19, 1751; 1753; June 9, 1774.

The governor's council makes record of the fact that George Clarke is confirmed by the king in his office of provincial secretary.—Col. Coun., Min., 306.

The consistory of the Dutch Church appoints Jan. Bogdus and Peter Brower master-masons of the new church in place of Cornelius Turle, who has died, and they are to divide his pay.—Eccles. Rec., 4:21.

The common council resolves that "A Powder House be July Erected," and a committee is appointed to find a convenient location.—M. C. C., III: 428. They reported, on July 20, that a piece of ground, 100 or 120 feet square, "upon the Common near the place where the Gallows now Stands," was the proper place.—Ibid., III: 445. On Aug. 23, it was resolved that it be "forty foot long and twenty foot broad within the Walls thereof, that the same be built of the best stone and lime and the best roof covered with A good Roof Covered with Pannies."—Ibid., III: 496. The location was changed by resolution of the common council on Sept. 5, 1728, to "a little Island in the fresh water," which was considered "a proper piece of Ground and the most Convenient place."—Ibid., III: 498. Instead of building the house entirely of stone, it was found, on Sept. 10, that enough stone could not easily be procured, and it was decided to use both brick and stone.—Ibid., III: 499. For date of completion, see Nov. 21. The erection of this powder-house had been contemplated 11 years earlier (see Oct. 22, 1717). For subsequent action concerning it in common council and assembly, see June 1, 1721, and June 5, 1725; see also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 925; Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 600; and Addenda.

A committee of the common council, appointed the day before 27 to inspect the great dock, long bridge, and common sewer, promptly reports that the dock is so "Choked up" with sand and mud at its mouth as to be rendered useless. They find that both ends of the dock should be raised with "Stockdales," new "Wall Plates" laid thereon, and the ground below levelled so as to prevent the water of violent rains running into the dock; also that the bridge and sewer need a good deal of repair. They recommend that Anthony Hales, the dock-master, be "Mr. Pilot," May 13, 1735, be removed, and that Capt. Andrew Law be appointed to succeed him. Hams is immediately discharged, and required to account for the profits of the crane, dock, and slips during his continuance in office, and pay the balance to the treasurer. Law is appointed, his duties being to keep the accounts and collect the rent due on the long bridge, dock, and slips, taking care that the orders and regulations of these properties be executed effectually. His salary is to be £30 a year from Aug. 1. —M. C. C., III: 441, 443-45.
Joseph Murray and John Chambers, attorneys at law, are voted the freedom of the city, each being "A zealous Assayer of the Rights and Privileges of the Corporation." He declined his will that a bell be procured at his expense from Holland for the new Dutch Church, on Nassau St. The bell which was made in Amsterdam in 1721, was inscribed: "Me fecerunt De Graaf e N. Muller, Amsterdam, Anno 1721. Abraham De Peyster, geboren den 8 July, 1675, gestorven den 8 August, 1729. Een legaat aan de Nederduytse Kerke Nieuw York." (A legacy to the Low Dutch Church at New York.)

—A Discourse, by Rev. Thomas De Witt, D.D., 571 Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 364, 573. This bell now hangs in the tower of the Collegiate Reformed Church, at the north corner of Fifth Ave. and 48th St., having first hung in the Middle Dutch Church on Nassau St., and later in other Dutch churches "in the march northward."—A Brief Account of an Historic Church (pub. by the constitory, 1902), 96.

The committee informs the assembly that they "have satisfactorily inspected the fort here, where the Fortifications, the Carriages of the Cannon, the Barracks and the Magazines are all in a bad Condition." The house orders that Col. Mynder Schuyler, Capt. Rutgers, and Major Philipse inspect and report an estimate of the expense of the needed repairs.—Assemb. Jour., I, 579. For the committee's report, see Sept. 15.

A petition is read in the common council from the "Principal Inhabitants of this City of the Hebrew Nation," stating that some years before they purchased "A Small piece of Land beyond the fresh water for A Burying place for the Said Inhabitants," but that the "Said-Burying place being now full," the petitioners "would have purchased some more Land Adjacent thereto, but it being in dispute they Could not have A Title to the same." Whereupon, "they were Obliged to purchase two Lots of Land lying near the Cripple Bush or Swamp being the Numbers 84 & 85 which Contain fifty foot in breadth and one hundred and twelve foot in length; but they "would not presume to make A burying place thereof without the leave and Lyccony of this Corporation," and this they now ask. The petition is granted with the understanding that the burying-ground will be kept "very well Inclosed and Fenced."—Assemb. Jour., I, 410-11.

The author is informed by Mr. Samuel Oppenheim that the land "near the Cripple Bush or Swamp" was on Gold St., between Beekman and Ferry Sts.; and that, "though the petition was granted this land was not used, as the land adjacent to the then existing burying-ground became available through the purchase from Roy Willey [see Dec. 17, 1729] of his land, which had been in litigation." See Libr. Deed., XXXI: 319 (New York), which included the old burying-ground thereon.—From Mr. Oppenheim's letter to the author. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927, Pt. 1746; Feb. 22, 1666; 1682; and see Dec. 17, 1729; 1751-1805; 1853.

Obadiah Hunt, the tavern-keeper (see Oct. 20, 1718), is permitted to lay a drain "through the Street Commonly Called Custom House [Pearl] Street into the Common Sewer in the Broad Street," on other person being allowed to use the drain without his permission.—Assemb. Jour., I, 419-20.

The common council orders "that Mr Jacobus Roosevelt have Liberty to Open the Slip fronting the East River Commonly Called Hardenbrookes Slip and to Carry away the Soil incumbrings the same to such Vacant place or places as he Shall think fitt without distress to the Neighbours."—M.C. C., III: 449.

The common council resolves "that ten Lots of Land lying in the Swamp or Cripple Bush in the Rear of Beekmans Land on the North East side thereof" be granted in fee simple to Jacobus Roosevelt for $100.—M. C. C., III: 449. In the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (in Box 1 of MSS, labelled "New York") is a package containing papers regarding the land at Beekman's Swamp (the "Cripple Bush"). One of these is a survey of the ten lots laid out, Sept. 5 by order of the common council on this date, by Robert Crooke, the surveyor, also a son of James Roosevelt in regard to a street to his ten lots in the Cripple Bush, and the residence called Golden Hill. The common council. The grant of Sept. 5 was succeeded by a grant of the entire swamp, July 20, 1734 (q.v.). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 967.

On Sept. 20, the board ordered "that Mr Jacobus Roosevelt pay the Consideration Money to the Treasurer of this City for the use of this Corporation, for the ten Lots of Land lately Granted unto him in the Cripple Bush and that the said Treasurer Receipt shall be unto him A sufficient discharge for the same. and that those Monies be Applied to the use of Building the Powder House of this Corporation [see Sept. 21] and to 20 Other use whatsoever, whereof the said Treasurer is to take Notice." At the same time, the treasurer is directed to keep account of the money received from Roosevelt, and of the payments from this fund to the powder-house committee, so the expenses may be paid as soon as the house is finished.—M. C. C., III: 451.

Col. Schuyler, one of the committee appointed on Aug. 23 (q.v.) to inspect the fort, reports "that for repairing the Soldiers Barracks, the Timber, Nails, Boards, and other Materials belonging to Carpenters Work [his Labour included]" the cost will be £461689 and that they "have not enough Money in the City. Glaziers Work will amount to, for compleating the said Barracks." It is resolved to raise £500 by taxation for repairing the barracks in Fort George.—Assemb. Jour., I, 588. A law to this effect was passed on Sept. 20, 1728 (q.v.).

The legislature passes an act to raise £500 by an "Extraordinary Levy" to repair the barracks in the fort. The quota of the city and county of New York is £55. Daniel Goutier is named in the act to be the "Manager" for buying materials and employing workmen; he is to report his expenditures to the governor.—Col. Laws N. T., III: 498; N. T. Col. Docs., V, 874. See Nov. 24, 1727.

The inhabitants, living near the "Market House at the slip Near Burgers Path" (Old Slip), are given permission by the common council to repair the market-house at their own expense.—M. C. C., III: 458.

Capt. Covil Mayne, commander of the king's ship "Biddeford," is given the freedom of the city for dispersing the forces of a Spanish privater which had "made barbarous havock and depredation upon the Coasts of this Province."—M. C. C., III: 458. The seal was enclosed in a silver box, made by Le Roi, costing £1219.

Ibid., III: 460.

The new meeting-place (see 1724) "for the Congregation of Dissecting Christians Called Baptists to perform Religious Worship" is recorded at the court of general sessions, on the petition of Nicholas Eyres, Richard Stillwell and Cornelius Stephens. It is described as "A House Erected upon a Lot of Ground in the Center Ward with a Pew for one, upon the South West side of the House, fronting to Orange Street."—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace (MS.), 502. This is one of the earliest references found to both Golden Hill and Orange Street.—Cf. Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 966 and 1007.

An advertisement states that the ship "Thomas," from London, has arrived in New York with "several Men, Women and Boys, Servants, amongst whom there are several Tradesmen, as Bakers, Weavers, Bricklayers, Carpenters, Shoemakers, Glaziers, Coopers, &c. Whoever inclines to purchase the Time of any of them, may apply to Peter Vallete at his House in New York; the Master and Mate of said Ship having made oath before the Mayor of this City, that the said servants, nor any of them, are not convicted Criminals, but that they are Persons that freely and voluntarily engaged themselves by Indentures, to serve a certain time for their Passage.—N. Y. Gam., Nov. 11-18, 1728. See June 19.

The consistory of the Dutch Church agrees to pay £15 to the carpenter for completing the arched ceiling and the floor above the ceiling of the new church; and £16 to the masons for every 15 feet "of the timber which they split and nail in the ceiling."—Ectls. Rec., IV: 240-41 (q.v.).

The committee of the common council appointed, on July 6, for building a powder-house reports that it has built it "on the Island Adjoining the fresh water pond," at an expense of £24217129. This account is paid immediately.—M. C. C., III: 462-65. See July 6. For a quarter century prior to this date, the only place recorded as a repository for powder was a vault within the fort. continue to perform that Business."—N. T. Gaz., Jan. 7-14, 1729.

A letter is published calling attention to laxity in the city in regard to the prevention of fire. The City of Philadelphia (as young as it is) has had two Fire Engines for several years past, and it is a Wonder to many that this City should so long neglect the getting of one or more of them. People in London are not left to their own Fancies in their Buildings, but are regulated therein, so that their Houses may be safe against Fire. But nothing almost of this Economy have we yet, and what we have we Neglect; for we have some Laws for Leather Buckets, but they are not put in execution. . . . The Shingling of Houses ought to be discounted, and the Tying or Slating encouraged . . . The Mundane's of our New Buildings seem to please the Eye, but I am afraid if that piece of Vanity be not discouraged we or our Children will one day pay dear for it."—N. T. Gaz., Feb. 4-11, 1729.

The consistory of the Dutch Church, being "in great need of Mar. funds to go on with the New Church," resolves to apply to each one of the congregation "for a free gift for the building . . . and affectionately request a liberal subscription." Their written request to this effect was read from the pulpit on March 9 and 16.
After it was read, however, "it was deemed best to delay carrying it out, because of the length of the winter, the very general sickness prevailing, and the many deaths." Meanwhile, the consistory renewed their permission "to make a collection in the City." He seceded and gave his consent in writing on April 25.
The subscription paper was then taken around.—Eccles. Rec. IV:
2450-54. The original document, consisting of the petition of the consistory, on which Montegonie has written his consent, is now in the author's collection, and is here reproduced (Pl. 19). Like the petition, the governor's license for this object recites the needs of the church that led to building the new edifice, which is now "under Roof."— tavern is shown and named on the MS. Map of 1735 (Pl. 30, Vol. I).

It is also depicted in the Burgess View of 1717-17 (Pl. 25, Vol. I).

The consistory of the Dutch Church resolves: "1. That the north and south wall of the New Church, and of the Tower, should immediately be carried up as high as the ridge of the roof . . .
2. That the church shall be made close [light] all the way round, with doors, sashes and wooden windows. 3. That in place of more windows to be added in each side, as they are now beginning to make [them] and will proceed, east and west and north there shall only be openings in the Tower for light outwardly, six inches wide, and about three feet high; but inwardly, running wider. 4. That on the north church wall, on either side of the Tower, in front of [opposite] the two lofts of the roof, where it will suit best, there shall be also a window in the side walls, six inches broad and 14 feet high. 5. On the south side, in the second story of the roof and in the middle, shall be two movable windows. And the oval one, on either side, in place of glass, shall be masoned up and wainscoted outside, with wood painted like glass. But the highest oval, in the midst of the top [near the peak] shall be of glass. 6. That lead color, for a priming, shall be laid on the frame of the ceiling." The consistory also resolves that: "the wood-work of the Tower shall not be made until a model of the same has been shown to the Consistory."—Eccles. Rec., IV: 2456–57.

A committee of the governor's council meets at "Obadiah Hunt's."—Assem. Jour., I: 598. Hunt's tavern, which was next to the custom-house, was a reset of the common council as early as Oct. 20, 1718 (g.v.). It was here that Governor Burnet was entertained on Sept. 20, 1720.—M. G. C., III: 234. It was here that the ferry had been leased at times.—Ibid., III: 305, 448. Hunt made a garden, in the spring of 1724, behind the ruins of Whitehall.—Ibid., III: 349. The place had therefore been a popular resort for at least 11 years. It continued so at least 15 years longer.—See Jan. 13, 1735.

The west end of the power-house, which is partitioned off, is appropriated as the common council for the use of the governor to store there the powder of the garrison, the key to be delivered to him.—M. G. C., III: 473. See Jan. 10.

Because the number of persons has greatly multiplied who have "set up to practice the Law," and many of them have encouraged "unnatural Methods," to the vexation and damage of "his Majesty's good Subjects," a committee of the assembly is appointed to consider ways to check the evil. They reported that a bill ought to be brought in for that purpose, and this was done the following day.—Assem. Jour., I: 600–1. No law to this effect appears, however, to have been passed. But see July 28, 1729.

The governor's counsell receives a royal mandate appointing James de Lancey to the council; he is sworn in and takes his seat.—Caun. Min., 508.

A public, municipal, circulating library is founded. The mayor informs the common council that he has received a message from the general assembly (Assem. The two streets here provided for are the lower parts of Greenwich and Washington Streets of the present day. Goelets Street is the present Morris Street, formerly known as Beaver Lane. "The Alley that leads to Oyster Pasty" is the present Exchange Alley, and the "narrow street which runs from the Broadway to the south side of the English Church to the London Bridge" ran somewhat to the north of the present line of Rector Street, which, at first under the name of Robinson Street, took the place of the lane in 1719.—See April 4, 1729. Certain prominent lawyers of New York City form a close corporation by articles of agreement bearing this date. The discovery of this important document in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. adds a most interesting original record, hitherto unnoticed, to the sources of colonial history in this city and province. The full text of the manuscript, which is in the handwriting of William Smith, the first signer of the agreement, is as follows:

"Agreement made among Lawyers

We the Subscribers taking into Consideration the great number of persons who lately have obtained Licences to practise the Law, and many others who are endeavouring, or propose to obtain them, Several of whom are not sufficiently qualified for that business, and as they depend thereon for their Subsistence they naturally must as in fact they do, use low and undue methods for acquiring business to themselves which does & must tend to stir up litigious Suits and by their wantonness the Subjects are deceived absurd and mislead, and their undue practices will not be confined only to them who use them but will reflect a general Odium on the profession of the Law which renders it highly our Duty as much as in Us lies prevent & remedy the Evils that do & may arise from such abuses in order where to we have come to the following Articles of Agreement to wit

1. That any practitioner who has obtained his Licence since the last day of June 1729 is employed in any Cause We or either of Us shall not directly or indirectly be concerned on that Side, by advice or otherwise and if any such practitioner or his Client or any other person shall apply to either of us to be concern'd, & such of us who shall be so applied to, shall absolutely refuse to be concern'd with such practitioner & immediately send word thereof to the rest of us.

2. If any person does actually employ any such practi- tioner as aforesaid in their common & easie business, but upon difficult matters come to employ any of us we will desire him to apply to, or depend upon such practitioner usually employed by them and acquaint such person we resolve not to undertake any such cause for them while such practitioner is usually employ'd in their common business for them, and (unless such person shall declare or promise to the contrary) will not continue such business wholly to decline & refuse to undertake such Cause, and shall immediately send word thereof to the rest of us.

3. We will even give no Advice to such person[s] who usually employ any such practitioner as aforesaid while they do employ them nor draw nor give them any Copies of Entries or proceedings or any ways assist in the doing thereof, but will wholly refuse so to do, and immediately send notice of such refusal to the rest of Us.

4. That all other reasonable ways & means we shall endeavour to undeceive the people by exposing the ignorance and Inabilities of such practitioners as aforesaid.

5. That we meet on the first Wednesday in every month at the house of Thomas Sturlock, or such other house as shall be agreed on by the major part of us the better to keep up to those articles and to concert such further measures as may be proper to remedy the growing mischiefs aforesaid. William Smith, who wrote this "Agreement," was the father of the other William Smith who wrote the History of the Province of New York (N. Y., 1757). He was born in 1697, was admitted to the bar of New York on May 20, 1724, and died in 1769. Thomas Scordel, at whose house the lawyers agreed to hold their monthly meetings, was a "vintner (commonly an Irish tavern keeper) of New York City, whose will, dated March 31, 1737, was proved May 14, 1747.—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1093), 116.

Prior to the discovery of this "Agreement made among Law- yers," our knowledge was quite incomplete regarding the require- ments for admission to the bar in the first half of the eighteenth century. In the Hist. of the Bench and Bar of New York, ed. by David McAdam and others, Vol. I (N. Y., 1897), 178, H. W. Jessup says: "Thus early [1756] do we find recorded, and much earlier doubtless there existed, a dissatisfaction in regard to the prepara- tion of members of the profession who were admitted to the bar. There is no reason to believe that prior to the Revolution any particular scheme of legal education existed in the Colony of New York." W. H. Peckham states (ibid., 191):

"As early as 1744 the lawyers of New York entered into an association to free the judiciary from the exercise of the king's prerogative. Mr. H. B. Dawson, in his tract on the Sons of Liberty, traces the inception of that society in New York to the formation of this primitive 'bar association.' None of the records of the association (so-called) have come down to us; and, indeed, it probably never presented a public character as a formally organized body, but operated quite spontaneously, the bar as a whole readily following the leadership of a few active spirits." The efforts made by a group of lawyers, in 1744, to free the judiciary from the king's prerogative, may have been the inception of the Society of the Sons of Liberty, but it was not the earliest association of the bar in New York. That, we see from the foregoing "Agreement," dates from 1729, and had for its aim the maintenance of a high standard of legal education and efficiency.

The consistory of the Dutch Church resolves "that in the Tower, above the roof of the Church, a door shall be made in an opening about 8 feet high and about 4 feet broad, with or without glass; also, at the same height, on the other three sides of the Tower, shall be made a light, about 8 feet high and three broad, with small boards running down side, or a sash, as may be judged necessary; and that the croon, the ball and the weathercock on the Tower, he made proportional to one another."—Eccles. Rec., IV: 2476.

William Burnet, former governor of New York, died at Boston, Sept., aged 52. An Elegy Upon His Excellency William Burnet, Esq: was the title of a broadside, printed in Boston, in praise of his wisdom, his learning, and other virtues. One of these broadsides is in the N. Y. Pub. Library. An inventory of his personal effects included a "Prospect of New York / Ditto of Boston 10/".—See description of the Burgis View, I: 241-42.

The account of Henry Beekman, the high sheriff, dated Aug. 19, 1719 (q.b.), is paid by the common council, it being "for Re- pair to the Prison of this City (when it was burnt)."—M. C. C. III: 1439.

Charles Sleigh and Annastie, his wife, mortgage to Abraham de Peyster the property subsequently known as No. 1 Broadway; on May 31, 1743, they conveyed the property to him.—Liber Deed., XXXIV: 242-46. See Aug. 16, 1755, and dates cited therein under for the history of plot No. 1 Broadway, the Kennedy House, &c. See Aug. 15, 1644, for the ground-brief of this plot, received from Director Kieft by Thomas Breen.

The estate of "Mr Stephen De-Lancie of the City of New York, Merchant . . . his Country House at Bowmenall in the Out- Ward" is mentioned in a court record.—Min. Gen. Sessions of the Peace, 517.

"The Narrow Street which runs through the land of Adolph Philipse Esq. Commonly Called Goelets Street" is mentioned in the M. C. C., III: 145-57. This was what was called Morris Street, called on Pl. 64, Vol. I, Beaver Lane. It was regulated in 1786 (M. C. C., MS: IX: 249., and was called Morris Street before 1836, as shown on Colton's Topographical Map, Pl. 124, Vol. III. Attorney-General Bradley makes a representation against the colonial assemblies, pointing out their tendency to act as regula- tors of the crown. He recommends, in behalf of the crown, be present in the assembly when business is transacted.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VI: 901-5.

The city is debtor under the Dongan Charter for 16 years' quit- rent per annum (originally a beanskin), ten shillings being allowed for the weekly offerings.—Journals of the City Chamberlain, II: 175. On Dec. 11, "the Treasurer paid to Archibald Kennedy Esq his Majesty's

G. C., III: 148.

Richard Davis (nurse of a war veteran who was passed on the New York station), acting under power of attorney from Roy Willey, of London, conveys to Luis Gomez and his three sons, Mordecai, Daniel, and David, for £0. 30s. a piece of ground described as beginning "at the south-east corner of the Jewish burial-place" and extending to the "Hole in the Line of Chatham Square."—Liber Deeds, XXXI: 109, 319, 406. This transfer included the old Jewish burial-ground.—See also survey in Cong. Shearith Israel archives. For history of the plot, with references to the litigation involved, see Daly, Settlement of the Jews in N. Am., 15, 39-44. On Nov. 24, 1759, Gomez and his sons executed a bond, reciting the conveyance to them, by purchase, "for a burial place for the use of the Jewish nation in general;" acknowledging that they held the land in trust, and promising that it should so remain.—Liber Deeds, XXXII: 774.

In this connection, Mr. Samuel Oppenheim informs the author that "These instruments show that the Willey land adjoined the then Jewish burying-ground. That this adjoining land was used as far back as 1685 is shown by the extract tombstone of Benjamin Bueno de Mesquita, who died that year.—See Pubs. Am. Jewish Hist. Soc., 1909, 91-92; and ibid., No. 18 (1909), 93-122. References are made in the latter work to many burials between 1683 and 1729 in this burying-ground.

"The old burying-ground, adjoining the Willey tract was acquired from William Merritt and Margaret, his wife, by a deed dated in 1731, No. 1, p. 191. This was never recorded and no copy has thus far been found. It is referred to in ibid., No. 27, p. 39, as in existence in 1784. It is also mentioned in 1772, in an opinion of the congregation's counsel, as before him at that time, with a confirmatory deed of 1701 [see John Taber Kempe's opinion, MS. in Cong. Shearith Israel archives].

"Daly's statements [op. cit.] about the location of the burying-ground are nearly all from Valentine's Manual (1860), 547, 555-57, and ibid. (1866), 614-15. He did not know of the Merritt deed, and assumed that the land adjoining the Willey property was the 1655 grant by the Dutch. I have never been able to verify the statement that the Dutch grant related to this neighborhood, though both it and the Merritt land were 'outside of the city.' The Dutch grant was of the free land of the company, and could not have been at this location, which was all in the hands of private owners.—See Hoffman, Estate and Rights, II: 246-50. The Jews' petition (1726), and Kempe opinion (1772) make no reference to a Dutch grant.

"There is no record of a burial there prior to 1685, except an unauthenticated one of 1669, referred to in the article, supra, in Pubs. No. 18, where, in a list of names, that of Abraham De Lucenas is given as of 1669, that man being among the early arrivals in 1666; but I am skeptical as to that date, as I found in a MS. a reference to him as alive in 1784 (N. Y. Col. MSS., XXXV: 189, Albany), and am sure this name refers to the Jewish minister who died about 1762.

"As to the power of the congregation to sell (Daly notwithstanding), see Pubs., No. 21, 185-190, and Gomez v. The Traders' Bank, 4 Sandford's (N. Y. Supreme Court) Reports, 102. The congregation to quit its title, purchased the claims of the surviving trustee's heirs—a joint tenancy, under the old law, giving them the right under which they could acquire all claims against the property. Also, the congregation, by its act of incorporation of 1784, held the title of the church in perpetuity, as its property for ever in perpetuity, as its property for ever

In this year was made the Lyon Survey, or Bradford Map, the most important early engraved plan of the city, which it shows, in much detail, at the time of the granting of the Montgomery Charter (see summary under March 25). The plan is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 27. See also Pl. 26.

Although all likely available sources have been searched, no contemporary reference has been found to the making of this survey, or to the engraving of the plan, which was undoubtedly done in America. This silence is difficult to explain, as it seems highly probable that the plan, issued at this time, bore some official relation to the Montgomery Charter. It is also strange that it should not have been advertised by Bradford in his own paper.

Observe on this map that Markefield St. is so named, instead of Petticoat Lane as it was on the Miller Plan of 1695 (Pl. 25-a). See July 6, 1658.

Before this date, the laying out of Cherry St. was begun, and it had received its name, probably from the Cherry Gardens of Richard Sackett, on Cherry St. just beyond what is now Franklin Square.—Landmark Map Rep. Key, III: 996. See also May 28, 1790.

Before this date, Frankfort St. also was laid out. This street was named after the birthplace of Jacob Leisler. It was surveyed and regulated in 1761 (M. G. C., VI: 256); and was extended to Pearl St. in 1792 (Laws of N. Y., 1792, Chap. 49); and, further, to Skinner's St. (present Cliff St.) in 1795 (M. G. C., MS., No. 335, 335). See Pl. 174, Vol. III.

The former Van Cliff's Slip (see Aug. 9, 1692) is called Lyon's Slip on the Bradford Map. It was the subsequent Burling's Slip. See also May 5, 1776; March 2, 1744.

Before this date, Fletcher St. (between Maiden Lane and Lyon Slip) was laid out; although shown, it is unnamed on the Bradford Map. It was first mentioned as Fletcher St. in the records in 1736.—M. G. C., IV: 327. See Pl. 174, Vol. III.

For some time before this year, the Bowling Green Garden and tavern was a place of resort, refreshment, and entertainment, near the North River, in the western part of the block now bounded by Greenwich, Chambers, and Warren Sts., and West Broadway.—See Pl. 76, Vol. I. See also March 29, 1738; Landmark Map Rep. Key, III: 981, and 1750.

Before this year, the Countess Key Market had become known as the Fly Market.—See Landmark Map Rep. Key, III: 985, 986, citing Bradford Map; see also Sept. 6, 1699; Oct. 21, 1736.

The Carriovith View, published c. 1715, also shows the appearance of the city at about this time, with all its streets and principal buildings, to a point north of the Collect Pond. See Pl. 27-A, Vol. I.

The first stone-ware kiln or furnace in the United States was built in this year in the city. Clarkson Crolius wrote of it in 1842: "The lower part or arches are under the foundation of the house on the 5th lot from the corner of Centre and Reade Streets; the house is 17 feet wide. It was first called Corsellus' Pottery, afterwards Crolius' Pottery; what was called Potters Pump, celebrated for the purity of its water, was taken into the large well now used by the Manhattan Company for City purposes; it was at the foot of the hill called Potters Hill."—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), opp. p. 542, with sketch of the kiln.

In this year, or possibly a little earlier, Anthony Rutgers built his well-known mansion on the East River.—See Feb. 3, 1725.

Baltimore, Md., was laid out in this year by act of Assembly. Proceedings commence, and continue for nearly a year, to procure a new charter for the city. The common council appoints

A committee to consider provisions for a petition to Gov. Montgomerie "for his Majesties Grant of Confirmation of the Charter of this Corporation in the Royal Style and of all their Ancient Rights and Privileges thereunto belonging and for such Additional Grants, Endowments, and Privileges as Can be Obtained for the Advantages Good Rule & Government of the Inhabitants of this City."—M.C.C., IV: 4. This committee reported on March 29 its recommendations, and by motion approved of a copy of which said petition and report is hereunto annexed.—Man. Com. Coun. (1876), 600, citing Land Papers (Albany).

The other warrant was to Cadwallader Colden "to survey, for the Corporation of New York, 400 feet below low water mark, on Hudson's River from the West to the limits of the fort, from thence (leaving out, for the use of the fort, all the west side of the street that leads down to Whitehall) eastward along the East river, to the north side of Corlaser's hook."—Col. Land Papers, 194. This warrant is printed in full in Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 599, from the original in Albany.

Colden reported, on Sept. 2, that he had made the survey, beginning "at a certain place near High Water Mark on the South end of a piece of Upland which lies between the said River and a piece of Meadow Ground or Marsh being the first piece of Meadow Ground or Marsh near Hudson's River to the Southward of Greenwich, and from whence the said Bestavers Killitie runs into Hudson's River. From which place of Beginning to the South side of the said Street from before the Fort running South eighteen degrees thirty minutes west on a Straight line the Distance is One hundred and Twenty five chains by the usual breadth of four hundred foot from Low Water Mark into the River contains eighty two acres and one half acre." He also surveyed "The soil of the East River from the north side of Corlaser's Hook to Whitehall," and found it contained 127 acres.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 598, citing Land Papers (Albany). See also Gerard, Treatise on the Title of the Corporation and Others to the Streets, Wharves, Parks, Ferries, etc. (1786), 72–73. For Colden's payment for this service, see Sept. 15.

The above described territory is substantially that covered by the Lyne Survey or Bradford Map (Fl. 17, Vol. I).

On Oct. 15, 1730, "A Draft of the New Charter and Confirmation to this Corporation was read and Approved" by the common council, and the committee which had the management of it was instructed to have it "Engrossed finished & Complated and the Seal Affixed with all Expedition."—M.C.C., IV: 28.

On Jan. 14, 1731, the common council resolved to borrow £500 on interest for one year "towards defraying the Expense of procuring A New Charter," and a committee was appointed to procure it. At the same session the corporation resolved to "Address his Excellency the Governor for his great favours and Goodness Shew to this Corporation in Granting their Petition Ordering & directing his Majesties Letters Patent for A New Charter."—Ibid., IV: 35. The recorder was directed to prepare a draft of this address, and, at a meeting of the common council on Feb. 8, 1731, it was read and approved, and an order was made to deliver it "to his Excellency on the Receipt of the New Charter." It was entered in full in the minutes of that date.—M.C.C., IV: 37–38. Meanwhile, Gov. Montgomerie signed the charter on Jan. 15, 1731.—See Feb. 11, 1731.

The day chosen for the formal presentation of the charter by the governor, and the address of thanks from the city magistrates, was Feb. 11, 1731 (5 S.), under which date, in the Chronology, will also be found a digest of the contents of the charter itself.

The committee appointed on Aug. 3, 1730, to borrow £1,000 for use in procuring the charter reported on March 31, 1731, that this sum had been borrowed of James de Lacoe by Oct. 1, 1730; and May which had been made by the common council to the city to mortgage to him "the Lots of Land Lying on the West Side of the Dock between the Weigh House Street [the present Moore St.] and the Broad Way, from the Custom House Street [the present Pearl St.] four hundred foot into the East River beyond low Water Mark, and also the Road of land in the Bowery Division of the Out Ward, for one year from Oct. 1, 1730. It was therefore ordered that the mayor execute the mortgage, "the Lease to bear date this day and Release tomorrow."—M.C.C., IV: 45–46. On the same day (March 31, 1731 p.m.), the committee which was appointed on Aug. 13, 1731, to prepare a draft of the memorial for procuring the charter reported that they had obtained this amount from John Chambers, "at the usual Interest of Eight pounds 4s. The common council appoints a committee "to employ Workmen & Labourers and Agree for Materials for making a Peck on the West side of the Mouth of the Dock in such Convenient place as they shall see Needful concerning the further filling up [see July 5, 1738] of the said Dock." -M. C. C., IV: 11. On June 2, this committee reported that they had agreed with John Peak, a boatman, "to provide good and sufficient Wood of twenty foot long and to lay A Dock or Peerhead from the West part of the Great Dock into the River of forty foot long and twenty foot broad and twelve foot high in such A Convenient place as he shall be directed by the Corporation, the Said Peck to find all the Workmen and Materials to compleat the whole work at his own Charge." The specifications provided that the whare was "to be well laid and of good and sufficient Timber of about fourteen inches [wide] all of twenty foot long and to be well braced with Cedar Braces with good and sufficient Wall Plates upon the same at the Peer to be good and strong pieces for Tenders [faders] at two foot distance all Round the Peer." At the other part of the dock the tenders were "to Stand at six foot distance," and Peak was required "to load the same sufficient in each other, such as comodly. The work was to be finished by July 15, 1750, and the Corporation was to pay Peak £8215 on completion. The report was approved and the committee ordered to "direct where the said Peer head Shall be laid and see the same Completed according to the said Agreement." -Ibid., IV: 14-15. Peak was paid on July 15, 1750. (Not on the South West side of the Great Dock the same being Nine foot longer than was Agreed for by the Committee." -Ibid., IV: 25.

A petition of Augustus Jay is laid before the common council, reporting on the West side of the Broadway in the West Ward of this City the Petitioner is the lawful Owner and Proprietor of several Lots of Land lying between the houses of Mr William smith and that late of Charles Phillips whereon lately Stood several Old Tenements (formerly the Estate of Balthazar Bayard deceased), which the Petitioner Has been Caued to be pulled down in Order to Erect several Houses thereon which when finished will be A Beauty and Ornament to the said Street, and for as much as the foundation of the Old Buildings for about Sixty seven foot in length were Beveling and not upon A Straight Line with the Other Buildings on the Said Street which Rendered the Said Street uneven and Ugly. The Petitioner therefore Humbly prays that this Court will direct the surveyor of this City to Survey and lay out the said Street whereunto the aforesaid Lots front upon A Straight Line, Contiguous to the building of the Lots to the north of the said Lots and forthwith Intends to Erect for the Beauty and uniformity of the said Street, according to a survey laid before the common council - M. C. C., IV: 15-14. Mr. Jay built the final houses as known as Nos. 9 and 11 Broadway. They became the Atlantic Garden subsequent to 1756. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 976. This building was never Burns' coffee-house, as stated by Valentine in Man. Com. Coun. (1845), 424-45; ibid. (1858), opp. p. 278; ibid. (1865), 513-14. See also 1656, and April 30, 1745.

Valentine states that an order was given in 1734 (apparently in the foregoing connection) for levelling or straightening Broadway above the Parade. No such order at this time, besides that above mentioned, is recorded in the Minutes. He states that, on the west side of Broadway above Morris St. stood four old buildings, adjoining each, with, between them, turned gables facing Broadway, a sketch of which was attached to the order to show the straightening or levelling necessary at this point, and the consequent need of demolishing the buildings. The sketch is reproduced and the neighbourhood described in Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 514. The original order does not now appear to be in the city archives.

There is advertised for sale "a lot of land lying on the South side of Queens Street, part of the ground at the old Slaughter-house." -N. T. Gaz., June 18, 1750. This was the slaughter-house ordered removed by the common council in 1721. -M. C. C., III: 250-51. See Oct. 11, 1270.

In 1773, this refinery was turned into a tobacco factory. -Stevens, Progress of N.Y. in a Century (1876), 27. It was demolished about the time of the Revolution, and handsome dwelling-houses were built on Wall St., covering its site.

Gen., Aug. 3—Sept. 7, 1750. James Lyne was the surveyor whose name [Dutch] resolution was preserved by the city and made during this year.—See Pl. 27, Vol. I. In addition to the account of this engraver given in I: 257, mention should be made of his will, dated March 3, 1753, which was recorded at Trenton, N. J., Dec. 10, 1761, in Liber Will., II: 46.

In a petition to the king, Capt. Anthony Rutgers asks for a grant in fee simple of the Swamp and Fresh Water Pond adjacent to the Duke's Farm. This petition and so affidavit supporting it set forth the following facts: This property was granted by William and Mary, Aug. 9, 1694 (see under Sept. 20, 1694), to Capt. John Evans, his heirs and assigns. It is thus described: "beginning at a stake set in the ground on the South side of the said pond and at the North East Corner of the land belonging to the same, a line running along the south side of the said Swamp and pond by the Upland to the beach on the East side of Hudson's River so along the beach to the upland, thence crossing a small Gut of the said Swamp to the land on the East side thereof thence by the said land as runs to the Tan Yards, and said the said land where before contained in all seventy acres as by a survey then taken thereof appeared."

This grant to Evans was declared, on May 16, 1699 (q. v.), one of the extravagant grants, and was vacated, among others, by an act of assembly. It was further enacted that, in future, it should not be in the power of a governor to make a grant of "The King's Farme, the King's garden, The Swamp and Fresh water . . . for any longer than his own time in the Government."
December

Rutgers' petition further states that "the said Swamp is filled constantly with standing water for which there is no natural vent and being covered with bushes and small Trees, is by the stagnation and putrescence of its said water rendered exceedingly dangerous and of fatal consequence to all the inhabitants of the north part of this City bordering near the same, they being subject to very many deceases and distempers, which by all Physicians and by long experience are imputed to those unwholesome vapours occasioned thereby and as the said Swamp is upon a level with the Waters of Hackensack and the North Rivers, no person has ever yet attempted to clear the same, nor ever can under a grant thereof which is to expire with the next New Gov't; for the expense in clearing the same will be so great and the length of time in doing the same such that it will never be attempted but by a grantee of the Fee simple thereof, and as the same can be of no benefit until it is cleared, so no person hath hitherto accepted a grant of the said land on the terms in the said Act mentioned, but the same hath ever since lain and still remains unimproved and uncultivated to the great prejudice and annoyance of the adjacent farms particularly to a Farm of your Petitioner's adjoining thereto, which Your Petitioner after having been at a great charge and expense in settling, cannot prevail on any tenant to take the same or get any servants to continue there for any time while the said swamp remains in its present state...

"unless this swamp be drained and cleared it must for ever remain a Pest and public nuisance for the time to come as it hath done for 33 years past and as the City is now extended very near the borders of this Swamp and as the same continuing in the condition it now is may very prejudicially affect the labouring Men who dwell in the same vicinity to the Town near this Swamp where land is purchased at an Easy rate on account of this Swamp and which actually lose one third of their time in sickness, and your Petitioner being willing and desirous to be at the expense of draining and clearing the same on having a grant of the inheritance thereof your petitioner will most humbly prays" (the king) to grant him the "Fee simple and inheritance of the said Swamp." An order by the king in council referred the petition to the lords of trade on Jan. 28, 1731.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V. 914-18. An order in council was issued on Aug. 12, 1731, empowering the governor to grant a patent to Anthony Rutgers "for a certain swamp and fresh pond, called the Fresh water, adjacent to the Duke's farm upon New York Island, containing in all 70 acres."—Col. Land Papers, 198. A letter dated Dec. 5, 1732, entered in Trinity Minutes under date of April 25, 1733, refers to this order. Rutgers apparently did not receive this grant until two years later. On Nov. 1, 1735, a statute was passed repealing the law of 1699 (see May 16, 1699) so far as it related to the Swamp and Fresh Water.—Col. Laws N. Y., II: 283-25. This enabled Rutgers to take his grant from Gov. Cooby on Dec. 31, 1733 (q.v.).—N. Y. Col. Docs., V. 960-62. See April 6, 1735, for Rutgers' petition to drain this land into the Hudson. In this year, the French completed their fortress at Crown Point on Lake Champlain. See Dec. 3, 1730.

The City of New-York has now more as many Inhabitants as Philadelphia, and is a more delightful Place: The Gentlemen here are exceeded by none in Kindness and Civility to Strangers; the Country one of the pleasantest [sic] in the Universe; the Chime temperate, the Air serene; for except about the latter End of August and September, they have no Drizel, foggy or thick Weather; one of their Showers of Rain is generally over in two Hours, then are they blest with a clear Sky. Here are no Pithics or Consumptions, and so very few Physicians and Apothecaries that People live to a very great Age. They have very few Clergy, and are signal for their Morals and Beneficence."—The Importance of the British Plantations in America to this Kingdom, London, 1731 (attributed by Sabin to F. B.)

From this year, or the following, dates the engraved view of the New Dutch Church, and its immediate surroundings, on the corner of Nassau and Liberty Sts., drawn by Wm. Burgis, and reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 28. This is the earliest view we have, made within the city.

"A View of Fort George with the City of New York from the S. W.," drawn at about this period was engraved by I. Carvetham some years later. It is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 31.

The population of the city and province of New York, for the year 1731, is found in two contemporary records. One of these, entitled "Abstract of the Accounts of the number of Inhabitants of the several Cities and Counties in the Province of New York. Nov 2, 1731," and signed by Rip van Dam, gives the following figures: For the city, 7,104 whites, 1,577 blacks, total 8,681 for the province, 43,049 whites, 7,202 blacks, total 50,244.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V. 929. These same figures are found in an old MS. now preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. (in box labelled "New York, 1700-1760"). This shows the "Number of souls on the Island of New York as taken by the census of May, 1733." The other source of authority is a MS. bound with a volume of the printed Laws, Statutes, Ordinances... of the City of New York (N. Y., 1749), now in the N. Y. Pub. Library. It is called an "Acted" of the Number of Inhabitants in the Province of New York taken by order of The Honble Rip Van Dam Esq' President &c—finished the 27th October 1731." The figures of this record are: For the city, 7,025 whites, 1,577 blacks, total 8,622; for the province, 43,058 whites, 7,231 blacks, total 50,289. This account was printed by O'Cullaghan in Dio. Hist. N. Y., I: 471 (where an obvious typographical error occurs in the figures for the total number of whites in the province, but which has been corrected here).

The number of houses in New York City is estimated at about 1,400.—From old MS. bound with copy of the Laws, Statutes, Ordinances... of the City of New York (pub'd Jan. 27 and Feb. 1, 1748; and printed by Parker, 1749, in N. Y. Pub. Library (having the signature of Brandt Schuyler on title-page). In 1731 and 1732, the broad plaza known as Whitehall (see Marchvell, in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III 1005), was diminished by the laying out of a park bounded by the present Whitehall, Pearl, Moore, and Water Streets.—Later B. 9, 10 (in comptroller's office). For a view of Whitehall before it was thus diminished, see Pl. 25, Vol. I.

In this year, Adrian Bancker, silversmith, was admitted as a Freeman of New York. He continued his trade for about 50 years. Several specimens of his work are described in Mum. Museum of Art Cat. of Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1911), 9-11.

Two silver tankards, made by Peter Quintard, who was admitted as a Freeman of New York in this year, are described in Bid., 42-43.

1711 William Huerin, silversmith, was admitted as a freeman of New York in this year. He had an active part in the controversy which arose among the congregation of the French Church, in 1724, when the consistory dismissed the pastor, Rev. Mr. Row. For a short sketch of his life and a description of a porriolat made by him, see ibid., xxxv, 25-34.

Jan. 1 Janu de la Montagne is appointed door-keeper, bell-ringer, graeclegger, and watchman of the Dutch Church in Garden St., in place of his father, who has just died. His duties are prescribed in detail. Among these is the following: “You shall keep the bier in the shed made for it in the churchyard; and send it in due time to the house of the deceased.” Changes are prescribed for the various expenses of a burial. He signed his appointment on Oct. 12, 1739. — Eccles. Rec., IV, 2490-95.

13 The treasurer is ordered to pay John Cure for expenses of the corporation at his house “at the time of surveying the Boundaries of this City from Bestivers Killidie to the Fort and from Whitehall to Coliers hoop...” — M. 15 George Montgomerie is appointed to the new charter for the city, and it is attested by the attorney-general. — See summary of the proceedings to obtain the charter, under March 23, 1730, and digest of its contents, under Feb. 11, 1731.

Feb. 11 Gov. John Montgomerie formally conveys to the mayor and other city officials the so-called Montgomerie Charter (see PL. 50, Vol. IV); this was the third English charter of the city of New York, the first being the Nicolls Charter of 1665, and the second the Dongan Charter of 1686. The so-called Cornbury or Queen Anne Charter, of 1708, which referred only to ferries, is not included separately in this enumeration. The following account of the ceremonies is recorded in the Minutes of the Common Council:

“M. F. Mayor attended by M. F. Recorder the Aldermen Assistants High Sheriff, Chamberlain, Town Clerk, Coroner, High Constable Petty Constables & Other Officers of this Corporation at the hour of ten in the Forenoon... went in their formalities from the City Hall to his Majestys Garrison Fort George and there waited upon his Excellency John Montgomerie Esq’ Capl General and Governor in Chief of this Province in Council who then was pleased in the presence of this Court (the Representatives of this Corporation) to deliver unto Robert Roosevelt, Then Mayor of this Corporation his Majestys Royal and most Gracious Charter to the Mayor Aldermen and Commonalty of this City under the Great Seal of this Province and thereupon the Oaths Appointed by Act of Parliament to be taken instead of the Oaths of Allegiance and supremacy the Test and Abjuration Oath were Administered to the Said Robert Lurting Esq’ as Mayor, Clerk of the Market and Water Baylliff of the City of New York and one of his Majestys Justices of the Peace of the City & County of New York and also the usual Oaths of Office of Mayor Clerk of the Market and Water Baylliff and Justice of the Peace in the Presence of his Excellency the Governor and Council and in the Presence of all the Aldermen and Members of this Court.”

This “Court” then presents to the governor the address, which was read and recorded in the Minutes on Feb. 8, and which is again entered in the Minutes in full at this time. The governor replies: “I am very glad that it has been in my power to promote the Prosperity and interest of the City of New York which I believe I have Effectually done by now delivering to your Mayor the Kings Royal and most Gracious Charter. It gives me great satisfaction, my being fully Assured that the Officers Named in the Charter are respectful to the Towns and will do their duty, with a strict regard for his Majesties service and the good of the City.”

The mayor informs the governor that, pursuant to the authority granted to him under the charter he has appointed Elderman James Sharp as Surveyor of the city, and after appointment, “after drinking the Kings health His Excellency the Governors and Prosperity to the Corporation,” the city officials return to the common council chamber in the city hall, the mayor resumes the chair, and, as required by the new charter, administers the stated oaths appointed by parliament, “instead of the Oaths of Allegiance and supremacy the Test and Abjuration Oath,” to the various new city officials named in the charter, for the faithful execution of their offices; “and soon after the Court went down to the Entrance of the City Hall and after the Ringing of three Bells and Proclamation made for Silence Caused the said Charter to be published.”

On returning to the council chamber, it is ordered that the board return thanks “to Joseph Murray Esq’ Attorney at Law” for amending and completing the draft of the charter, “in which he has given us a lasting Instance of his great Learning Ability and Integrity in his Profession as well as for his Respect to this Corporation.” Thanks are also extended to Assistant Alderman John Chambers, attorney at law, “for his Great Care Diligence and solicitation he has been at in Assisting the Procuring Expediting and obtaining the Said Charter for the Seal.” A resolution is passed, also, to “Compliment” James de Lancy, Peter Warren (commander of H. M. S. “Sneley”), James Alexander, William Jamison, William Smith (attorneys at law), and John Avery with “the Freedom of this Corporation.” — M. C. G., IV, 37-44.

THE MONTGOMERIE CHARTER

The text of the Montgomerie Charter was not entered in the Minutes of the Common Council, as was that of the earlier charters. The original document, consisting of 53 paragraphs, with a large provincial seal attached, is still owned by the city, having been deposited for safe-keeping in the N. Y. Public Library by Comptroller Bird S. Coler in 1899, together with the Dongan Charter and several other public documents belonging to the city. The seal in that of the London firm from England in 1730. —See Dec. 24, 1790 and Doc. Hist. N.Y., Vol. IV. For reproduction of the Charter, see PL. 50, Vol. IV.

On April 15, 1751, an entry in the Minutes shows that William Sharpas, the city clerk, was paid £5, “by him dishar’d and paid to Mr. Abraham Lodige, for writing fair in a Book the Charter of this City for the use of the Corporation with Memorial Notes as Appears by his Acct which was Audited by this Court and Allowed.” — M. C. G., IV, 50. On July 15, 1751, Lodge was also paid £29110s., “in full of his Acct for writing and fair Copying a Petition to his Excellency, Engrossing the New Charter, thirty-five Skins of large parchment, Silk Laces and for fair Writing an Address to his Excellency as Appears by his Acct which is Audited & allowed.” On the same day John Roosevelt was paid “for a Tin box for the New Charter.” —Ibid., IV, 68-61. The charter was printed for the first time by John Peter Zeager in 1735 (see Oct. 25, 1734), on 16 leaves, folio.

The Montgomerie Charter not only grants additional privileges, rights, and estate to the city, but it is in its terms confirmatory of prior grants, and of the Dongan and Cornbury charters. It recurs in full these earlier charters, concerning the validity and force of which questions had arisen by reason of the diversity of the names of the grantees, and because prior grants and charters had been made in the names of the governors instead of the sovereigns, respectively. There was, therefore, question, as appears from the text of the charter, whether the city had been hitherto legally incorporated.

The charter recites the fact that since the granting of the Dongan Charter, in 1666 (p. v.), the citizens of New York have built at their own expense the “City Hall, and Goals, Rooms, and Places for the sitting of the Courts of Justice, and Chambers adjoining” five market-houses; “the crane and bridge; the common sewer leading through the great dore; a magazine, or powder house near the River Water; several other public buildings and conveniences; and the new ferry-house on Nassau Island, with barn and pound adjoining. It states that by the increase in buildings and population the city had become “a considerable sea-port, and exceedingly necessary and useful to our King and Kingdom of Great Britain, in supplying our Government in the West Indies with Bread, Flour, and other Provisions.” On this account the charter establishes the city as a body politic and corporate, under its former name of “The Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the City of New York,” with the right of personal succession, appointment, purchase, hold, and demise of seigniories, etc., in fee or otherwise.

It makes New York “a free City of itself;” with power “to sue and be sued,” etc., in all courts, “in as full and ample Manner and 1731 Form, as any of our other ledge Subjects of our said Province;" with power also to purchase and hold lands, tenements, goods, and chattels; and to use a common seal, or "break, change and new-make another common Seal, when, and as often as to them it shall seem convenient."

The boundaries of the city are specially fixed by the charter, as follows: "To begin at the River Creek, or Run of Water called Spyt den Duyn, over which King's-Bridge is built, where the said Run of Water passes to alter and roll into the North Side thereof, at Low-Water-Mark, and so to run along the said River, Creek, or Run, on Westchester Side, at Low-Water Mark, unto the East-River or Sound, and from thence to cross over to Nassau Island, to Low-Water-Mark there, including Great-Barn- Island, or the Slips; one and Marting Bay as far along all Nassau Island Shore, at Low-Water-Mark, unto the South Side of Red-Hook; and from thence to run a Line across the North-River, so as to include Nutten Island, Bedlow's Island, Bucking-Ham Island and the Oyster Island, to Low-Water-Mark on the West Side of the North-River, or so far as the Limits of our said Province extended there, and so to run up along the West Side of the said River, at Low-Water-Mark, or along the limits of our said Province, until it comes directly opposite to the first mentioned River or Creek, and thence to the Place where the said Boundaries first begin according to Governor Clinton's Explanation (1750), "Col. Montgomerie . . . erected the Town of New York, into a City and County, and extended their Jurisdiction to the West side of Hudson's River opposite to the Town."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VI, 575.

The boundaries of the seven wards are also prescribed by this charter,—the West, South, Dock, East, North, Montgomery, and Out Wards. Regarding the division of the city into wards, see Du Simitière's description of these boundaries according to landmarks standing at the time he wrote, in June, 1796, and with reference to the Bradford Map (Pl. 27, Vol. I), printed in full in I: 257-58. See also the division in 1683, prior to the Dongan Charter.—M. C. G., I: 112-13. The "Soil four Hundred Foot, beyond Low-Water-Mark, on Hudson's River, from a certain Creek or Kill called Bestaver's Killtie, southward to the Fort, and from thence, the same Number of Feet, beyond Low-Water-Mark, round the Fort, and along the East-River, as far as to the North Side of a certain Hill, called Corlaser's Hook," is specifically included in the grants conveyed by the charter, and also embraced in the description of the boundaries of the West, South, Dock, and East Wards.—See also Hoffman, Treatise on the Estates and Rights of the Corporation, 166-206.

The city government is established; officials are named, and their duties prescribed, with the manner of appointing their successors. For example, the governor is required to appoint the mayor, sheriff, and coroner, yearly. Freemen who are inhabitants and freeholders of each ward are to elect the aldermen and assist- ant aldermen for their ward, and are to elect two constables. However, in the Out Ward there are to be four assessors, two collectors, and four constables. As provided in the Dongan Charter (see Sept. 29, 1686), appointments and elections are to be held "on the Feast Day of St. Michael, the Arch-Angel," and the appointees, etc., are required to take oath of office on the 14th of October following. The common council is to consist of "the Mayor or Recorder, with four or more Aldermen, and four or more Assistants." They are given power to make "all such Laws, Statutes, Rights, Ordinances, and Constitutions, which to them or the greater Part of them shall seem "good, useful or necessary," but not repugnant to the laws of England or the province; and such laws are to remain in force for one year only unless confirmed by the governor and council of the province.

The following appointees are confirmed by the charter to be the proper persons: Robert Lutting, surveyor; Cornelius de Peyster, chamberlain and treasurer; Richard Nicols, coroner; Edmund Peers, high constable; and Robert Cranell, marshal; John Cruger, alderman, and John Moore, assistant, for the Dock Ward; Hermanus van Gelder, alderman, and John Cruger, recorder, for the West Ward; Col. Frederic Philipse, alderman, and Isaac de Peyster, his deputy; Gerardus Stuyvesant, alderman, and Samuel Kip, assistant, for the Out Ward; Anthony Rutgers, alderman, and Egbert van Borsom (van Borsum), assistant, for the North Ward; John Rosevelt (Roosevelt), alderman, and Petrus Rutgers, assistant, for the East Ward; Johannes Hudenbreeck, alderman, and Gerardus Beckman, assistant, for Montgomery Ward; constables, assessors, Feb. 11, and collectors are also named.

The common council is given full power to establish and operate ferries around Manhattan Island for carrying people, horses, cattle, and goods between Manhattan and opposite shores, to let or otherwise dispose of them, and receive all fees and profits arising therefrom. Power is also given to the common council to build, repair, and lay out bridges, lanes, highways, streets and alleys, and to raise and impose taxes for the same, and to take all necessary steps for keeping and preserving Markets, at the five several Places (in the said City of New York, on every Day in the Week throughout the Year, except Sunday), as follows, to wit. One Market at Counties-Dock; one other Market, at the Old-Slip, at Burgier's-Patit; one other Market at Coun- ties-Dock; one other Market at the Long-Bridge; and one other Market by the Long-Bridge; and as many more as the corporation may think fit to establish. (Gerard states that this authority to lay out streets, etc., "is one of a public character or direction, and not of private interest, involving ownership or franchise, and it has always been considered subject to legislative modification or control."—A Treatise on the Title of the Corpora- tion, 37.)

The charter confirms to "all and every the respective Inhabitants and Freeholders," and to "their several and respective Heirs and Assigns forever assigned," "all the Lands and Hereditaments" granted to them by former governors, lieutenant-governors, or commanders-in-chief of the province, or by any of the former mayors, etc., or by others having title under such grants, saving the quit-rents reserved by their grants. (These quit-rents, which were usually a merely nominal consideration in the early grants, have been extinguished, or are now extinguished by the commutation or by the operation of the statute of limitations, which commenced to run against quit-rents on Jan. 1, 1820."—Treatise on the Title of the Corporation, 37, citing Laws of N. T., 1815, Chap. 119.)

The charter further gives full power to the corporation to pur- chase and hold, in fee simple, any manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in or out of the city, not exceeding the "clear yearly rent or value of £1000," and this is to be without further letters patent or power from England's sovereign. But see Chancellor Kent, The Charter of the City of New York, with Notes thereon (1854).

Finally, the charter gives and confirms to the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of New York, and their successors forever, all public buildings and improvements, which the charter names in full; all the lands, ferries, docks, water-courses, etc., on Manhattan Island, including the soil under water 400 feet beyond low-water mark, between Beaver's-Killtie and the fort on the Hudson River, and between Corlear's Hook and Whitehall on the East River, as well as all the grants contained in former charters; exceptions being made, however, of silver and gold mines, Fort George and its grounds, the Governor's Garden near the English containing ground, the King's traffic, the King's and adjoining swamp, and certain rights reserved to other persons. About 824 acres are added to the city property by the 400-foot strip beyond low-water on the Hudson, and about 127 acres on the East River. The charter provides that the corporation shall not exercise its right to build wharves beyond low-water mark without the consent of persons who have prior grants of wharf-space. Space is reserved for exterior streets 40 feet wide, for the convenience of trade, and "to plant Batteries thereon, in Case of any Necessities."

All of these grants are made at an annual quit-rent of 30 shil- lings, "Proclamation Money, besides and over, and above the yearly Quit-Rent of one Beaver Skin, or the Value thereof," as provided by the Dongan Charter, and also the yearly quit-rent of five shillings provided by the Cornbury (or Queen Anne) Charter.

This charter, which begins with the name of "George The Second," as governor, closes with this paragraph: "In Testimony whereof, we have caused these our Letters to be Made Patents, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed, and the same to be entered of Record in our Secretary's Office of our said Province in one of the Books of Patents there remaining. Witness our trusty and well beloved John Montgomery, Esq. our Captain General and Governor of our said Province to the North, and the Province of New Jersey, and Territories depending thereon in America, and Vice Admiral of the same, &c, at our Fort George in New York, the fifteenth Day of January, in the fourth Year of our Reign." It is endorsed by a certificate of examination, Jan. 15, 1731, signed by R. Bradley, attorney-general, who states that it cor-
In accordance with the directions of the new charter, minor city officials—i.e., constables for all the wards, assessors for the Montegomery and Out Wards, and a collector for Montgomery Ward—having been elected, in obedience to warrants issued by the mayor to the aldermen, returns are made to the town clerk, and a list of those of the aldermen. Minutes of the Common Council. Such officials are to serve until Oct. 14, or longer, until successors are elected, in accordance with the provisions of the new charter. —M.G.C., IV: 44.

A public vendue is advertised to be held on March 24, at the Exchange Coffee House.”—N.T. Gen., March 1-9, 1731. This taverne stood at Broad and Water Sts. (see March 25, 1759). Numerous public vendues were held there in succeeding years.

"The Boston and Philadelphia Posts set out this day, in order to perform their Stations once a Week till the first of December next; and this Paper will come forth every Monday Morning during that time.”—N.T. Gen., March 1-8, 1731. Substantially the same advertisement made its appearance nearly every year at this season.

A Philadelphia writer says that inoculation for small-pox is beginning to spread. A Contant Advance on the foot of the Invoice (Exclusive of Commissions and Insurance),” payment to be made in nine months after delivery. The terms were accepted by the common council, and the committee was directed to give the order.—Ibid., IV: 56. See also an assessment levied May 25, 1731, for raising £300 for this purpose, showing the assessed valuation of the several wards.—Tax book (1721-25), 515, in comptroller’s office. The engines arrived Nov. 17 (q.v.), and on Dec. 1 a committee was appointed “to Employ Workmen to fit up A Convenient Room in the City Hall ... for securing the Fire Engines.”—M.G.C., IV: 122. On Aug. 17, 1723, De Lancey and his associates were paid £300, and the two fire engines were delivered to this Corporation and a bricklayer and a carpenter were paid for labour and materials “for Repairs lately done to the City Hall,” evidently to receive the fire-engines.—Ibid., IV: 149-50. Costello’s statement in Our Firemen, 23-24, that these engines were housed in two sheds in the rear of the city hall appears impossible of proof. See, on the general subject of fire protection, "The Sketch of the Origin of the Fire Department, of the City of New York, as at present organized," in Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 524-29.

Elizabethe Delamontegage, a widow, is paid £4 by the common council "for the Rent of her House and damages done to it, lately hired by her for a Watch House.”—M.G.C., IV: 55. On July 9, 1731 (q.v.), it was proposed to build a watch-house, and this was done.—Ibid., IV: 57. See also July 26, 1707.

A tax assessment shows the valuation of the several wards as follows: East Ward, £1,760; Dock Ward, £1,806; South Ward, £1,745; West Ward, £1,800; North Ward, £1,601; Montgomery Ward, £1,070; Bowery, £1,245; Harlem, £1,651. Tax book (1721-25), 515 in comptroller’s office. For the purpose of this assessment, see May 6.

Anthony Duane, of New York, merchant, and Alice, his wife, June come to Peter Warren, commander of H. M. S. July
Gov. John Montgomerie dies.—Assemb. Jour., 1: 623. Correspondence, 1: 133. The first order of business was the reading of the will of the late deceased at Fort George, on Thursday, July 1, and he was "interred in the King's Chappel on the evening of the Fryday following" (July 5).—N. E. Weekly Jour. (Boston), July 12, 1731; Boston News-Letter, July 8-15, 1731. James Alexander mentioned Montgomerie's death in a letter of July 5 to Cadwalalder Celden.—See Corden Papers (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc. No other particulars were published. See also "The City under Gov. John Montgomerie," in Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 179.

Rip van Dam provides at the meeting of the council. The commission and instructions of the late Gov. Montgomerie are read; it is ordered that a proclamation be issued announcing his death, and confirming all officers in their places. The council members not present are called to attend. The seal of the province, etc., are delivered to Rip van Dam, and he thereafter acts as governor until Cosby, the new governor, arrives. George Clark, Archibald Kennedy, James de Lancy and Charles Hunter, are directed to take an inventory of the governor's estate.—Cal. Coun. Min., 312; N. Y., Col. Docs., V: 921. See July 10, and Oct. 12. For the original manuscript catalogue of his effects, which were sold at auction, see July 26; also Fl. 31, Vol. IV.

An authoritative memoir of the life and times of Rip van Dam was written by Frederic de Peyster, when vice-president of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., and read before that society, Nov. 4, 1852, on the occasion of the presentation by him of the portraits of Rip van Dam and his wife. This was published, with reproductions of the portraits, in Mem. Coun. Coun. (1852), 720 et seq.

Rip van Dam is sworn in as president of the council; James de Lancy as second justice, and Frederick Philipse as third justice, of the supreme court.—Cal. Coun. Min., 312.

The common council resolves to build a watch-house (see May 6) "on the South side of the Cage in the Broad Streets." And a committee is appointed to determine the proper size, materials, and the expense of erection.—M. C. C., IV: 57. This committee reported, on Aug. 26, that they were of the opinion that the building should be 28 feet long and 18 feet wide, with two rooms, one 18 feet and the other 12 feet long, with fireplace in each, with two doors at the southeast corner, and one to the east side of the corner, and with three lights in the large room and one small one in the small room. The materials required were listed, and the total expense estimated to be $60. The committee was ordered to buy the materials, and employ workmen to build promptly "at the upper end of the watch-room near the City-town." On Nov. 18, it was paid for.—Ibid., IV: 76-77. For the exact location of this watch-house, see N. T. Post-Boy, Jan. 3, 1775, in which are advertised for sale two dwelling-houses belonging to the estate of the late Tennis Tiebout, "in Broad-Street, opposite the Watch-House;" see also the map of David Grim (Plate 72, Vol. I., showing the city as it was in 1742; also De Voe's Market Book, 260, showing that the watch-house stood above the Flattten Barrack Market, which was next to the Labyrinth, dwelling on the corner of Flattten Barrack St. (Exchange Pl.) A new watch-house was built, in 1775, at the south-east corner of Wall and Broad Sts. (No. 1 Broad St.), and the old one was taken down.—See June 3, 1791 City Directory, 1796; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 973. Alderman Philipse, on behalf of several leading merchants and residents of the South and Dock Women, presented to the common council a plan for extending the pier head on the south side of the great dock too farth eastward into the East River, and 40 feet wide, at their own expense, with the understanding that the city will repay the amounts thus advanced at the end of three years from the time of completing the work. The common council agrees to the proposal. Two or three hundred more than $300, and a committee is appointed to complete the arrangement.—M. C. C., IV: 57-58.

Letters of administration on the estate of the late Gov. Montgomerie, who died intestate, are granted to Charles Home.—Liber Wills, XII: 146. For inventory and sale of the personal estate, see July 26, and Pl. 31, Vol. IV.

Steps are taken for the further development of the west side water front. The common council directs the mayor to execute a grant to John Chambers of "his House and Lot of Ground now in the Occupation of Nicholas Van Taerlingh Situate on the West Side of the Broadway from the Said Broadway to High-water Mark on Hudson's River." It is also resolved to make a grant to him of "all the Ground under, and between the buildings of Fishmongers, Water Mark to Low Water Mark," 250 feet "into Hudson's River;" Chambers, his heirs and assigns to pay an annual rent of 25 shillings, or six pence per foot in breadth. He is required to leave "A Street of five and forty foot to breadth at the foot of the Bank the Center of which Street to be at high Water Mark, and also Another Street next and fronting Hudson's River of thirty foot in breadth," and he is required to "Dock or Wharf out" 240 feet "from High Water Mark into Hudson's River within five years from the date of the Grant, and in Default thereof to pay the Annual Rent of Nine pence per foot to this Corporation until he shall Wharf and make the said Streets."—M. C. C., IV: 64. The street 45 feet in breadth, here provided for, was the present Greenwich St., and the one 30 feet wide was Washington St. The lots in the possession of which Chambers was confirmed by this grant were those lying between the present Morris St. and Battery Place.—See grant to Chambers, recorded in Liber City Grand, No. 3, 1680.

26 Aug. Small-pox begins to spread in New York City. For some weeks there were but few deaths. As soon as burials increased, after Aug. 23, Bradford began with (issue No. 307) to publish each week in his Gazette a statement of the number of whites and blacks buried. From Aug. 23 to Nov. 15, a period of two months and three weeks, there were 478 whites and 71 blacks, or 549 in all— "N. Y. Gaz., Nov. 8-15, 1731. See Aug. 30.

A note from New York states that the only news is "the melancholy and less business.

In addition to the foregoing selected list, is the inventory of the library,—regarding which see June, 1732. See, further, Oct. 11, 1731; and Sept. 4, 1732.

25 A Person has four hundred Pounds to put at Interest. Another has Fifty Pounds to put out on good Money." Described by Gen., Aug. 16-23, 1731. In the city's annals, up to this time, there had been no evidence of the existence of private bankers. The business of this loan agent is the nearest approach to it. Richard Nicholls was also post master.—Ibid., Nov. 15-22, 1731.

Nearly ten years have elapsed since the last meeting of the assembly, Oct. 29, 1730. At that time, it was adjourned to meet in March, but was postponed by several proclamations of Gov. Montgomery. The governor died on July 1, 1731, and no business meeting of the assembly was held until Aug. 25. The members meet on this day at the house of Hannah Rutgers "in the Bowry lane" (see Cal. Coun. Min., 313), near "the Fresh Water."—Assembly Jour., I: 623. See. Lyr. Coun., I: 605. In the preceding May, "Capt. Fred" was reported to have brought from Jamaica negroes who had the small-pox (Cal. Coun. Min., 312). The disease spread (see Aug. 1731), which doubtless accounts for the unusual place of this meeting.

The assembly meets in Rutgers' house, and, at the same time, the council, with its president, Rip van Dam, meets at "the House where Capt. Kippen or Kippen now lives," and to this house the assembly is summoned to hear the message of the president. The assembly then returns to the Rutgers house.—Assembly Jour., I: 623. The location of the Kippen house (evidently a rented one) is not readily ascertained, if it is to be found of record. The assembly continued its sitting there until Aug. 31, when it adjourned to meet in the assembly chamber in the city hall. This was due to the fact that a rumor was in circulation "that a person is seized of the Small-Pox, in the very House they now sit in," and because "the Members who have not had that Distemper (being above one third of the whole Number) are determined not to appear any more in the House during this Session."—Ibid., I: 624-25. On Sept. 50, Rip van Dam again adjourned the assembly because of the small-pox, and the Proceedings have now "spread amongst us," and such adjournments were repeated later, both by him and the newly-arrived governor, William Cosby, until Aug. 9, 1732.—Ibid., I: 635.

The common council appoints a committee to "Cause A Strong Goal to be made at the West End of the Said City Hall on the upper floor thereof and the Other Goals of this City to be Enlarged Strengthened and Amended as to them Shall appear needful."—M. C. C., IV: 66. See April 25, 1737.

The assembly decides to defer consideration of matters before it because meetings of the house have grown "very thin, and more likely to grow thinner than fuller, by reason that the Small-Pox are very frequent in the City of New-York, a Distemper which at least 9 of the Members never had."—Assembly Jour., I: 614.

Several letters from New York states that the only news is "the melancholy, or rather less business.

Several letters from New York states that the only news is "the melancholy, or rather less business. In these comparatively quiet conditions, the letter continues: "The Markets begin to grow very thin; the Small Pox raging very violently in Town, which, in a great measure, hinders the Country People from supplying this Place with Provisions. I have not yet heard that any Persons have gone out of Town for Fear of it. The last week, they began to inoculate; which Practice I have some reason to believe will very much be followed: The Distemper has been a long time very favourable, but now begins to be of the Conflagrant Kind and very mortal."—Upcott Collection, in N. Y. Hist. Soc., I: 113. See Aug. 1731.

Green calls this the "Earliest Medical Tis Sate Printed in this Country," and says that a second edition was printed in 1702. Dr. Matther was the author of a broadside, printed at Boston in November, 1721, which gives "Several Reasons proving that Inoculating or Transplanting the Small-Pox is a Legal Practice, and that it has been blessed by God for the Saving of many a Life. . . ." Rev. Cornelius van Schil, of Poughkeepsie, writing on May 3, 1772, to Messrs. Van de Wall, Beels, etc., of Amsterdam, said in regard to his visit to New York in September, 1731, that "there on July 9 for building a watch-house "to Cause the Cage Stocks and Pillory to be Erected on the North side thereof."—M. C. C., IV: 69. See Feb. 19, 1720.

The Small Fox Fever and Flux prevails very much in this City. So many children and grown persons are dying that the country people are afraid to come to town. This makes the "Markets thin, Provisions dear" and deadens all trade. Contributions have been requested for the relief of the poor.—From N. Y. news in N. E. Weekly Jour. (Boston), Oct. 4, 1731.

The number of deaths in New York for the week ending Oct. 11 is "37 Whites, whereas 61 dyed of the Small Pox, most of them Children. Blacks 9, whereas 8 dyed of the Small Pox." The school of Edward Gatehouse suspends because most of his pupils are ill (N. T. Gaa., Oct. 14-11, 1731), and the supreme court adjourns because of the seriousness of the epidemic.—Cal. Coun. A public auction is advertised, to take place on Oct. 12, of additional personal effects of the late Gov. Montgomery (cf. July 26), which are to be seen at the foot. the subject, see Dec. 31, 1675.

"A Law regulating the Publick Markets within the City of New York," as established at this time (revising the law of 1684,
q. qv. as continued in the Dongan Charter), concerning market days, etc., provides: "Forasmuch as the Markets of this City of New York are Chiefly Supplied by the Country People with Provisions and Vegetables by Water Carriage from the Neighbouring Counties and Colonies at Different times and seasons, as the Tides, Winds and Weather will permit, by Reason whereof no Certain Times or Days Can Conveniently be appointed for holding the said Markets, without Manifest Hurt and prejudice as well to the Inhabitants of the said City as to the Country People who frequent and supply the said Markets," it is ordained that "That Every day in the Week (Sundays Excepted) be and are hereby Appointed Publick Market Days within the said City, from Sun Rising to Sun Setting, where the Country People, and Others Resorting to the said Markets may stand or Sit, and Vend their Flesh, Fish, Poultry Herbs, Fruit, Eggs Butter Bacon and Other such like Provisions and Commodities on Every Working Day in Every Week in the Publick Markets hereafter Mentioned (viz.) at the Market House at the Slip Commonly Called Counties Dock, at the Market House at the Slip Commonly Called Butter's Path, at the Market House at the lower End of Wall Street Commonly Called Wall Street Market House, and at the Market House at or Near Countess Key Commonly Called Countesse Slip [the Fly Market] which are hereby Appointed to be Publick and Common Markets within the said City." This law also provides that (as "the Market is most Principally Intended for the Benefit of House Keepers, who buy for their own use") "the Hucksters and Retailers within this City, who buy to Sell again, shall not Enter into any of the afore said Markets . . . until the Afternoon of Every day, to the End that House Keepers may provide themselves in the Foresoon of Every Day at the first Day, and pay and deliver Rates for their Provisions." It is also provided that persons shall not buy provisions before they reach the markets. Other regulations relate to pure food, weights and measures, clock's fees, etc.—M. C. C., IV: 109—110. This law was re-enacted with additions on Nov. 4, 1735.

"There are thirty ship, newspapers are received from London containing a report (of Sept. 4) that Col. Paget, brother of Lord Paget, was esteemed most likely to receive the commission of governor of New York, to succeed Gov. Montgomery.—Ibid. See, however, Jan. 12 and April 24, 1732.

The common council appoints a committee "to Employ Workmen to fit up A Convenient Room in the City Hall . . . for securing the Fire Engines" (see summary under May 6).—M. C. C., IV: 122. See Dec. 6, 14, and 21. "Thomas Mayes, 'Victualler,' is paid "for Six Months Rent for the use of his Cellar for the Watch of this City, before the Building of the Publick Watch House."—M. C. C., IV: 121. See July 9.

The fire-engines which arrived Nov. 27 (q. v.), the first in the city, are on this day for the first time put to use at a fire, which occurs at "a Journeys House in this City," and which began "in the Garret when the People were all asleep," and "burnt violently." The fire "was distinguished after having burnt down that House and damaged the next."—Boston News-Letter, Jan. 6, 1732.

A Law for Establishing and Better Ordering the Night Watches" is passed by the common council, and published. It is entered in full in the Minutes. The inhabitants of each of the six wards of the City who are suitable to watch are to be listed, and eight of them (or as many more as the mayor and the aldermen may decide from time to time) are required to serve every night with one constable. Their duties are defined in detail. A supervisor of the watch is appointed by this law, R. Crannell, the city marshal, being the first man named to hold this office.

The reason assigned for the passing of this ordinance, for the peace and safety of the city, is that of late years there have been great numbers of persons "privately Courting to the city, some of whom are suspected to be Convict Felons Transported from Great Britain."—M. C. C., IV: 122—28. For a later ordinance of the same character, see Dec. 21, 1745; for earlier reference to night watchmen or "bellmen," see April 20, 1714.

The consistory of the Dutch Church decides that "After the roof of the Old Church [in Garden St.] is glazed the Church Masters shall see that the Old Church is furnished with a new roof."— Eccl. Rec., IV: 295, following the English translation made from the Dutch Church minutes by Rev. Talbot Williams, D. D., and preserved in the archives of the church.
The subject of fire-prevention is considered at length in the Gazette. A fire on the night of Dec. 6 (q. v.) showed "the good Effects of a timely Provision of the Magistrates against Fire," by "the Water-Engines extinguishing it with so little Damage, when there was so great a Probability of its spreading." Nevertheless, many recommendations are advanced. Not half the houses in town are provided with fire-buckets. Chimneys ought to be inspected often. Regulations are waiting for the quick supply of water to the engines. It is observed by that "the greatest Part of this City lies upon a Descent, the Water of all the Wells and Cisterns in the Places higher than where the Fire happens, and which have a Descent to that Place, may be made to run to the Engines of itself, where it may be dam'd up by digging of the Streets, or with Cloaths, Bedding, Ashes, Stones, Bricks, Rubbish, or any Thing that comes to hand, and the Sucker being put into that Dam, the Engines I believe may that way only be plentifully supplied with Water in above one half of the City."

It is also proposed that the use of shingles and boards for covering houses be discontinued, and the making and using of pantiles, slate, and bricks for building and covering houses be encouraged.

In the highest places in the city, "some wide and some deep Wells ought to be made on Purpose, for yielding a great Quantity of Water in case of Fire, which, by the Help of one of the Engines in digging the them, to take off the Water as it springs, can now easily be dug to any Depth less than the Length of the Suckers of the Engines." There are other considerations in a similar vein.—N. Y.

New-York, Makes and Teacheth the following curious Works, viz.

Work, and Raising of Paste, as also to Paint upon Glass, and Trans-at the present No. 47, 49, and 51 Maiden Lane, near William St. This early Queens Head Tavern was therefore in the immediate vicinity of William St. and Maiden Lane. This is the only record of this tavern, it evidently had a short existence.

In a letter to the lords of trade, Pres. Van Dam states that the

To discharge its debts, the city sells seven lots, and they are bought by prominent merchants for $1,344—M. C. C. IV: 134, 137, 138. These lots consist of two blocks, bounded by the present Moore, Whiteshall, Pearl, Water, and Front Streets, where a portion of the old dock had stood. For summary of events connected with this transaction, see July 22, 1731.

The Church Farm is leased by Trinity to Cornelius Coine, for a term of ten years, at $235 yearly, excepting Capt. Degroove's roape-walk.—Sandford, Chantry Rep., IV: 693.

The following description gives a glimpse of the rural topography of the upper part of the island at this time: "In the Out-Ward of the City of New York, near to the Seat of Mr. De Laney, called Bloomendal, there is to be Sold a Plantation with a very good stone House, Barn, and Orchard, containing about four or five hundred Apple Trees, and a Pair Orchard, with a great many fine Grafted Pairs. The Land is very well Timber'd and Watered; it has a very fine Brook very convenient for a Fish Pond, containing about Two Hundred and sixty Acres of Land and six Acres of Meadow, situate lying and being nearest to the River, and every piece of ground in the above advertisement, appears to be applied to the De Laney property, it is rather intended to mean the location generally. Regarding the origin and meaning of the name, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, Ill: 986; and Wilson, Mem., Hist. N. T., Ill: 171. Bloomendal—'valle of flowers'—was the name applied to this part of the upper west side of Manhattan by the early Dutch settlers; whereas the estate of De Laney was not acquired by Etiene de Laney until 1735. It had been the immense Somerendyck Farm, which stretched from the present 57th St. to 70th St., and from the line of the Common Lands to the Hudson River. The west line of the Common Lands is delineated on Pl. 177, Vol. III, and ran along the eastern boundary of the Somerendyck Farm, at or near the line of Seventh Ave., the modern streets and avenues being obliterated by Central Park."

The council receives a letter from William Cosby (appointed governor of New York), relating to the pay of the independent companies.—Cal. Coun. Min. 316. This appears to be his first official communication; he did not arrive in New York until Aug. (q.v.)

Gov. Montgomery's library is sold at auction, a catalogue of June the books having been printed, and placed for inspection at the Coffee House.—N. Y. Gaz., May 8-15, 1732. It was one of the largest private libraries in the colonies prior to the Revolution.—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 503-4. The manuscript inventory of Montgomery's estate, including the library, is preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See July 16, 1731. In this inventory are 1,544 volumes. The titles include works of literature, biography, history, geography, travel, philosophy, theology, etc. Works of music include "Art of Governing by Parties, Letters from the Dead, English Petticoats, Transactions of the World in the Moon, New Manner of Fortifying, and Province Laws of New York. On July 26, 1731, Cornelius van Horne received a water grant for two parcels, lying between Coenties and Old Slip.—Liber City Grants, B: 125-32 (crown's office). The new Dock St. wharf ran Pearl St. was then Dock St.). See Pl. 27, Vol. I, where the wharf is of 11 & 12 his Excellency walked to the city hall, (a Company of Halleriors & a Trew of Horse marching before, and the gentlemen of his Majesties Council, the Corporation, and a great Number

Soon after Cosby's arrival, Cadwallader Colden, the surveyor-general delivered to him an extended narrative relating to land grants and quit-rents in the province of New York. The methods of English governors after 1664 were described; and particular attention was given to an account of the great grants of from 50,000 to 1,000,000 acres of unpatented lands. He suggested remedies for the abuses which he described, by applying quit-rent charges against all the lands in the province, including the town lots of New York City and Albany. This would yield as much as £4,000 a year under the support of the government.—From Man. Com. Coun. (1851), 454 et seq., citing the original, which is still preserved with the Golden Papers in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. On May 6, 1752, Colden append a memorandum to his draft of the memorial, saying "I question whether ever he read it. I have reason to think he gave it to the person in whom he then confided who had no inclination to forward the purpose of it. It had no other effect than to be prejudicial to myself."

The common council, on Aug. 3, ordered that an address of welcome to Gov. Cosby be prepared, and that he be presented with the freedom of the city, having its seal in a gold box. At a dinner in his honour, on August 9, the presentation was made and the address delivered. This address, which is entered in full in The Minutes, includes the statement: "As Trade is the Support of this Colony and this City the Center of that Trade we hope your Excellency will Countenance and Protect us in the Enjoyment of all our Rights and Privileges."—M. C. C., IV: 147-8.

CHRONOLOGY: THE ENGLISH PERIOD: 1664-1763

On being informed that Lord Augustus Fitz Roy, son of the Duke of Grafton, the lord chamberlain of England, has arrived at the fort on a visit to the governor and his family, the common council resolves to wait on his lordship, and present him with the keys of the town, with the city seal "Inscribed in A Gold Belt with the Arms of this City Engraved thereon."—M. G. C., IV, 161. Three days later the members of the common council and the principal officers of the city regiment were introduced to his lordship "at his Majesties Garrison." After the reception, Francis Harison, in a speech to the corporation, had delivered "A Very Elegant Speech on the Occasion," the mayor presented his lordship with the copy of his freedom.—Boston News-Letter, Nov. 16, 1731. The text of the freedom is printed in full in the Minutes, and certifies that "Augustus Fitz Roy is hereby Admitted Received and allowed a Freeman and Citizen of the said City of New York. To Have, Hold, Enjoy and Partake of all and singular the Advantages, Benefits Liberties Priviledges Franchises Freedoms and Immunitiess whatsoever Granted or belonging to the same City to him and His Heirs for ever."—M. G. C., IV, 162. Lord Fitz Roy afterward married the governor’s daughter.—Man. Com. Coun. (1565), 536.

Rip van Dam, president of the council, is ordered to refund half the salary he has received. He refused to do so, and, on Nov. 29, the attorney-general was ordered to commence suit.—Col. Coun. Min., 318. Gov. Cosby claimed this sum for himself, and appointed three assessors as an equity court for the trial of Van Dam's suit, contrary to precedent, and Chief-Justice Lewis Morris gave the opinion that the governor did not possess the power to create an equity court. Though Morris was overruled by his two colleagues, no final decision was ever rendered in Van Dam's case. As a result of this trial, Gov. Cosby removed Morris from the office of chief-justice, and the latter became an active leader of the "Anti-Court Party," which already contained such opponents of the governor as Rip van Dam, James Alexander, and William Smith.—Wilson Mem. Hist., N. Y., II, 414-15. See June 19, 1734. For a concise account of the Cosby-Van Dam controversy, see Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 732-25.

"This Board being Informed that Mr. Cornelius Coyn is the present Tenant of the Churches Farm had been forbid by the Receiver General from paying the rent to any other person than himself, he alledged that the said farm did belong to the Crown, and this Board having some reason to suspect that there May be some persons endeavouering to that or may Endeavour to disturb them in the quiet and peaceable possession and Enjoyment thereof, it is unanimously resolved that the Rector the two Church Wardens Mr. Moore Mr. Micrengro, and the Clerk of the Vestry or any four of them be a Committee to Enquire in the Town of Trustees for the possibility of the said information to be the Board, and take such proper and effectual measures for confirming and securing the Churches Right and title to the Said Farm as they shall seem requisite & Convenient."—Trin. Min. (1735).

The council orders a proclamation to be issued for the discovery of those who started a Corporation which the governor intends to seize the property of the Dutch Church in New York.—Col. Coun. Min., 318.

The governor's council establishes a court of exchequer.—Col. Coun. Min., 318.

The following letter of this date, is taken from the "Proceedings of the Committee of the [Trinity] Vestry appointed on the Twenty Second day of November last relating to the Church's farm, &c."

"My Lord [Bishop of London]

"We the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestry of Trinity Church, doe with the greatest Submission and sense of Duty, Humbly beg leave to address your Lordship, and implore your patronage and assistance in an affair, the Consequence of which will most sensibly touch and affect the Interest and welfare of our Infant Church. Be pleased, then my Lord to permit us, to represent unto your Lordship, that we have for Seven or Eight and twenty years past been possessed of a Certain farm & Garden in this City, by virtue of a Grant under the Seal of the province, from her late Majesty Queen Anne [see Nov. 21, 1705], which brings in about five and twenty pounds Sterling per Annum, Out of which we pay Yearly to the Corporation of this City Currency for our Ministers House Rent, besides the considerable Expenses we have been at from time to time in making and repairing the fences, and building a farm House thereon, the which with the farm, we have lately Leased out for a

And altho' we are advised that the abler Lawyers here that our Said Grant is good and valid, Yet hath it been Rendered disputable first by a Bill in Chancery's having been preferred against us in Governor Huntters time, and Secondly by the continual menacing of our Tenants by his present Majestys Receiver General, as will fully appear to Your Lordship, by a draft that is sent him and Short State of the Case here-therewith Transmitted and humbly offered to Your Lordship's consideration. We also send Coppys of the Acts of Assembly and other things referred to, in the State of our Said Case, Certified under our Corporation Seal: And desires Your Lordship that you will favourably be pleased on this important occasion, to vouche the partial Care & power. full Inuence in behalfe of our Church, by causing able Council to be advised with, and applying to our most gracious Soveraign for his Royal Grant & Confirmation unto us of our said farm and Garden under the Broad Scale of England, or by such other ways as your Lordship in your great wisdom shall think most proper; for my Lord as one Mr Anthony Rutgers of this place has lately obtained an order from his Majestys to the Governer here for granting him a Swamp which lies contiguous to our Said farm, and is mentioned in the Vacating Act of Assembly taken notice of in our Said Case, and under the greatest apprehension from the Threats in the affidavit mentioned &c. that some persons may aim at the same thing in regard to our farm, or perhaps they may endeavour to obtain a Grant at home, which will instil Law Suits upon us and our Successors, and it may Involve us into much greater difficulties than we shall be able to encounter, to prevent which and in as much as the Said farm and garden are the Chiefest part of our Churches revenue and Estate, We humbly presume you will not think us forward or troublesome, if we intrest the favour of your Lordship. —Trin. Min. (MS.), under date of April 25, 1733.

Papers attached to this appeal show the various grants, acts of assembly, and other transactions affecting the rights of the “farm and Garden” prior to Dec. 5, 1732. The same appeal is among the Fullam MSS. belonging to the See of London, and was transcribed by Rev. Francis L. Hawks, D.D., in 1856, his copy being filed with the Hawks MSS. in the Church Mission House, N. Y. City. For the series of laws-suits foretold by this letter, and other affairs connected with the parish rights and property of Trinity Church, which are now part of the city's history, see Trinity Church Pamphlets, Collected for the Corporation, 1557.

The letter of Dec. 5 closes thus: “But nevertheless it has been often asserted that inasmuch as her Said Majestys was pleased to disallow the Repealing Act [see June 26, 1768], and to approve of the Vacating Act aforesaid [see May 16, 1699], That the Grant made to the Said Rector and Inhabitants in the intermediate time, is thereby rendered Void and of none Effect, it being provided by the Said Vacating Act that the Governer should have it in his power to Grant or Lease the said farm or Garden for any longer time than for his own Government, But "It is to be noted that by the Kings Commission and Instructions to the Governers of this Colony all Laws made here are to be Transmitted for the Royal assent, and to be and Continue in force here, from the time of their publication until disallow'd by the King at home. "Which are the most proper And effectual Measures for the said Rector and Inhabitants to take, in order to Obtain his most Sacred Majestys Grant & Confirmation to them of their said farm and Garden, so as to render their right thereto Indisputable. 1756 With the help of his partner, William Ball, the first used on Dec. 6, 1731 [see Dec. 21, 1731], a fire is extinguished which destroys a dwelling-house and damages the one next to it.—N. Y. news in Boston News-Letter, Jan. 6, 1732.

Cosby reports to the lords of trade that "the Inhabitants here are more lazy and unactive than those in the world generally...that the manufactures extends no further than what is consumed in their own Family", a few course Lindsey woolseys for clothing, and linen for their own wear."—N. Cosby advises the removal of James Alexander from the council of New York province, who, “during the President Van Dam’s Administration sway’d him in every thing that was irregular and since has clog’d and perplexed everything with difficulty’s that related to the Crown”, etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., V. 939. See The Vindication of James Alexander, printed by Zenger, 1733 (error for 1743), in N. Y. Pub. Library; also Aug. 24, 1735.

1773 The common council pays Alexander Malcolm, master of the Apr. public high school in New York City (Col. Laws N. Y., V., 811), his first quarter's salary ($60); also Anthony Lamb, the first over- seer of the fire-engines, $53, as his first quarterly salary.—M. C. G., IV, 174, 175. See May 6, 1753; May 5, 1737. Malcolm's school formed the "germ" of Columbia University.—See Dec. 6, 1746; Pratt, Annals of Public Education (1873), 124-25.

In a petition to the common council, Anthony Rutgers states the "he has recently obtained aforesaid Majestys Grant and Letters Patent for the Swamp near fresh Water," that he has "Caused the Brush on a great part thereof to be Cut down;" and that he intends "to Clear the whole and drain the same, which when perfected, is believed will greatly Contribute to the health of this City and all the Inhabitants thereof dwelling Contiguous thereunto." As he "cannot Effectually drain the same" and "Hudsons River as low as Water Mark," he asks the corporation to permit him "to place such Drain from the Petitioners Land into Hudsons River aforesaid as low as Water Mark, with Liberty to Fence and Guard the Said Drain a/f the Violence of the Ice & Storms So as to Render the same usefull for the Fresh Water Food," see Dec. 31, 1733.

At some time between April 6 and Dec. 31, 1733, Anthony Rutgers built at Greenwich St., north of Canal St., a bridge across the drain which he constructed this year to carry off the water from the Fresh Water, and then, with the two two impingements. As shown in his petition to the common council on April 6, he anticipated the king's grant of Dec. 31. The bridge later became known as Lispenard's Bridge. On Sept. 15, 1786 (q. v.), the common council ordered that it be rebuilt. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 196; N. Y. Chron. Cents. (1816), 442.

A committee of the common council is appointed "to lay out the Ground at the lower End of the Broadway near the Fort for a Market, to contain the Dimensions therein described, and the breadth of the Streets on all sides. That the same be leased to Mr. John Chambers & Mr. Peter Bayard and Mr. Peter Jay for the Term of Eleven years for the use aforesaid and not otherwise, under the Annual Rent of A pepper Corn."

The following account, derived wholly from the Minutes of the Common Council, is a condensed history of an effort for nearly 40 years to secure action by the city authorities toward building a much-needed market-house. Certain freethinkers and residents of the Ward presented a petition to the common council, stating that "Great Numbers of Farmers and other Persons from the Jersey side and up the North River do frequently Land (with their Grain and other Provisions for the Market) at Thurman's Slip which is a Very Convenient Landing, but for want of a Publick Market House there they are very often put to Considerable Expences and great Inconveniences for Storing and Carrying their Goods for Sale, etc. They ask the board's permission "to Erect and Build by Voluntary Contributions a Publick Market House in some Convenient place in the said Slip." The permission is granted, and a committee appointed "to direct the same to be made and Erected," 1770-72. N. Y. Gaz., May 31, 1771.

The proprietors of a tract of land called Whitefield, having decided to partition the land, are notified to meet “at the House of Mr. Morgan in the Commons at New-York” on this date.—N. Y. Gaz., July 23–29, 1733. Morgan was not one of the patentees, and in all probability had a public-house, but its location is not known.

Cosby delivers to James de Lancy a commission appointing him chief-justice in place of Lewis Morris.—Cal. Coun. Min., 319. On Aug. 27, Morgan wrote to the lords of trade objecting to his removal on the ground that Cosby had not asked the advice of the council, and on further constitutional and legal grounds. In this document he described the manner in which New York governours, in former times, derived private profit while in office. He accused Cosby of declining to make any grants of land “unless he comes in for one third of them.” He recommends the establishement of a “Court of Exchequer with proper Officers for the management and disposition of the King’s lands and rents.” Other charges against Cosby’s integrity and ability were contained in Morgan’s plea. In a postscript, of Sept. 1, he added that when the superseded was sent to him on Aug. 29, he was at his house, “about ten miles from New York.” He stated that he was informed that his removal from office “created so great a dissatisfaction, that a more universal one was never known in this part of the world.” He submitted to the lords of trade the query whether his “Patent under the Great Seal” was not “tantamount” to the governor’s right to dispose him.—N. Y. Col. Doc., V: 951–55. But the latter document entitled The Case of Lewis Morris, Esq: Late Chief Justice of the Province of New York, Who was Removed from the said Office by his Excellency William Cosby, Esq: Governor of the said Province. To demonstrate the “Great Deference” which the corporation of the city entertains of Gov. Cosby, the common council orders that his brother, the Hon. Maj. Alexander Cosby, lieutenant-governor of the garrison of Annapolis Royal, and Gov. de Benison-in-law, Thomas Freeman, be presented with the freedom of the city, with the seal of each freemen “Induced in A silver Box, Guilt, with the Arms of this City Engraved thereon.”—M. C. C., IV: 196.

The common council appoints a committee “to give Publick Notice that this Corporation will dispose of the Vacant Lots in the Swamp Commonly Called Beckmans Swamp, and to receive Proposals of any Person or Persons who are willing to purchase the same, and to Report upon what Terms this Corporation may Conveniently dispose thereof for the Publick benefit.”—M. C. C., IV: 190. On March 23, 1734, another committee was required “to Enquire into the Pretensions of the Heirs of Mr Jacob Leisler to the Swamp or any part thereof Commonly called Beckmans Swamp: and what will be the most proper Measures for this Corporation to take for the disposal of those Lots in the Said Swamp.”—Ibid., IV: 207. On June 29, 1734, it resolved “that the Swamp in Montgomery Ward within this City Commonly Called Beckman Swamp or the Cripple Bush be Granted and Released to Mr Jacobus Roosevelt for the Consideration of two hundred pounds (including One hundred pounds he hath already paid to this Corporation for ten Lots. A part thereof, some years ago, for which he had no deed or Conveyance) and that the same be Granted unto him and his Heirs and Assigns for Ever (that is to Say) all the Right Title and Interest which this Corporation hath to the Said Swamp and not Otherwise, without any Other Warranty, and that the Mayor, Recorder, Grant and Release for the same under the seal of this Corporation.”—Ibid., IV: 211. The grant was made on July 26.—Liber Deeds, B: 151. See also the Landmark Map Ref. Kcy, III: 967.

Cosby reports to the lords of trade regarding the acts of assembly passed at the last session. Among these was the charter granted to the City of New-York by Gov. Montgomery. He explains that “by this Charter are granted all the Islands near and round his Majesties Garrison here, the soil of the East River, as far as low water mark and extending in length to the utmost limits of the Island whereby his Majesties prerogative is thereby magnified. But it was stationed here under a necessity of becoming petitioners to the Corporation for a convenient place to careen or reft; for this Charter having granted the Corporation all the Islands as well near and round as before the Fort which lay commodious for the security and defence of it, in case of any eruptions, was as I conceive a lodging too great a power in them, in case of any necessity, and by so much of lessening of the King’s prerogative.” Cosby states that he was “surprised into an assent to this Act” of assembly confirming the charter, as the document was shown to him so soon after his arrival. He is having the charter, which consists of “a vast number of Skims of Parchment,” copied, and will send the copy to the lords. Meanwhile, he asks that the lords will take no action regarding the act, and the confirmation thereof, until he has seen the original. In this document he described the manner in which New York governours, in former times, derived private profit while in office.
An advertisement reads: "To be Run for, on the Course at Nov. York, the 8th of this Month, A Purse upwards of 41. value, by any Horse, Mare or Gelding carrying 12 Stone, and paying 5s. entrance, which entrance Money is to be given to the second Horse, unless ditto ditto 4s." Nov. 21, 1715. "The Course at New York" was probably the Bowery Road, there being no other special race-track of record at that time. See Nov. 21, 1716; but cf. Oct. 13, 1716, where it is evident the spectators were accommodated in a field.

It is resolved by the common council "that all the Great Guns which lie upon the Lots of Ground lately sold by this Corporation on the West Side of the Great Dock be forthwith Removed from thence into the Pasture belonging to the Fort," and a committee is appointed "to see the same performed with the leave of the Cap' General."—McC. C. vi, 201.
